Bear with me for a few moments, while I recall some of the disgrace and loss resulting from the false economy that did not permit us to keep apace with the times in matters military. In 1812 we suffered insult after insult to the flag, ship after ship was searched upon the high seas, and the declaration of war, that meant the maintenance of our national honor, was so long delayed, because of our being wholly unprepared for war, that the blush of shame mantled the cheek of many a patriot of that day. The war came at last; but how bitter the recollection of Hull's surrender, the capture of the capital by a force of but thirty-five hundred men, and the burning of the public buildings. Disasters continued, save upon the high seas, thanks to our bold privateersmen, and at last a peace was patched up that left the right of search an open question. The only bright spot in the history was the victory at New Orleans, won after the terms of peace had been made. It would have gone hard with us if the great Napoleon had not been giving Mother England so much to do that she did not have the time to look after us very closely. Says a Secretary of War of the United States, commenting some years after the war of 1812:

The disadvantages of inexperience in the officers and men without the means of immediate instruction was the fatal error at the commencement of the late war that cost us so much treasure and blood. The peace establishment which preceded it was very imperfectly organized, and did not admit of the necessary augmentation.

Senators, I suggest to you that our position to-day is the same. And now let General McClellan tell the story of the Mexican war and that of the rebellion. I quote from his article upon the Army of the United States, written in 1877:

When the Mexican war broke out the actual strength of the regular Army was about 5,300. The force with which General Taylor reached the Rio Grande was 3,000, and that with which he fought the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma only 2,100. There can be no doubt that if the strength of the Army had sufficed to enable him to move to the Rio Grande with 10,000 men the Mexicans would not have crossed the river and in all human probability the war would have been avoided. The cost of maintaining the 7,000 additional men during the whole period from the close of the war of 1812 to the commencement of the Mexican war would not have amounted to two-thirds of the direct expenses of the latter war, not taking into account the large cost of the Seminole and other Indian wars, or the heavy losses by disease and in battle or the indirect losses inseparable from all wars.

But the most instructive case of all is that of the civil war. We do not doubt that 15,000 regulars on the field of the first Manassas would have insured the complete rout of the raw confederates, and, in all probability, put an end to the war. They would certainly have enabled us to drive the confederate government out of Virginia and have cleared the eastern portion of the State as completely as the work was accomplished a little earlier in West Virginia. The cost of maintaining these 15,000 additional troops from the close of the Mexican war to the commencement of the war of secession would not have amounted to one-fiftieth part of the war debts of the General Government, the States, counties, and municipalities. Should we compare it with the total amount of direct and indirect expenditures by both parties to the war, the losses of the two sections in lives, in property destroyed, business ruined, and capital sunk, we should be at a loss to express the relation, so absurdly small would be the relative cost of those additional troops.

In the face of these lessons of the past shall we continue a false economy so destructive of the best material of the country? Pursuing the same subject to its legitimate conclusion General McClellan says:

If it be true that it is the duty of every government to prepare in time of peace the means adequate to defend its territory and its people, the statesmanlike method of proceeding is clear enough. Weighing the probabilities of the future in the light of the experience of the past, with due regard to the changes produced by them, the proper strength of the Army should be determined; and once fixed it should not be changed without good and sufficient cause. Then it should be so organized, posted, and administered as to insure the greatest possible efficiency in the performance of its duties and in its instruction, while economy is insisted upon to the greatest extent consistent with that efficiency. If an army is necessary at all, it should, like any other necessary thing, be made in every respect efficient; and there is no true economy, but, on the contrary, real extravagance, in the policy of practicing ill-judged parsimony either by reducing the Army below the requisite force or crippling its instruction and usefulness to save a few dollars.

But we are told international disputes are to be settled hereafter not by the arbitrament of arms but by peace congresses. God speed the time when this shall be so, but it will not be in our day or generation. I do not believe, with Hobbes, that war is the natural state of man, or, with Von Moltke, that the world would stagnate without it; but I do believe that while so many domestic ills are breeding discontent with the existing, while American citizens' rights abroad are trampled upon, while our interests political and commercial continue to clash with those of the other nations of the earth that support large armies, grim-visaged war is a necessity that must and will come. To quote from a sagacious observer, whose able article upon the military necessities of the United States is one of the best contributions to our stock of practical knowledge:

The epoch of peace and prosperity with which our land is now blessed can not last forever. Until human nature shall rise above its present weaknesses the selfish aggressions of one people will occasionally clash against the interests of another; the policies of different nations will come into collision and the sword will be used to cut the knot diplomacy can not untie. However peaceable and non-aggressive a nation may be, circumstances may present it with the choice of several evils of which war will be the least.—Lieut. Arthur L. Wagner, U. S. A., in prize essay of 1884.

The apathy of Congress upon the grave questions of increasing the efficiency of the Army and Navy and the bettering, or rather the creating, of seacoast defenses, is to me inexplicable. Repeated and oft-repeated recommendations from the Presidents of the United States, from experienced Secretaries of War and Navy, and warning words from the veterans who led our hosts to victory during the late war, all fall unheeded upon ears usually quick to hear that which may prove advantageous to the country we love. The parting words of the last General of the Army before he passed into retirement were:

I can not help pleading to my countrymen at every opportunity to cherish all that is manly and noble in the military profession, because peace is enervating and no man is wise enough to foretell when soldiers may be in demand again.

The signs of the times are that they will very soon be in demand. They are now called for on our southwestern boundary, where the murderous Apache lies in ambush among the rocks or sweeps from his mountain hiding-place to murder the settler. The telegrams from New Mexico speak of the restlessness of many other bands of Indians, notably the Navajos, thousands of whom have grown to manhood since the last outbreak and keenly desire to rival the deeds of bravery recited by the older warriors about the nightly dance-fires. Prosperous Southwestern Kansas lives in hourly dread of an outbreak among the wild tribes just over the border. Upon the northern boundary of the fair State that I have the honor in part to represent upon this floor are nearly 25,000 of the savage Sioux Nation, the stalwart and sinewy braves, armed to a man with the deadly Winchester. Within a short time I visited them at a few places on the 34,000 square miles devoted to their abuse rather than use.

I rejoiced to see some evidences of advancing civilization, and have hope for their future; but as I heard them, in the council-room by day and in the wild dance at night, recounting their deeds of war, boast of the murderous part taken at the Custer and other massacres, saw the envious admiration gleaming from the faces of the listening young bucks, and the evidences of jealousy and desire for leadership on the part of contending chiefs, I feared for the safety of the white men and women who are so rapidly building charming villages and making thrifty farm-homes throughout all that wonderfully beautiful New West. I am not one of those who feel hatred for the Indian. With the vast majority of my fellow-citizens of Nebraska I would accord to him more than his rights; would protect him from all evils, including himself as the greatest of all; would educate, civilize, Christianize him into capable citizenship; but it will take years, if not generations, to change the Indian nature, and while it exists these periodic outbreaks, with their attendant indescribable horrors of homes desolated, children captured or brained, men tortured and killed, and mothers and wives worse than murdered will occur. It is the clear duty of the Government to meet them by reaching the highest point of efficiency for the small Army that must stand between the frontier citizen and the disaster to be feared above all others.

But there be other threatening dangers worthy consideration. Far removed from the thickly-settled East, almost isolated in their fertile mountain valleys, live a wealthy people claiming to owe a higher allegiance than to the Government of the United States—living in open defiance of the laws of the country, hating our institutions, defying the officials appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and visiting vile vengeance upon the heads of those officers who try to obey their oaths and sustain the laws. The attitude of the Mormon Church, with its leaders preaching defiance and its 25,000 of arms-bearing adult males ready to follow where these apostles of crime may lead, is a constant threat and standing menace to the peace of the nation. Nothing but fear on their part of the final outcome prevents the outbreak, and what man can predict the moment when religious fanaticism will cause them to forget the fear. This great nation of Christian people would soon crush the rebellion, but it would save much blood and great treasure if its small Army was made more efficient. There are other elements threatening internal disturbance, but we can only glance at them in passing to the consideration of the bill before us. The riots in New York, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and other places within the last few years are the simple mutterings of a discontented condition liable to break out in widespread destruction and anarchy. The socialists and nihilists have planted their seed in what they consider rich soil in this land of free speech. I believe the laborers of the Republic, uniting as they are for the consideration of evils under which they suffer, will not be deceived by these foul conspirators. Ultimately existing wrongs will be righted, and the millions of toilers, who are of the country's best citizenship, industrious, intelligent, the fathers of its families and the owners of its homes, who have the greatest stake in the welfare of the Republic, will see to it that the needed reforms are peaceably wrought out within the law and not in defiance of it. But before the desired end is reached there will be much of conflict with the devils incarnate, whose synonym for reformation is destruction.

Time will not permit me to speak of complications that may arise with foreign nations. Sufficient is it simply to refer to our position with reference to the Isthmian canal; the importance of our maintaining a complete neutrality in interoceanic communication across the narrow neck of land connecting the great American continent; the necessity that Cuba, by passing from the hand of Spain, should not be added to the Bermudas and Jamaica, as another threat at our Atlantic seaboard by the great power that constitutes our chief rival; the investment of fifty millions of money by our citizens in nearly 2,000 miles of railway in the Republic of Mexico, inviting lawless confiscation and interference with our commercial rights by our next neighbor; complications likely to arise from interference by European powers with the rights of our adopted citizens visiting their old homes, and the disputes attendant upon the sharp struggle with all competing nations as we seek markets abroad for the surplus products of our vast territory—these and others that will suggest themselves to you are the fertile causes that may at any time "cry havoc, and let slip the dogs of war."

It was undoubtedly such considerations as these that prompted the Chief Executive in his annual message to Congress and the leaders of both political parties to urge in forcible language the bettering of the Army, the building of seacoast defenses, the securing of the necessary plant to forge and weld the mighty guns needed to pierce the armored sides of the modern steelclads, and the construction of the ships required to protect our seaboard cities, save our commerce, and carry the American flag victoriously over all oceans. Many bills to bring about these desirable results have been introduced into both Houses during this session. I will not take the time to refer to them or to speak of the many meritorious schemes presented to aid in bringing the cavalry and artillery arms of the service to a point approaching that of perfection.

This bill is designed to make more efficient the infantry of the Army of the United States, Mr. President. By the training and experience that come from commanding a regiment of infantry during the last war I feel better qualified to speak of that branch than of the others. The days of my early manhood were given to the study of its tactics, and I hope the day may never come when I shall cease to be interested in and to love it. In numbers, in the varied duties required at its hands, in the important part to be played by it in time of war, the infantry is the main arm of the service. Says Colonel Home, of the British army, in his much-esteemed work on modern tactics:

In armies, infantry undoubtedly takes the lead, and to its action that of the other arms must be subordinated. It is the main-stay and backbone of all, whether it be viewed in the light of numbers or its action upon the field of battle. Its fire is more deadly than that of artillery; its action is sure, while that of cavalry is fitful; upon it the brunt of the battle falls; it suffers more in action and more on the line of march, and on its tactics the whole superstructure of military operations must be built.

The following is an interesting table in this connection, showing the loss in the various arms of the service, during the Franco-Prussian war, of the German army, the percentage given being the loss of the whole force:

	Officers.	Men.	Per cent.
Infantry	4,458	112,029	17.6
Cavalry	279	4,342	6.3
Artillery	422	5,597	6.5

Similar statistics of the armies engaged during our late war would undoubtedly show a much stronger comparative loss in the infantry arm.

And yet while the other arms of the service have been materially aided toward perfection of organization during the last twenty years the infantry branch has been permitted to stand still, and to-day is as far behind in tactical organization as though it was armed with the flint-lock musket, carrying the buck-and-ball cartridge instead of the Springfield breech-loader with its deadly missile. It retains the ten-company single-battalion organization that seems to have been adopted in 1821, and which would bring death, defeat, and disaster to our arms in any field engagement upon which we would enter, meeting, as we would, the changed conditions of tactics and armament of armies framed upon modern and approved methods.

The bill under consideration proposes to change from the single battalion, now composing a regiment, to a regimental line composed of three battalions. Before passing to the tactical effect of this change, the causes that produced it, and the authority for it, let us investigate as to the present make-up of armies proper for us to look upon as models. In the very nature of things, a nation like ours, maintaining a small and comparatively inexpensive army during times of peace, must be an imitator and copy from powers expending largely in costly experiments. It has ever been so. In 1775 Col. Timothy Pickering, of Massachusetts, afterward distinguished in the military and civil history of the United States, compiled a "plan and discipline for the militia," which gave such of the British battalion movements as were adapted to American service.

When Baron Steuben came to this country and began to drill the Continental troops he published, in 1782, his "Rules of Discipline," which were almost literally translated from the drill and discipline which had been introduced by Frederick the Great. In March, 1789, Congress approved and established this system of tactics, which remained in use until the resolution was repealed in 1820. The tactics in use since then, whether of Scott, Hardee, or Upton, have all been adapted from the German and French systems. The existing and convincing fact is that not a single European power retains the single-battalion organization of infantry regiments, all having abandoned it years ago as not adapted to a state of war, and therefore not fit to be maintained in time of peace.

Nearly ten years ago the United States sent efficient officers, representing the three great branches of its army—General Emery Upton, Maj. George A. Forsyth, and Capt. J. P. Sanger—to visit Europe and Asia and report, after full investigation, what changes should be made in our Army to modernize and perfect it. The very valuable report of these gentlemen was made to Congress and published to the world in 1877, and the first and seemingly the most important recommendation made by them was that we should change to the three-battalion organization for infantry as we had already done for the cavalry and artillery. They did this because they found the following to be the condition of the advanced nations abroad, and I quote from the report known as "Upton's Armies of Asia and Europe:"

The infantry of the German Empire consists in time of peace of one hundred and forty-eight regiments of three battalions each. (Page 192.)

The influence of the Franco-Prussian war in producing modification in military organization is nowhere more perceptible than in the French infantry. Four companies were substituted for six in the composition of a battalion, and a regiment was ordered to be made of four battalions. Since that time the three-battalion organization has been adopted by France. (Page 226.)

In Russia the regiments of the three divisions of the guard and the six divisions of the army of the Caucasus have four battalions of four companies each. All other regiments have three battalions of five companies each. (Page 149.)

The Austrian infantry is organized into regiments composed of five field battalions of four companies each and one depot battalion of five companies. In case of war the six battalions are organized into two regiments of three battalions each, the fifth company of the depot battalion remaining as a common depot for both regiments. (Page 162.)

In Italy a battalion consists of four companies and a regiment of three battalions and a depot. The riflemen regiments are composed of four battalions each. (Page 102.)

How completely the army of Japan has been Europeanized may be inferred from the organization of the infantry. A regiment consists of three battalions of four companies each. (Page 9.)

The infantry regiments of England are composed of eight companies, forming two battalions of four companies each. Even this organization, so much better than ours, is severely condemned by her own military critics, notably by the most eminent general, Sir Lumley Graham, who insists that the Prussian three-battalion formation is much better. General Upton condemns it in the following terms:

The adherence of England to a military system inherited from the last century can only be explained by her insular position and the security from invasion afforded by a powerful navy. * * * Should England assail any of her formidable neighbors, we may safely anticipate that the war will be followed either by a speedy reorganization of her army or by the total abandonment of the policy of armed intervention in foreign affairs. (Pages 268, 269.)

I might continue to quote and show conclusively that every warlike power has advanced beyond us and is ready to meet improved arms with improved organization.

But how stands the other side? What nations cling to the dangerous, obsolete, single-battalion formation? When our commission returned from abroad it declared that it knew no worse army than that of Persia; and as to another Eastern nation, it said:

The decline in military organization from India to Persia is scarcely less marked than from Japan to China. * * * The Chinese army is as backward in its tactics as in its armament. * * * Its officers have not the slightest appreciation of the amount of instruction required for troops in modern war, nor do they possess any knowledge of the methods of arranging and conducting troops in battle. * * * The instruction witnessed at Pekin was a mere burlesque of infantry drill. * * * It is the only country where the profession of arms is not honored. For ages a proverb to the effect that "as you would not use good iron to make a nail, so you would not use a good man to make a soldier," has hung like a millstone about the necks of the officers and soldiers of the Chinese army.

The infantry organizations of these two uncivilized pagan nations, whose armies are laughed at by the world, is, that regiments shall be composed of a single battalion of ten companies, with each company of one hundred men commanded by one captain and two subalterns. This is the present formation of the United States infantry, and to the shame of the Congress be it said that because it will not do its duty, as clearly enjoined by the Constitution, this great Republic stands, so far as the formation of its chief military arm is concerned, with the countries I have last described—Persia, China, and the United States. We are in proud company, truly. Senators, it is for us as one branch of Congress to say whether we will remain there.

This bill brings nothing new for your consideration. Its provisions, have been desired by General Grant. Generals Sherman and Sheridan have often urged it. Let me show you how much it has been sought for by the generals of our armies and how often recommended by Secretaries of War. In General Sherman's memoirs, published in 1875, referring to the organization of the Army during the war, he says:

To the new regiments of infantry was given an organization differing from any that had heretofore prevailed in this country—of three battalions of eight companies each; but at no time did more than one of these regiments attain its full standard; nor in the vast army of volunteers that was raised during the war were any of the regiments of infantry formed on the three-battalion system, but these were universally single battalions of ten companies; so that on the reorganization of the regular Army at the close of the war Congress adopted the form of twelve companies for the regiments of cavalry and artillery, and that of ten companies for the infantry, which is the present standard.

Inasmuch as the regular Army will naturally form the standard of organization for any increase or for new regiments of volunteers, it becomes important to study this subject in the light of past experience and to select that form which is best for peace as well as war. A cavalry regiment is now composed of twelve companies, usually divided into six squadrons of two companies each or, better, subdivided into three battalions of four companies each. This is an excellent form, easily admitting of subdivision as well as union into larger masses.

A single battalion of four companies, with a field officer, will comprise a good body for a garrison, for a separate expedition, or for a detachment; and in war three regiments would compose a good brigade, three brigades a division, and three divisions a strong cavalry corps, such as was formed and fought by Generals Sheridan and Wilson during the war.

In the artillery arm the officers differ widely in their opinion of the true organization. A single company forms a battery, and habitually each battery acts separately, though sometimes several are united or "massed," but these always act in concert with cavalry or infantry. Nevertheless, the regimental organization for artillery has always been maintained in this country for classification and promotion. Twelve companies compose a regiment, and though probably no colonel ever commanded his full regiment in the form of twelve batteries, yet in peace they occupy our heavy seacoast forts or act as infantry; then the regimental organization is both necessary and convenient. But the infantry composes the great mass of all armies, and the true form of the regiment or unit has been the subject of infinite discussion, and, as I have stated, during the civil war the regiment was a single battalion of ten companies. In olden times the regiment was composed of eight-battalion companies and two flank companies. The first and tenth companies were armed with rifles and were styled and used as "skirmishers," but during the war they were never used exclusively for that special purpose, and in fact no distinction existed between them and the other eight companies.

The ten-company organization is awkward in practice, and I am satisfied that the infantry regiment should have the same identical organization as exists for the cavalry and artillery, namely, twelve companies, so as to be susceptible of division into three battalions of four companies each. These companies should habitually be about one hundred men strong, giving twelve hundred to a regiment, which in practice would settle down to about one thousand men. Three such regiments would compose a brigade, three brigades a division, and three divisions a corps. Then by allowing to an infantry corps a brigade of cavalry and six batteries of field artillery, we would have an efficient corps d'armée of thirty thousand men, whose organization would be simple and most efficient, and whose strength should never be allowed to fall below twenty-five thousand men.

In 1869, when General Sherman was in command of the Army, he made similar recommendations to the Secretary of War, who approved the same. In 1880 and again in 1882 attention was called to the matter. In 1883 the general says:

On the 8th of February, 1884, I will attain the limit of age fixed by Congress for military service in the Army, and I purposely asked of the President the privilege of anticipating this date to enable my successor to make such recommendations as he may deem necessary; but before leaving I beg to record an expression of opinion that it will be found wise to provide a common organization for all arms of the service, namely:

That each regiment of infantry be composed of twelve companies, the same as now with the artillery and cavalry, making three battalions, each of four companies, in time of peace and of eight in time of war; that each company shall have a hundred men; and that in time of peace two of these battalions (eight companies) shall be maintained on a perfect war footing, while the other battalion (four companies) may be a mere skeleton, with its complement of officers, and used as a nucleus for recruits. In this battalion can be placed the officers and soldiers invalided by hard service or sickness, and such as are not weaned of home influence or family importunity.

Were such an organization (thus briefly sketched, but more elaborately described in former reports) to be sanctioned by Congress, the military peace establishment could, I believe, be maintained on the present estimates, and would possess the inestimable advantage of admitting of an increase without "disorder or confusion" to 6,000 artillery, 12,000 cavalry, and 30,000 infantry by the mere scratch of a pen and the magic wand of money; and afterward, by doubling the enlisted strength of each company, without the further addition of a single officer, we should have the respectable force of 96,000 men, a force large enough for any probable necessity during the remainder of this century.

The militia and volunteers of the States would soon follow suit, and we should have throughout the country these small handy battalions of four companies, instead of the large cumbersome regiments of ten companies—a bad tactical unit, and in practice always scattered."

As to this the Secretary of War, Mr. Lincoln, says:

The report of the General of the Army has a special interest in being the last annual report that General Sherman will make. At his own request he has been relieved from the command of the Army, preparatory to his retirement from active service under the act of 1882. He has, therefore, thought it best to refrain from making any new recommendations in his report, leaving that duty to his successor in the command of the Army, Lieutenant-General Sheridan. He, however, calls attention to and renews a former recommendation that a new organization be adopted for the regiments of infantry, so that each shall be composed of twelve companies, making three battalions of four companies each, each company having one hundred men; and that in time of peace two of these battalions shall be maintained on a perfect war footing, while the other battalion may be a mere skeleton, with its complement of officers, and be used as a nucleus for recruits. The great advantage of this change, as suggested by the general, is the important one of being able to put a large and effective force in the field, on short notice, by merely enlisting a sufficient number of additional private soldiers, the officers and organization being always ready to receive them.

In 1884 General Sheridan, being in command of the Army, says:

Were I called upon to recommend any change whatever, it would be simply to make a uniform organization for the three arms of the service by adding two companies and the corresponding majors to each regiment of infantry.

And in this the Secretary of War again concurs. In his report for 1885 he again says he would "increase the number of men in the companies and add two more companies and two majors to each regiment of infantry;" and Secretary Endicott hopes it may be done and "the three arms of the service be made uniform."

Ignoring, however, these well-considered recommendations, and casting aside "the European intelligence that discards and the Oriental obtuseness that retains" the old-time ten-company battalion, let us examine the case upon its merits. General Graham, than whom there is no better authority, says:

The formation of infantry for battle must be such as to favor to the utmost the effect of its own fire and to minimize the damage done by that of the enemy.

So, first considering the change in arms since the late war, let us then pass to the change in line of battle that must follow to enable the infantry, the bone and sinew of the Army, to be effectively used on the field of battle.

In a quarter of a century we have progressed from the muzzle-loading, smooth-bore musket to the breech-loading rifle. The muzzle-loader meant at most two, and usually one, shot a minute, with uncertainty of aim, execution at not exceeding 400 and no assurance of a death-dealing shot at over 200 yards. The breech-loader means firing six times a minute, with accuracy of aim, carrying the deadly missile 2,000 yards. The increase of effective range is therefore over five times; which means that if it would take an advancing line four minutes to pass over the shorter space of 400 yards it would take it twenty minutes to pass over the greater distance of 2,000 yards. Practically, however, it could not pass over the greater space at so rapid a gait, and it is safe to say that the power of the present arm for inflicting loss of life upon an advancing line is at least 10, and perhaps 20, to 1 in relation to the weapon used during the late war.

In the same tactical formation of infantry probably fifteen men would be killed where one was killed with the former fire-arm. Add to this the powerful machine guns now used, such as the Gatling and Hotchkiss, and the rate of death to the closed files of double rank would be terribly increased. This it is that makes the present single-battalion, double-rank formation a suicidal one and that has caused its abandonment in other civilized nations. For a line to live under these changed conditions means that it shall be a single line, with intervals or spaces between the men who are to receive attack or make assault. The length of line of the present one thousand men of a regiment, in double rank, without intervals, is about 300 yards, and in single rank 600 yards. Every regimental commander of our late war will appreciate the difficulty of commanding even this length of line. In the din of battle neither voice nor bugle-note can easily be heard. The noise of conflict has been greatly intensified by the introduction of the breech-loading repeating fire-arm.

Von Scherff, the great German military writer, referring to the Franco-Prussian war, says:

It was very difficult for officers to keep their men together, because of the noise of a close conflict between breech-loader and breech-loader.

Let the single line be lengthened by intervals between the files, as it must now be, and how powerless would any colonel be to control and command his regiment. He absolutely needs the three-battalion formation with a subordinate commander, a major, for each battalion. He can not even personally command one and supervise the action of the others, for with the battalions properly placed according to modern tactics, each in rear of the other, the first with its skirmishers and supporting lines and columns holding a front of 200 yards and a depth of 400, the second and third battalions in column with spaces of about 250 yards intervening, with a total depth (owing to the far-penetrating power of the modern arm) of about 1,000 yards—being about the depth of a division prepared for battle as it was formed in the three-line brigade organization during our war—the colonel commanding could not only not be heard, but in most cases he could not see his command. The lieutenant-colonel, as the title implies, is needed as the lieutenant or general assistant of the colonel, and the majors commanding battalions become an absolute necessity for successful warfare.

To sum up the tactical matter, the old line-of-battle formation used during our civil war "now belongs to the past as completely as the Macedonian phalanx, and the general who would use it would simply invite the murder of his army and sacrifice the cause of his country on the altar of imbecile conservatism." The present organization is objectionable in that it has no expansive power and must be totally changed in time of war, thus violating a familiar military maxim that "the plan of an army should be the same in time of peace as in time of war." The bill before us proposes a regiment in time of peace of twelve companies of fifty men each, comprising the three battalions so urgently needed. It would have its full complement of officers at the outbreak of war and would simply need the order of the Secretary of War to recruit its ranks to the maximum, and the force of six hundred would become twelve hundred men. A war footing would be reached promptly, without the delay incident to calling new battalions into life, and, as compared with the formation of new regiments, with great economy. This rapid expansion would permit the speedy crushing out of any hostile demonstration.

An important incident flowing from the passage of this bill is promotion to the infantry branch of the service. Fifty captains will be made majors, one hundred first lieutenants will be made captains, one hundred and fifty second lieutenants will be made first lieutenants, and two hundred second lieutenants would be commissioned, provided it is deemed best to fully officer the third battalion of each regiment. Since the reorganization of the Army, immediately after the war, promotion has been at a halt in the infantry branch, to its great injury. In the other arms, except as to lieutenants of artillery, it has been reasonably rapid. In the Staff, Engineer, and Ordnance Corps it has been quite so.

Every second lieutenant of engineers of 1861–'62 reached major's rank over ten years ago, and many graduates since the war in that corps are majors to-day. No fault can be found with this, but by reflection it acts injuriously upon the infantry, the officers of which, as one of them has observed, "have apparently received the tactical command 'Mark time! march!' which, while it simulates marching, admits of no progression." Promotion is needed to keep up a proper esprit de corps. It broadens an officer's experience and gives him an incentive to do good work. No business man would feel that he was doing right in keeping an efficient employé in the same grade for a quarter of a century. Advancing years mean increased family and other cares and greater responsibility. It has been well said by a naval officer, writing upon a subject akin to this:

The enforced continuance in subordinate stations can not fail to tell upon even the best men. The tendency of such a system is to make mere routine men, to substitute apathy and indolence for zeal and energy. * * * Officers who grow old in one grade and without promotion are but little encouraged to exercise their own powers of volition. They come to regard themselves as part of a machine. * * * Self-reliance, resolute action, readiness of resource, and the exercise of individual judgment are all trampled out by this stagnation.

There are lieutenants of infantry to-day who served during the war of rebellion who, under the existing circumstances, will consider themselves fortunate if on reaching the age of sixty-four they will be able to retire as captains. With children grown to manhood these officers, some of them grandfathers, hold a rank always associated with youth and its physical activity. I have one officer in mind, and I mention his case simply because he is a type of many, who served with distinction during all the late war; has been on the frontier ever since faithfully performing his duty; been in the Indian wars, and stands to-day beyond the number 200 on the list of captains. In but little over twenty years he will be retired with the bars and not the leaf or eagle upon his shoulders. This gallant officer is in the Slough of Despond. The passage of this bill will lift him out.

I would not urge this bill simply because of the incident of promotion, but the existing stagnation is so great that many bills are before Congress endeavoring to recognize that necessity alone, whereas this bill in accomplishing the proper construction of the physical machine of the Army pays attention also to that axiom of war that without promotion an army can not be effective.

A few words upon the cost incident to this change and I will leave the subject upon which I have been unnecessarily prolix. The cost of maintaining the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, is:

Pay of officers and enlisted men	$12,205,000
Rations of enlisted men	1,800,000
Clothing of enlisted men	1,250,000
	15,255,000

But little additional expenditure will bring about the great good to the country that I have endeavored to set forth to-day. Responding to my request, Lieutenant-General Sheridan has furnished me with a detailed statement of the total cost of adding the full complement of officers and the twenty-five hundred enlisted men needed to bring every company up to the full peace standard on the three-battalion formation. I give it in full:

Analysis and summary of the annual increase in pay of officers and pay, rations, and clothing allowance, of enlisted men under the provisions of the Manderson bill (S. 137).

OFFICERS.

Increase in pay of each officer promoted to higher grade:

Captains of over twenty years' service to majors	$920
First lieutenants of over twenty years' service to captains	420
First lieutenants of between fifteen and twenty years' service to captains	390
First lieutenants of between ten and fifteen years' service to captains	360
Second lieutenants of over twenty years' service to first lieutenants	140
Second lieutenants of between fifteen and twenty years' service to first lieutenants	130
Second lieutenants of between ten and fifteen years' service to first lieutenants	120
Second lieutenants of between five and ten years' service to first lieutenants	110
Second lieutenants of less than five years' service to first lieutenants	100

The annual pay of each of the newly-appointed second lieutenants would be $1,400.

All of the fifty captains who would be promoted to majors have served over twenty years; the total increase in their pay would then be $46,000.

Of the one hundred first lieutenants promoted to be captains seventy-two have over twenty years of service, twenty-three between fifteen and twenty years' service, and five between ten and fifteen years' service; the total increase in their pay would then be $41,010.

Of the one hundred and fifty second lieutenants promoted to be first lieutenants, two have over twenty years of service, eight between fifteen and twenty years, forty-six between ten and fifteen years, eighty-seven between five and ten years, and seven less than five years of service; the total increase in their pay would then be $17,110.

The grand total or increase of pay for the officers promoted would then be $104,120. Two hundred second lieutenants would be added to the Army; their pay would be $280,000. The aggregate of these two last sums, or $384,120, expresses the total annual increase chargeable to officers' pay as affected by the bill.

ENLISTED MEN.

Each company of infantry as constituted by law contains one first sergeant, four sergeants, four corporals, two artificers, two musicians, one wagoner, and thirty-six privates; their pay and allowances are given in the following table:

	Monthly pay.	Clothing.*
First sergeant	$22 00	$39 13
Sergeant	17 00	38 25
Corporal	15 00	37 45
Artificer	15 00	35 70
Musician	13 00	36 65
Wagoner	14 00	35 70
Private	13 00	35 70

*Average annual value of allowance.

NOTE.—Daily value of rations averages 20 cents for each non-commissioned officer and private.

As a matter of fact many infantry companies do not contain more than forty instead of fifty men, as stated in the organization given above; the computation as to the cost of maintenance of a company is therefore, in the following table, given upon the basis of fifty and also of forty enlisted men for one year:

	Pay.	Rations.	Clothing.	Total.
One company, fifty men	$8,256	$3,520	$1,807 53	$13,583.53
Fifty companies, fifty men	412,800	176,000	90,376 50	679,176 50
One company, forty men	6,696	2,816	1,450 53	10,962 53
Fifty companies, forty men	334,800	140,800	72,526 50	548,126 50

The total cost for officers and fifty companies, of fifty men each, would then be $1,063,296.50.

If the companies were of only forty men each it would be $932,246.50.

Thus an expenditure of $1,000,000 would place us where we should be as to the infantry arm of the United States Army. The actual cost of the full complement would be less, in fact. The graduating class at the West Point Academy this year is declared to be the largest in number and the highest in efficiency that that institution has ever graduated. There will be seventy-eight young men, fairly grounded in the science of war, at great expense to the Government, to be placed where they can do their country some service. There will be but thirty-nine vacancies for them to fill, but the other thirty-nine will undoubtedly be added to the Army as additional lieutenants. The pay of these, amounting to nearly $110,000, should be deducted, thus leaving the amount $900,000. Still further reductions might be made in the estimate. If the companies are left at forty men each the cost is $932,000. Suppose it should be deemed advisable to promote but one hundred second lieutenants to be first lieutenants and commission but one hundred second lieutenants, leaving the two additional companies without that subaltern officer, the saving would be about $140,000, thus obtaining a fair measure of improvement at an increase of $800,000 per annum.

We should not confound parsimony with economy. True economy consists not in penurious expenditures, but in exercising care that one gets the full value of money expended. Spending as we do $15,000,000 annually to maintain our Army, we do not get the worth of our money; for the obsolete organization I have described makes it inefficient, a broken staff to lean upon in the hour of danger. Let us spend $1,000,000 more, and we will get the worth of the entire amount expended, and the first war will show the economical wisdom of having thus prepared for it. An army officer has given me a homely but apt illustration that I will present.

Let us suppose that a frontiersman needs a rifle to protect himself from savage foes. We will say that for $15 he can get one of old model, with defective mechanism, which at the critical moment may miss fire. For $16 he can get a rifle of approved pattern, true to its aim and sure to deal death to any assailant. To buy the former would be to save a dollar and risk destruction, but should the frontiersman make such a choice his mistaken economy would be characterized as the grossest stupidity. I need not make the application. Do not let us be so stupid, but pursue the course that has every military authority worthy of consideration to support it and none against it.

Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882, as passed by the Senate, be printed as passed. It was printed in the RECORD as passed, but I am applied to, as other gentlemen are, for copies. Therefore, I move that the bill be printed for the use of the Senate as it was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MORGAN in the chair). The Senator from Vermont moves that Senate bill No. 10 be printed for the use of the Senate as it was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

COIN DUTIES ON IMPORTED GOODS.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, some days ago I gave notice that when the Utah bill was disposed of I should call up the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] for the purpose of addressing the Senate. It is but a few minutes before 2 o'clock, when the regular order will be taken up, and if it is in order now, I will move that the regular order be temporarily laid aside so as not to lose its place.

Mr. HARRIS. Ask unanimous consent.

Mr. PUGH. Well, I ask unanimous consent that the regular order be laid aside and that the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would remark that the regular order at this time is the bill which was under consideration in the morning hour on Friday, the bill (S. 506) for the relief of Emerson Etheridge and William B. Stokes. Does the motion apply to that?

Mr. PUGH. Yes; I move to lay that aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that Senate bill 506 be laid aside for the purpose of enabling him to submit some remarks on the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky which he proposes to submit for the consideration of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The same order will be regarded as applying to the unfinished business coming up at 2 o'clock, the judicial salary bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution submitted by Mr. BECK December 18, 1885:

Whereas the laws of the United States require that all duties on imported goods shall be paid in coin; and

Whereas it is provided by section 3694 of the Revised Statutes that "the coin paid for duties on imported goods shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows: First, to the payment, in coin, of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States; second, to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time direct; third, the residue to be paid into the Treasury:"

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire whether the laws above stated now are, or have heretofore, been obeyed; and if they have not, to report by bill, or otherwise, such measures as will secure their enforcement.

Mr. PUGH proceeded to address the Senate. Having spoken nearly two hours,

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the consent of the Senator from Alabama, I will move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PUGH. I give way.

Mr. VANCE. I give notice that at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Alabama to-morrow I shall ask for the continuation of the consideration of the pending resolution, in order that I may submit a few remarks on the subject.

JUDICIAL SALARIES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I first call for the regular order that it may be the unfinished business to-morrow, the judicial salary bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and thirty-seven minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 11, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, January 7.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of so much of the Journal as refers to the introduction of bills be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk then resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal, which was approved.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. House bill 596 was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims. I move to have it referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It has been considered by that committee in two preceding Congresses and favorably reported.

The SPEAKER. If the reference made be erroneous the Chair has the power to correct it and will do so.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] who introduced that bill?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It was introduced by me in this Congress.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House:

CLERK'S OFFICE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 7, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a list of papers on file in the Clerk's office of the House of Representatives in relation to contested-election cases in the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress, to wit:

F. T. Campbell vs. J. B. Weaver, from the State of Iowa.

Frank H. Hurd vs. Jacob Romeis, from the State of Ohio.

Merideth H. Kidd vs. George W. Steele, from the State of Indiana.
Alexander M. McKay vs. Barclay Henley, James A. Loutitt, Jos. M. McKenna, Charles N. Felton, W. W. Morrow, and H. H. Markham, from the State of California.
Montague R. Leverson and Archibald McGreer vs. Charles N. Felton and H. H. Markham, from the State of California.
George B. Merriam vs. Barclay Henley, from the State of California.
James Patterson vs. W. W. Morrow, from the State of California.
And a protest of citizens of California against the swearing in of Messrs. Henley, Loutitt, McKenna, Morrow, Felton, and Markham as Representatives in Congress from California.

Very respectfully,

JOHN B. CLARK, JR.,
Clerk of House of Representatives.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the papers referred to in the communication just read will be referred to the Committee on Elections.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

REPORT OF VISITORS OF THE UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the report of the Board of Visitors of the United States Military Academy; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. LAIRD, by unanimous consent, obtained indefinite leave of absence, on account of the death of his mother.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON THE POST-OFFICE AND POST-ROADS.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts make the following report:

That your committee, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. DOCKERY, of January 5, 1886, to wit: "That the clerkship of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be, and the same is hereby, declared an annual clerkship, with compensation at $2,000 per annum, and that the Clerk of the House is hereby authorized and directed to pay the clerk of said committee out of the contingent fund for the present session compensation at the above rate," respectfully report that they are of the opinion that said committee should have an annual clerk, but such action can not be had by resolution of the House. We, therefore, recommend a reference of said resolution to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to provide for an annual clerk to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads for the next fiscal year, in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, at the rate of $2,000 per annum. We further recommend the adoption of the following resolution as a substitute:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be allowed a clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until June 30, 1886, at the rate of $2,000 per annum."

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think this is a privileged report. As the Chair understands it, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads has now, under the law, no annual clerk. This resolution proposes to instruct the Committee on Appropriations to provide for an annual clerk for that committee, and then——

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, there is no objection on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to the instruction; but it is proper for me to say that, if my memory serves me, the session clerk to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads is provided for at $6 per day, which up to the end of this session would be a higher rate of compensation than $2,000 per annum.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I am aware that if there is any objection to the consideration of the resolution now——

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to ask whether there is objection. If there be no objection the resolution will be considered.

Mr. CANNON. If the committee represented by my colleague [Mr. ADAMS] sees proper to report a joint resolution giving the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads an annual clerk at $2,000 a year, I am content that the House should consider such a joint resolution and pass it; but under our new rules, it occurs to me, a reference of a resolution of this kind to the Committee on Appropriations is hardly proper.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is not to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations but to pass a resolution instructing that committee.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the better way.

Mr. CANNON. Why not make it a joint resolution and let the House pass it? The Senate will no doubt do the same thing.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not think we ought to instruct that committee absolutely; let them have discretion to consider the question.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, the clerkships of all these different committees ought to be annual. As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has suggested, these clerks now get very good pay for a long session under the per diem arrangement; but at the short session of only three months it does not pay a clerk to come here and serve at the per diem compensation. There is no good reason which can justify the distinction made between the different officers of this House, such as messengers and committee clerks. They ought all be on the annual roll; and I hope this resolution will be so amended as to instruct the Committee on Appropriations to make all the committee clerkships of this House annual.

Mr. RANDALL. I should object to that.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] will withdraw the objection he has interposed. The course now suggested is that which has been pursued by the House heretofore in creating annual clerkships. Such action is usually in the form of a resolution adopted by the House directing the Committee on Appropriations to provide for an annual clerkship in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not want the matter referred to the Committee on Appropriations in such a shape that the committee will have no discretion, but must make merely a formal report in accordance with instructions.

Mr. DOCKERY. This has already been considered by a committee.

Mr. REAGAN. I am aware of that; but it is proposed now to send it to the Committee on Appropriations, and I do not propose to withhold from that committee the right to investigate the question.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is proposed to determine the question now by the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has frequently decided heretofore that to entitle the report of a committee to be treated as privileged the whole matter of the report must be privileged; otherwise, it would be in the power of any committee having the right to make privileged reports to secure advantage for other matters than those which are privileged under the rules of the House.

The first resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts is a resolution of instruction to the Committee on Appropriations, which the Chair thinks is not a privileged report under any rule of the House. The last resolution, providing for payment out of the contingent fund of the House, might properly be considered a privileged matter.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the gentleman from Illinois asked unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state that request, having first decided the question of order. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that both these resolutions be considered by the House at the present time. Is there objection?

Mr. RANDALL. If this matter be brought before the House in that form it will be open to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. RANDALL. And in view of the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] that all the committee clerks should be made annual, an amendment of that character might be presented. Now, while I think the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads ought to have an annual clerk, and am perfectly ready to vote for that proposition, yet if we are to open the door to having every committee allowed an annual clerk, I should be inclined to object.

Mr. REAGAN. If this matter is now open for discussion, I desire to say——

The SPEAKER. It is not now open for debate.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope, if consent be given for the consideration of this matter, the gentleman from Illinois will call the previous question.

Mr. REAGAN. If we wish to consult the interests of individuls and pay them for work they do not perform, we can do that by making the appointment of these committee clerks annual. If we wish to consult public economy, we shall pay them only for the time they serve, and not make their salaries annual.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this report of the Committee on Accounts? The Chair hears none, and it is before the House.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The importance of considering this resolusion now arises from the fact that it will facilitate the action of the Committee on Accounts on the general scheme of committee clerkships. I am justified, I think, in demanding the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions embodied in the report, unless a separate vote be called for. The Clerk will report the resolutions again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads be allowed a clerk, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, until June 30, 1886, at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. There was no other resolution, Mr. Speaker, only a recommendation of the Committee on Accounts that the report be referred to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions.

The SPEAKER. The question is then on the adoption of the report, which recommends the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations with the instructions which have already been read.

The question was decided in the affirmative, there being—ayes 111, noes 4.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. BARKSDALE, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution: "Resolved, That there be printed —— thousand copies of the President's last annual message for the use of the House," have recommended that the resolution be amended by filling the blank with "twenty-five," so as to make the number of copies twenty-five thousand. The estimated cost is $612.50.

The amendment proposed by the Committee on Printing was agreed to; and the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SCOTT. I move by unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the bill (H. R. 1994) for the relief of the International Navigation Company, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, be referred to the Select Committee on Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, where it properly belongs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be so referred.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the Chair will proceed to call the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to appropriate committees. Under this call joint resolutions and memorials from State and Territorial Legislatures will be in order; also resolutions calling for information from the heads of Departments.

ALIENS PROHIBITED FROM ACQUIRING TITLE TO LANDS.

Mr. OATES introduced a bill (H. R. 3183) to prohibit aliens from acquiring title to or owning lands within the United States of America; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ENTRY OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. OATES also introduced a bill (H. R. 3184) to repeal sections 3480 and 4716 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

BREACH OF CONTRACTS.

Mr. OATES also introduced a bill (H. R. 3185) to require the circuit courts and the Supreme Court of the United States to decide all cases predicated upon contracts for the breach thereof coming within their respective jurisdiction according to the law of the State or place where the contract was made or to be performed; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

NEW ORLEANS, BATON ROUGE AND VICKSBURG RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. OATES also introduced a bill (H. R. 3186) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

LIMITATION OF SPEECHES.

Mr. OATES also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That no member shall occupy more than thirty minutes in debate on any question in the House or in committee, except that the member reporting the measure under consideration may have also thirty minutes to close where general debate has been had thereon; and no member shall after the recognition of the Speaker, for the purpose of debate, yield any part of his time to more than one other member.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. OATES also submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That section 1 of Rule XV be so amended as to read as follows:

"1. Upon every roll-call the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, then the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting on first call, except such as are paired or absent by leave of the House; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair."

GIRARD AND MOBILE RAILROAD.

Mr. HERBERT introduced a bill (H. R. 3187) to declare forfeited a grant of land in aid of the Girard and Mobile Railroad in Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. SARAH P. WATSON.

Mr. HERBERT also introduced a bill (H. R. 3188) for the relief of Mrs. Sarah P. Watson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BONDS OF EXECUTORS.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, also introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 72) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I should like by unanimous consent to have that joint resolution referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SPRINGER. I must object if it involves money payment from the Treasury.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. I think the gentleman will withdraw his objection when he is informed that the resolution is merely supplementary to the act passed in 1875 providing for the settlement of these accounts. That act originated with the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Does it provide for the settlement of these accounts and allowances merely?

Mr. JONES, of Alabama. It simply authorizes the Secretary of War and Attorney-General to adjust these accounts.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection if it does not involve money payment from the Treasury.

The joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

SILVER CERTIFICATES.

Mr. TOWNSHEND introduced a bill (H. R. 3273) providing for the issue by the United States Treasury of silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars each; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, does not that bill properly go to the Committee on Banking and Currency?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair). The bill will be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. DINGLEY. Should not that bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency? It does not refer to coinage, but to the issue of currency.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is an amendment to the act remonetizing silver, which bill emanated from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. It has been the custom of the House heretofore to refer bills relating to silver certificates and to silver to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. BLAND. That question was raised and decided at the last session of Congress. A bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency for the recoinage of trade-dollars and for the issue of silver certificates, but that bill was taken from the Committee on Banking and Currency and referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. Another measure was also referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, providing for the issue of silver certificates—no other matter being in the bill save that—and that measure was placed in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. It was reported back from that committee and voted on. It has been the practice of that committee to take jurisdiction of questions pertaining to silver and silver certificates and gold and gold certificates. The Committee on Banking and Currency has nothing to do with the matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This debate is not in order under the rules, which provide that bills must be referred without debate. The gentleman introducing the bill moved its reference to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and it seemed to the Chair that would be the proper reference. However, a motion will be entertained for reference to any other committee.

Mr. DINGLEY. I am not particular about its reference.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

COMMANDANT OF NAVY-YARD, NORFOLK, VA.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I present a resolution, which I ask may be reported in full.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to this House such information as he possesses concerning the truth or falsity of certain statements which have appeared in the public prints, as follows:

First. That the commandant at the United States navy-yard at Norfolk, Va., has caused the honorable inscriptions heretofore borne upon the cannon captured by the United States military or naval forces to be obliterated.

Second. That said commandant has caused to be removed from the dry-dock at that navy-yard the tablet placed there at the time of its reconstruction and bearing the inscription:

Destroyed by the rebels in 1862. Rebuilt by the United States Government in 1863.

J. W. LIVINGSTON,
Commandant.
W. H. LYONS,
Superintendent of Machinery.

Third. That because of his protest against the removal of said inscription the superintendent who was in charge of the work of rebuilding said dock, and who had faithfully served the Government for many years, has been removed from his position and a person who engaged in military service against the Government appointed in his place.

Fourth. That in disregard of that "grateful recognition of the services, sacrifices, and sufferings of persons honorably discharged from the military and naval service of the country," invoked by sections 1753 and 1754 of the Revised Statutes, a number of such honorably discharged soldiers or sailors of the United States have been dismissed from employment at said navy-yard and their places filled by men who fought against the Government during the late rebellion.

And be it further resolved, That if said foregoing allegations are true, the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House by whose order, upon what authority, and in pursuance of what public policy, if any, said honorable inscriptions were obliterated and said persons dismissed from the employment of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER). This resolution will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be immediately put on its passage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair can not entertain a request of that kind during this call. The resolution can only be presented now for reference to the appropriate committee without debate. If the gentleman desires to submit a request for unanimous consent it should be withheld until after the call of States has concluded. Does the gentleman desire to withdraw the resolution for that purpose?

HEIRS OF JOHN GRAHAM.

Mr. CASWELL (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 3742) for the relief of the heirs at law of John Graham; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ANDREW MARTIN.

Mr. CASWELL (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 3743) for the relief of Andrew Martin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.

Mr. CASWELL (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 3744) for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES W. SCHAUMBURG.

Mr. CASWELL (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 3745) for the relief of James W. Schaumburg; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

NEW LIGHT-HOUSE AT MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Mr. VAN SCHAICK introduced a bill (H. R. 3746) making an appropriation for the building of a new light-house at Milwaukee, Wis.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY SMITH.

FRANCES H. PLUMMER.

Mr. BRAGG (by Mr. GUENTHER) introduced a bill (H. R. 3750) for the relief of Frances H. Plummer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILBUR F. STEELE.

Mr. GIFFORD introduced a bill (H. R. 3751) for the relief of Wilbur F. Steele, and to settle the title to section 16, township 139, range 73 west; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. GIFFORD. A similar bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands at the last session. That committee is perfectly familiar with the subject. I think it should go to that committee at this session.

The SPEAKER. It seems to relate entirely to private land claims. It confirms title in a private individual.

Mr. GIFFORD. It permits the party named to purchase a school section.

Mr. STRAIT. A similar bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands at the last session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees the sections after the first one make provisions which take it to the Committee on Public Lands. The first section simply confirms a private land claim.

The bill was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. GIFFORD also introduced a bill (H. R. 3752) requiring the payment of the costs, fees, and other charges for surveying the lands of the Southern Pacific land grant, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN D. JAMES.

Mr. GIFFORD also introduced a bill (H. R. 3753) granting a pension to John D. James; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

POWERS OF COMMISSIONER GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. GIFFORD also introduced a bill (H. R. 3754) defining the powers of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in respect to the canceling of private entries of the public lands and to quiet titles to lands acquired upon the public domain; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

COINAGE OF SILVER.

Mr. HAILEY introduced a bill (H. R. 3755) to authorize a silver-bullion fund for the purchase of silver bullion and to regulate the coinage of silver, and for the issue of silver certificates; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

CINNABAR AND CLARK'S FORK RAILROAD.

Mr. TOOLE introduced a bill (H. R. 3756) granting the right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PAUL M'CORMICK.

Mr. TOOLE also introduced a bill (H. R. 3757) for the relief of Paul

McCormick; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

AGNES AND MARIA DE LEON.

Mr. JOSEPH introduced a bill (H. R. 3758) for the relief of Agnes and Maria De Leon, heirs at law of Rebecca L. De Leon, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PROPOSED TERRITORY OF LINCOLN.

Mr. JOSEPH also introduced a bill (H. R. 3759) to divide the Territory of Dakota on the Missouri River and to create the Territory of Lincoln; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Territories, and ordered to be printed.

JURISDICTION OF PROBATE COURTS, WYOMING TERRITORY.

Mr. CAREY introduced a bill (H. R. 3760) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the probate courts of Wyoming Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the regular call of States and Territories. If there be no objection the Chair will now recognize gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called for the introduction of bills.

There was no objection.

LAND TITLES, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. WELLBORN (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 3761) to quiet land titles in the State of Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

POTTAWATOMIE TREATY.

Mr. WELLBORN (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 3762) to enable the Secretary of the Interior to carry out and perform the treaty obligations of the United States with the Pottawatomie tribe of Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARY ANN VRING.

Mr. KLEINER introduced a bill (H. R. 3762) for the relief of Mary Ann Vring, mother of the late Andrew Vring, for bounty due under act of July 28, 1866; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BELLAIRE, OHIO.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, introduced a bill (H. R. 3764) to increase the capital stock of the First National Bank of Bellaire, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF BOUNTY.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3765) defining who are entitled to bounty under the act of July 22, 1861; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SILVER-BULLION TREASURY CERTIFICATES.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3766) to provide for the issue of Treasury certificates on deposited silver bullion, and for other purposes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I think that bill should go, on close examination of its provisions, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, although it may be referred to either that or the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. BLAND. I have always insisted during the session that these bills should go to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair can know nothing of the bill except what the title indicates without an examination of its provisions.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. This provides for changing the present coinage law. It might go properly to either of the Committees on Coinage or Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. It is very difficult often for the Chair to decide upon these questions, but the jurisdiction of the various committees of the House is defined by its rules. Matters relating to banking and currency go under the rules to the Committee on Banking and Currency, whereas matters relating to coinage go to the Committee on Coinage. It frequently happens, as in this case, that a bill relates to both subjects; and the Chair will refer the bill, if there be no motion, to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

PAYMENT OF THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, also introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 80) directing the payment of the surplus in the Treasury in excess of $50,000,000 on the public debt; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

JERSEY CITY A PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. McADOO introduced a bill (H. R. 3767) constituting Jersey City, N. J., a port of entry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. 3768) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River at Paducah, Ky.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN W. M'KNIGHT.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3769) for the relief of John W. McKnight; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A. GATES LEE.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3770) for the relief of A. Gates Lee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

DR. J. MILTON BEST.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3771) for the relief of the estate of Dr. J. Milton Best, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM PRITCHARD.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3772) for the relief of William Pritchard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES LOVE.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3773) for the relief of James Love; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

WALTER M'DANIEL.

Mr. WADSWORTH introduced a bill (H. R. 3774) for the relief of Walter McDaniel; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT WAYNE, IND.

Mr. LOWRY introduced a bill (H. R. 3775) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase an additional strip of ground on the east side of the United States court-house and post-office building at Fort Wayne, Ind., to be paid for out of the appropriation already made; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ANNA M. THIELE.

Mr. LOWRY also introduced a bill (H. R. 3776) providing for the restoration of Anna M. Thiele, formerly Anna M. Simonson, to the pension-roll, and the payment to her of the same pension to which she was entitled as the widow of David Simonson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS FOR HORSES AND EQUIPMENTS.

Mr. LOWRY also introduced a bill (H. R. 3777) to extend the time for filing claims for horses and equipments lost by officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSENGER FOR ELECTIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. TURNER submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be authorized to employ a messenger for the period of three months, to be appointed as the clerk of said committee is appointed, and paid $6 per day out of the contingent fund of the House.

PROMOTIONS IN SIGNAL CORPS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida (by request), introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 81) regulating the promotions of officers of the Signal Corps; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM PINKNEY AND OTHERS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3778) for the relief of William Pinkney, James Curry, and the legal representative of James Filor, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HERMAN RUGE.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3779) for the relief of Herman Ruge; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ARMY RETIRED-LIST.

Mr. DORSEY introduced a bill (H. R. 3780) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize a retired-list for privates and non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served for a period of thirty years or upward;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AMBROSE BURTZ.

Mr. DORSEY also introduced a bill (H. R. 3781) granting a pension to Ambrose Burtz, late private Company I, Tenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CINNABAR AND CLARKE'S FORK RAILROAD.

Mr. TOOLE. I had understood that the bill I introduced a short time ago granting the right of way to the Cinnabar and Clarke's Fork Railroad Company was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads. It seems it has been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. A bill relating to the same subject-matter was introduced in the Forty-eighth Congress into the Senate and House of Representatives and was referred to the Committees on Pacific Railroads. They reported on the subject. I submit that the proper consideration of the subject will be facilitated by the bill being again referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the bill. [After a pause.] The Chair does not see anything in the bill relating to Pacific railroads; that is to say, to the roads which have been subsidized by the United States either by grants of land or loans of money or credit. It seems to be simply a bill granting a right of way through the public lands. The proper reference is to the Committee on the Public Lands.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. PETERS. Before the holiday recess I introduced a bill (H. R. 772) to pay dependent relatives of persons killed by accident, engaged in the railway mail service, and to compensate for injuries received. The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims. It ought to have been referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I ask that the reference be corrected.

The SPEAKER. The bill should go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

There being no objection, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. PETERS also introduced a bill (H. R. 3782) to pay dependent relatives of persons killed by accident engaged in the Railway Mail Service to compensate for injuries received; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

FOWLE & CO.

Mr. RANNEY introduced a bill (H. R. 3783) to refund the excess of duties paid by Fowle & Co., of Boston, Mass.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL SALES.

Mr. COBB introduced a bill (H. R. 3784) to authorize and require United States marshals within their respective districts to make all sales of property which may hereafter be made by virtue of any order, judgment, or decree of any United States court, master in chancery, or commissioner, or by virtue of any execution of any process thereof, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The introduction of bills and resolutions being now concluded, the next business in order is the call of committees for reports to be placed upon the appropriate Calendars.

THOMAS L. ROSSER.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 66, a bill (H. R. 3827) to remove the political disabilities of Thomas L. Rosser, of Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 2) to amend section 643 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BENNETT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1684) to authorize terms of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of North Carolina at the city of Wilmington, in the said district; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

The call of the standing and select committees and of the several commissions authorized to report by bill was concluded, no further reports being presented.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 1740), introduced December 14 last, appears to have been improperly referred to the Committee on War Claims instead of to the Committee on Claims. It is a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812. The bill seems to be based upon a loan of money to the Government of the United States, and will be referred, if there be no objection, to the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Accounts for present consideration.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, having had under consideration the resolution referred to them by the House, January 5, 1886, authorizing them to designate the committees which, in the judgment of said committee, should be allowed clerks, respectfully report the same back to the House and recommend that the same be adopted.

Mr. CANNON. Let us hear the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Accounts be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to designate the committees which in the judgment of the said committee should be allowed clerks for the present Congress under the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1886, and report to the House without delay for its action thereon.

The SPEAKER. This is a resolution which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Until this action be taken by the House the Committee on Accounts can not certify any of these accounts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. SPRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, on motion of Mr. MORRISON (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAKER: Petition and papers relating to a bill for the relief of John T. Hall, praying for the passage thereof—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of certain property-holders and others in favor of a charter to incorporate the North Washington Cable Railway Company—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of Burr W. Garrett, for reference of his claim to Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Ann M. M. Ramey, for reference of claim to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 12, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The occupant of the chair desires to be absent from the Senate after to-day during the remainder of this week, and asks the consent of the Senate to substitute in his place the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that substitution will be made.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HARRISON presented the petition of A. B. Hunter and 15 others, citizens of Franklin, Ind., praying for the passage of a law protecting women in all the States and Territories in the enjoyment of the right of suffrage on equal terms with men; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

He also presented the petition of G. A. Campbell Post, No. 338, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Indiana, praying for the enactment of a law granting a service pension to all soldiers and sailors of the late war, and for other favorable legislation; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES presented a petition of the bar of Fort Smith, Ark., praying for the passage of a bill enlarging the jurisdiction of the United States district court at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WALTHALL. I present a petition of sundry citizens of Mississippi, praying for the repeal of the law providing for the coinage of not less than two millions per month of standard silver dollars. As there is nothing on the face of the petition to show from what quarter it comes, I will state that it is signed by substantial business men of West Point, Miss. In presenting it, however, I desire to state that I do not concur in the views expressed by the petitioners. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of A. Vasbury and others, citizens of Maryland, and the petition of D. Annan, Henry Shriver, and others, citizens of Maryland, praying for the passage of an act to suspend the coinage of the standard silver dollar; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Frederick C. Miller, of Baltimore, Md., praying for the passage of an act to enable him to obtain an American register for his steamship, the Caroline Miller; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BROWN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Georgia, in reference to what is known as the Trezevant claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A resolution concerning the collection of the Trezevant claim.

Whereas the Congress of the United States did, on the — day of ——, 1883, pass an act appropriating to the State of Georgia the sum of $35,555 in payment of the Trezevant claim; and

Whereas said sum has not been paid to the State, but has been placed to the credit of the State on a demand against the State, which is not recognized by the State of Georgia; Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Georgia (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, earnestly urged and requested to use all means in their power to have the appropriation bill referred to so amended, or to have such an act passed, as will insure the payment of said sum to the State of Georgia, justly due to the State, in lawful money, as soon as possible.

2. Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly certified, be sent from the office of the secretary of state to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State so soon as the Congress convenes.

WM. A. LITTLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
M. A. HARDIN,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.
H. H. CARLTON,
President of the Senate.
WM. A. HARRIS,
Secretary of the Senate.

Approved October 17, 1885.

HENRY D. MCDANIEL, Governor.

STATE OF GEORGIA, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Atlanta, Ga., January 4, 1886.

I hereby certify that the foregoing two pages contain a correct copy of the original resolution on file in this office.

Given under my hand and official seal.

[SEAL.]

N. C. BARNETT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. LOGAN. I see that the Senator from Georgia is very hoarse this morning, but I should like to ask him what the memorial refers to in speaking of a claim that is not recognized by the State of Georgia. As I understand, this amount has been credited to the State of Georgia on a claim that the Government has against the State, and the memorial which has been read states that it is a claim not recognized by the State of Georgia.

Mr. BROWN. I will answer the Senator that it refers to a claim which the Government sets up against the State of Georgia for what is known as the direct tax. The State of Georgia does not recognize the claim. It does not deny the right of the Government of the United States to collect it in the ordinary way from her citizens, but as a State she does not think she is bound, and therefore thinks there ought not to be a set-off.

Mr. LOGAN. To what committee has the memorial been referred?

Mr. BROWN. It has not been referred. It will take the usual course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What disposition does the Senator from Georgia desire to have made of the memorial?

Mr. BROWN. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as it asks for an appropriation.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask whether it would not be more appropriate to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary. It presupposes an appropriation, but the question which the memorial raises certainly ought to be settled before an appropriation can be asked. If the United States has no right to give a credit on a claim that it has against a State, then as a matter of course the appropriation would be proper.

Mr. BROWN. I will state to the Senator that I have no objection to its going before the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LOGAN. Very well; let it be so referred.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the bill making the appropriation for the claim of the State of Georgia was referred to the Committee on Claims. The Committee on Claims investigated that claim and put such restriction upon the payment as they thought would secure its application to any claim which should be due the Government from the State of Georgia, if any. That was their purpose. Now the complaint is that the application of their bill has worked injustice to Georgia, as I suppose. It seems to me, therefore, that it would belong to the same committee that investigated the original subject rather than to the Committee on the Judiciary. It is really an attempt to make a change in the bar which they put up or in the arrangement which they made.

Mr. LOGAN. This is a question of law.

Mr. HOAR. But almost every committee has questions of law involved in the subjects committed to it.

Mr. BROWN. I am scarcely able to speak so that I can be heard, but I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the Congress of the United States has already passed a law recognizing this claim and directing it to be paid. Therefore I suppose the memorial would not properly go before the Committee on Claims. It is only a question whether there ought to be a set-off or whether the United States Government ought to allow this to be paid in cash. I should think, agreeing with the Senator from Illinois, that it would be more appropriate that the matter should go before the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made if there is no objection.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 221) for the relief of Alexander Smiley, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 163) releasing the estate of the late Frank Soulé, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of the State of California, and his sureties on his official bond, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 52) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians, in Dakota, into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, have directed me to report it with amendment. I desire to say in regard to this bill that at a very early day, as soon as the pending business is disposed of, I shall ask the Senate to consider it, as it is very important, if it ever becomes a law, that it should be passed in the very early spring.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 707) donating condemned cannon to Tower Post, No. 17, Grand Army of the Republic, of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, have instructed me to report it back to the Senate adversely and recommend that it be indefinitely postponed. I now desire to announce to the Senate that there are no condemned cast-iron cannon on hand belonging to the Government, and it is a waste of time to introduce bills for that purpose; they will all be reported adversely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the bill be indefinitely postponed. If there be no objection that motion will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 768) for the relief of George A. Iaeger, have instructed me to report it adversely and to recommend that it be indefinitely postponed. The bill proposes to pay the claimant for property lost in the Army, and there is a general law which authorizes the Secretary of War to adjust such claims. The bill is reported adversely for that reason. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 19) directing copies of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina to be furnished said State, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 216) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certificates of discharge to certain members of the Missouri Home Guards, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 214) for the relief of Oscar Eastmond and James W. Atwill, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 424) giving a military record to Alexander Francesco, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 413) giving a military record to Alexander Francesco, deceased, being almost identically similar to the previous bill and relating to the same subject-matter, have instructed me to report it adversely and to recommend that it be indefinitely postponed.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 193) for the relief of John Hollins McBlair, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MCPHERSON, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 556) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co., reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 519) to authorize the President to restore Tenedore Ten Eyck to his former rank in the Army and to place him upon the retired-list of Army officers, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (S. 98) for the relief of Major William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army;

A bill (S. 389) for the relief of the heirs or legal representative of Robert J. Baugness, deceased;

A bill (S. 87) for the relief of Thomas J. Miller, of Washington Territory; and

A bill (S. 528) for the relief of William H. Morgan.

PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK OF LAWRENCEBURG.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 128) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind., to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I should like to ask the consent of the Senate to have that bill disposed of. It is one that passed both branches in the last Congress, and only failed for the want of the signature of the President. The bank has been kept out of this duplicate certificate of deposit for a great many years, and I should like to have the bill passed now.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a report accompanying it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no written report.

Mr. HARRISON. I will state to the Senator from Kansas that there was a report at the last Congress. The bill passed both Houses of Congress on the last day, and only failed because the President did not have time to sign it.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us have some explanation about it.

Mr. HARRISON. The bill explains itself.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue and cause to be issued to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind., a duplicate certificate of deposit numbered E 35988, for the sum of $10,000, issued by the assistant treasurer of the United States at Cincinnati to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind., upon such evidence of loss, and upon execution of such bonds of indemnity to the United States, and under such regulations in regard to issue and payment as he shall prescribe.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY BUILDING IN NEW YORK.

Mr. LOGAN. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 671) making an appropriation for the purchase of the old Produce Exchange building and the site bounded by Whitehall, Pearl, Moore, and Water streets, New York city, for Army purposes, to report it with amendments. I ask, if there be no objection, that the bill may be considered now. It is a very important matter, and the question of time is quite pressing, as the Government has up to a certain date to make the purchase, and in order to avoid the rental of property, which amounts to $25,000 a year, by the Government, if the repairs to this building can be completed by the 1st of May, which it is claimed can be done if the bill be passed promptly. Thus it will save to the Government a year's rent, amounting, as I said, to $25,000; and that is the importance of the bill. I should like very much if it could be considered now, and if there is no objection I will state briefly the agreement between the Government and the parties.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. The question was presented to the Secretary of War and a commission was appointed to make an examination of this property, which was done some time since. They reported that the property would cost $250,000, and the estimates show that it will take about $150,000 to change the building and put additional stories to it, so as to make it sufficient for army purposes. It is convenient to the island where the troops are stationed, being close to the shore, much more so than the property now occupied by the Government. For a great many years the property occupied by the quartermaster's, commissary, and medical departments in New York has cost the Government not less than $25,000 annually. In fact, the Government has expended more for rents than the purchase of this property would cost; and on the recommendation of the Quartermaster-General and of the Secretary of War the committee unanimously reported in favor of at once occupying this property if Congress will give permission to the War Department.

That is the whole case. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments in line 7, after the words "for the," to strike out "construction thereon of a properly planned fire-proof" and insert "alteration and remodeling of the;" and in line 8, after the word "building," to insert "so as to make it;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $450,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and hereby is, appropriated for the purchase of the old Produce Exchange building and site, bounded by Whitehall, Pearl, Moore, and Water streets, New York city, for army purposes, and for the alteration and remodeling of the building, so as to make it suitable in all respects for Government use, said appropriation to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That before the expenditure of any of the appropriation hereby made, good and valid title shall be secured to the United States for the land and the improvements thereon contemplated by this act, and the consent of the Legislature of the State of New York obtained to the purchase thereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to take from the files of the Senate all papers relating to the claims of citizens of the United States on account of spoliations by the French, and to deliver the same to the Secretary of State to be filed in the Department of State.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JACKSON introduced a bill (S. 1023) granting a pension to Mrs. Catharine Vaughn, widow of Thomas J. Vaughn, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 1024) to enable the Secretary of War to pay Rane C. Hutchison for services rendered and expenses incurred in the military service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 1025) conferring jurisdiction in certain civil cases arising in the Indian Territory on the United States district and circuit courts for the western district of Arkansas, the northern district of Texas, and the district of Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MAXEY introduced a bill (S. 1026) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of the State of Texas, and to attach a part of the Indian Territory to said districts, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 1027) granting an increase of pension to Norman Kaufman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1028) for the relief of Charles K. Remsberg; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 1029) for the relief of William Pinkney, James Curry, and the legal representative of James Filor, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1030) for the construction of a military telegraph line from Sanford, Fla., to Point Jupiter, Florida, and the establishment of a signal station; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 1031) for the relief of Henry D. Coley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, introduced a bill (S. 1032) to refund duties upon goods on shipboard when the tariff act of March 3, 1883, went into effect; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1033) for the relief of Michæl Piggott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 1034) to amend the law relating to patents, trade-marks, and copyrights; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 1035) for the relief of Paymaster Charles A. McDaniel, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1036) for the relief of Elizabeth D. Stone; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1037) for the relief of Assistant Engineer Jabez Burchard, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1038) for the relief of Robert Garrick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 1039) to provide for the sale of certain New York Indian lands in Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 1040) for the relief of the heirs of Capt. Asa Waterman, of Rhode Island; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1041) for the relief of William B. Gropp, of Newport, R. I.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 1042) to pay B. S. James for transporting the United States mails; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1043) to amend sections 1097 and 1098 of the Revised Statutes relating to aids to general officers of the Army; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 1044) to increase the school fund in certain townships of the State of Alabama; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, introduced a bill (S. 1045) to regulate the rank of engineer officers of the United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 1046) providing for the establishment of a bureau of public documents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 1047) for the relief of Patrick H. Estes, a veteran invalid soldier of the Mexican war; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAWLEY introduced a bill (S. 1048) for the relief of Samuel B. Horne; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 1049) for the relief of Clement A. Lounsberry; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (S. 1050) for the relief of Dallas Garner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1051) granting a pension to L. A. Clark; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 28) authorizing the President of the United States to grant permission to one or more officers of the Army to accept temporary service under the Government of Corea; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BUTLER, it was Ordered, That B. S. James have leave to withdraw his papers from the files, subject to the rules, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims, in connection with the bill for his relief.

On motion of Mr. GRAY, it was Ordered, That John Hunter, of New York, have leave to withdraw his papers from the files, no adverse report having been made thereon.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Huston & Co. be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. McMILLAN, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Clement A. Lounsberry be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of William Pfaender be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAYMENT OF BONDS IN SILVER.

Mr. BECK. The Committee on Finance this morning had under consideration the resolution sent to it by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], but finding it very important, and not having time to consider it fully, the matter was not concluded. It being pending, I wish to offer a substitute for the resolution, for reference to the committee also, so that the two may be considered together.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is a substitute for the resolution offered by the Senator from Louisiana, the Chair understands.

Mr. BECK. It is a substitute for that resolution, which is now pending before the Committee on Finance and which was considered in part this morning, but the committee not having time to finish it, I offered the substitute before the committee, and now offer it in the Senate for reference to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas it is provided by section 3694 of the Revised Statutes that "the coin paid for duties on imported goods shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows: First, to the payment, in coin, of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States; second, to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest on which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct; third, the residue to be paid into the Treasury: Therefore

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed, in all payments hereafter made of interest on the bonds and notes of the United States, and in the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States for the sinking fund as now required by law, to pay out gold and silver coin as near as possible in the same proportions in which gold coin and certificates and silver coin and certificates were received during the preceding fiscal year for duties on imported goods.

Mr. BECK. I ask that this resolution be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the resolution will be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ARMY AND NAVY REGISTERS.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolutions; which were referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That 800 copies of the Army Register for 1886 be printed for the use of the Senate.

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the Navy Register for 1886 be printed for the use of the Senate.

THE YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to furnish, for the information of the Senate, a copy of a report made by W. Hallett Phillips, special agent, on the subject of the Yellowstone National Park, together with the accompanying documents, said report bearing date September 12, 1885.

COIN DUTIES ON IMPORTED GOODS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. PUGH. Whenever I can do so with propriety and in order, I wish to call up the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] with a view to finish my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. BECK on the 18th of December, 1885, relative to the payment in coin of customs dues and the disposition of the coin so paid.

Mr. PUGH resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. [See Appendix.]

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, the effort which is now making in different parts of the world to demonetize and degrade silver coin is one of the grandest conspiracies against the rights of the people ever inaugurated by human greed. The governments of nations, supported by the brightest genius of their citizens, are engaged in it, but it is nevertheless a crime. It is freely admitted that among those whose motives are the simplest avarice are also many whose motives are good and whose convictions are sincere; nevertheless the result of their policy would be iniquity. Coming as it does in the guise of a great financial question, it escapes the conditions of that vulgar criminality which would subject the conspirators to the penalty of law; all the same, it is a tyrannical and cruel blow directed at the substance of the common people in all lands. In truth, it is an international sequestration of the goods of the poor and the wages of the worker by the combined power of capital; and on its banners as it advances to the attack should be emblazoned the words of holy writ: "For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance: but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

The very earliest records of humanity show that men had even then adopted the precious metals, silver and gold, as a medium of exchange and a standard of value for their crude commodities. The capacity of the earth to yield them fixed at an early day their relative value when compared with each other, and, though these quantities and values have fluctuated now and then by the accidents of production or other causes, the average relative value has been well maintained through the ages, and for hundreds of years truthful nature has justified the decree in which she originally indicated the proportions of these her concealed treasures. Very soon also the aggregate value of all property came to be measured by the aggregate amount of all these precious metals in the possession of the communities where both existed. It is now, more so than at any time in the history of the world, a recognized fact that the prices of property, the wages of labor, and of all things of value are fixed by the ratio which is sustained between a people's property and their precious metals.

There is now no fact of political economy more patent and undisputed than this: that when money is plenty prices are high, and when money is scarce prices are low. It must be remembered, too, that no artificial substitutes for money can vary this proposition, since all promissory or paper contrivances depend at last upon the amount of the precious metals there is on hand to redeem them. It is the first and simplest illustration of the great economic law of supply and demand.

Such being admitted, it follows inevitably that the loss or withdrawal from use, as a medium of exchange, of one of the precious metals must affect the value of the remaining one to the full extent of the proportion which it sustained to the other with reference to the combined value of both. The one left in use being now that much scarcer, would render it that much more in demand. Upon it would be devolved the function of representing alone the aggregate value of all property, which duty had theretofore been performed by both metals combined. It would therefore require more of property and of labor to obtain one of its units of value, and the prices of property and wages of labor would necessarily fall in order to conform to the new measure of value. Of course a depreciation of one of the precious metals relatively to the other—whether that depreciation is caused by one going down or the other going up—is followed by the same results to the extent of the depreciation or the appreciation.

It is estimated that the amount of the precious metals of the world, coin and bullion, available for this purpose is in round numbers about $16,000,000,000, of which 46 per cent. is in gold and 54 per cent. is in silver. That this vast sum is not too large for the healthy uses of trade is proven conclusively by the fact that the leading nations are constantly striving to increase their supply, and that very many of them are using paper substitutes, and are not what is called specie-paying.

In the United States, without reference to the bullion of either metal, the coin in use by the people, as stated by official authority, is about $550,000,000 of gold and about $278,000,000 of silver. Of the latter some $75,000,000 is subsidiary fractional coin. The coins of the world aggregate about $5,500,000,000, of which $3,300,000,000 is gold and the rest silver.

In order that there may be no hindrance to the free transaction of the business of the world in the exchanging of products, it is necessary that there should be a plentiful supply of gold and silver coin or of their representatives. This supply must not only be increased as population increases, but it must keep pace also with the vastly more rapid increase of the world's consumption and the ever-widening reach of commerce as it goes out more and more to supply the world's wants.

The annual increase of population in the United States is over 3 per cent. The value of manufactured products during the last decade increased more than 2½ per cent. per annum. The principal articles of agricultural production, as barley, wheat, Indian corn, cotton, and tobacco, increased during the same period from 5 to 10 per cent., and without tediously citing statistics it is safe to say that the total of agricultural products and all kindred industries show the same results. To meet all this growing wealth with a proper medium of exchange the mining industry is only furnishing to the world an increase of the precious metals to the extent of 1⅓ per cent.

Yet, in the blindness or greed of men, it is solemnly proposed to remedy this short supply by obliterating 54 per cent. of what we have. Should such a scheme be successful all over the world, the consequences could not be contemplated without shuddering.

Already 20 per cent. of our silver has been destroyed by depreciation, and as a consequence thereof we are now in the midst of the most rigorous business depression which we have experienced in twenty years, not excepting the period between 1873 and 1879, when the results of the first blow at the integrity of silver were being felt.

Continue this attack until all the silver coin is demonetized, and a contraction is certain to ensue which will strike down prices and labor to the full extent of the proportion which silver bears to the whole volume of our money. It will prove the greatest financial calamity which has ever befallen the American people. Every species of property would shrink, the wages of the poor most of all. The only exception to this universal shrinkage would be in debts and gold. These would increase to the extent that other property decreased in value.

Suppose, for instance, that a man owed a debt of $100 which at the time the debt was made could have been discharged by 100 days' work or with 100 bushels of wheat or 1,000 pounds of cotton; if the contraction of the currency was so much as 50 per cent., then to pay this debt it would require 150 days' work or 150 bushels of wheat or 1,500 pounds of cotton. On the contrary, if when this destruction of silver money took place a man had on hand $100 in gold it would immediately become worth $150. Literally and truly the rich man would be made richer, while the poor man would be made poorer. For it is in the very nature of this kind of money-making by legislation, as in gambling, that the gains of one man must be the losses of another. It differs in this from all transactions of legitimate trade and finance, in any or all of which both parties have a voice and may be benefited. But this is a case of dead open and shut, where the debtor is bound to lose that which the creditor gains. It differs, too, from vulgar theft in that it is fraudulent in its pretenses, insidious in its methods, and lacks the courage and the candor of old-fashioned larceny.

There is reason, too, to believe that the repudiation of the silver dollar by the United States would be the signal for the degradation of silver throughout Europe. This great and rich country, producing nearly one-half the annual yield of silver in the world, beyond doubt has the fate of this metal in its hands as a standard of value. If it is surrendered here, then the nations of Europe which are struggling to maintain it will doubtless give way and it will disappear from the currency of the Western nations, and the ruin of the many for the enrichment of the few will be complete and universal. It is worth while to inquire what is to take the place of one-half the world's money. Can gold do it? Where is it to come from? Its production is not only declining relatively to the increase of population and the expansion of commerce, but it is decreasing absolutely. It is well known, too, as before intimated, that with our ever-expanding civilization there is an increasing consumption of commodities far in excess of population numbered by the head, which demands an ever-enlarging circulation of money. It has been estimated that Great Britain alone and her dependencies, for which she coins, require an additional supply of gold to the amount of $90,000,000 per annum, which sum is within $20,000,000 of the entire gold production of the past year of the world. This takes no account of the vast amount which is annually used in the arts.

So long ago as 1870 the leading financial papers of Europe estimated that to meet the wants of commerce an annual supply of thirty millions sterling, or $150,000,000 in gold, would be required; this, too, before the extraordinary demand for gold occasioned by the demonetization of silver by Germany and Scandinavia, and before we in the United States had resumed specie payments. With the production of gold gradually declining, should we refuse the assistance of nature, who offers us an increase in silver, there can be no doubt but that our supply of metallic money will speedily prove inadequate and the depression under which we now suffer will be aggravated twofold. What greater madness, then, can men be guilty of than to attempt the sudden obliteration of one-half the fuel which feeds the locomotive of our progress? What greater crime could men commit against the welfare of human society than to destroy one-half of the medium by which its values are exchanged; to inflict upon it a financial hemiplegia? What policy could be more obviously ruinous than to force the increasing demand for an essential article in the face of a constantly decreasing supply? How can it result in anything but calamity to the multitude and unrighteous gain to the few, who hold gold and securities which they wish discharged in gold?

Why should all this be done? What reasons are given by those who wish to suspend the coinage of silver and establish a single gold standard of value? Stated shortly, the reasons given are:

First. That silver has become depreciated until it no longer represents a dollar where it purports to be a dollar, and has ceased to be the money of a large part of the business world.

Second. That our public debt should be paid in gold in order to keep our credit up to its present high figure, and that it is not honest to pay our creditors in dollars which are worth only 80 cents.

Third. That the principal foreign countries with whom we trade use only gold, which is an international money, and our adoption of the gold standard is necessary to our dealing with them.

Lastly. That the continued coinage of silver would continue its depreciation indefinitely, until the cheaper metal would drive gold out of the country entirely. Let us examine these allegations by the light of facts.

I maintain that the silver dollar has not gone down with reference to its purchasing power of everything, excepting gold alone; and that with reference to gold silver has not gone down so much as gold has gone up. Measured by the price of commodities the silver dollar is by every cent worth as much as it was when the first effort was made in this country to degrade it, at which time it was worth 103 in gold. It is now accepted everywhere in the purchase of everything on a par with gold. No difference is made in trade whatever. Everybody receives it freely; and even all the public creditors take it gladly, except those who by special contract in writing agreed to do so—the bondholders. Gold is sent from distant parts of the country to be exchanged for certificates redeemable in silver—a pregnant fact, which was most convincingly urged by the Senator from Kentucky in his recent very able speech.

Why then should it not rather be said that gold has gone up than that silver has fallen, since so many more circumstances point to the former conclusion than to the latter? That silver has stood alongside of commodities is evidence that there is not too much of it for the uses of trade and that it has not moved; while the fact that the position of gold has changed is prima facie evidence that it has moved, and not the things with which it is compared. The same causes which it is alleged have driven silver down have operated still more powerfully to force gold up. The action of England and Germany, aided by all the interested capitalists of Europe; the machinations of the bondholders and national banks here, added to the active hostility of a series of Treasury officials for a dozen years past, have all operated as so many wedges driven in, one upon top of the other, to force gold and silver apart.

When this has been accomplished, they triumphantly exclaim, "See how silver has gone down." What right have they to say that? The force applied could only separate the mass at right angles to the pressure, and it would seem to be in accord with the laws of mechanics that that section which possessed the greater power of resistance would carry with it in the cleavage the larger share of the material separated. If so, then it is undoubtedly gold which has been forced upward; for after many years of pressure they are separated and silver is found in its original position beside the great bulk of commodities, the common measure of both.

That it has ceased to be currency with the greater part of the world is disproven by the fact that there is more of it in use now by 8 per cent. than of gold.

The following quotations, taken from the leading financial journal of Cuba for December last, tells a different story as to the disuse of silver abroad:

THE STANDARD DOLLAR ABROAD.

[From the New Orleans City Item.]

We have before us the Havana Weekly Report of Saturday, 5th December, a very sufficient authority, in which are reported the values of everything usually known to the Havana market, including the rates of exchange and the current quotations of "foreign coins."

The following items are taken from a general list:

		Per cent.
Greenbacks	premium	9 to 10
American gold pieces	do	9 to 10¼
French gold pieces	do	2 to 3
British sovereigns	do	3 to 4
Spanish dubloons	do	3 to 4
American silver dollars	do	4½ to 5½

Thus it appears that the use of the dollar has caused a demand for it in a country with which we deal largely; that makes it worth more than British coins or French coins. The allegation that it is necessary to adopt the gold standard and stop the coinage of silver in order to pay our public debt in gold and keep up our high credit is a specious one, made in the interest of the debt-holders alone, and can make no claim to serving the general welfare. It means either one or the other of two things: "Demonetize silver for my sake to the serious injury of the public, or else pay me in gold and everybody else in silver. Give me privileges over all other men." That is the bondholder's position, stripped of all evasion, when they make this extraordinary claim. They go further, and say that it is not honest to pay them with a silver dollar which is worth only 80 cents. The honesty or dishonesty of such a transaction depends much upon its conditions and surroundings.

In the first place, that silver dollar is worth every cent now that it was when the public debt was contracted, measured by any standard except gold. In the next place, it is the very identical dollar which the public creditor agreed to receive in payment when the debt was created. "'Tis so nominated in the bond." The creditor agreed, too, to take this dollar when his debt became due, without any guarantee whatever, expressed or implied, on the part of the Government, that the bullion value of its material relatively to gold or to anything else should never fluctuate, but should remain forever with neither variableness nor shadow of changing. In all my knowledge of human transactions, whether acquired by personal experience or by the reading of history from Moses to Sunset Cox, I have never, I believe, met with a single case where the debtor undertook to insure the stability of the coin in which the creditor was to be paid prior to this modest claim of the holders of United States bonds.

In the course of my career I have heard many bad cases argued with varying degrees of ingenuity; but whether in the school-boys' club, or in the cross-roads' debating society, or in the court of pleas and quarter sessions, or from the tail-end of a gingerbread-cart at a battalion muster, or even in my nine years of listening to the national platitudes which fill the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I have never seen or heard a worse abuse of logic, a feebler attempt to outrage common sense than this charge that the man who offers to pay the precise amount, at the exact time, in the identical money of his promise, was a dishonest man! The stories of the martyrdom of man for opinion's sake, and in the higher matter of faith for conscience' sake, are favorite incidents of historical reading. My boyish blood has been alternately warmed and chilled by the contemplation of the pictures of anguish and suffering presented in the Book of Martyrs and all the popular stories of persecution in the dark and unhappy ages when fanaticism worshiped God, or thought it did, by the infliction of torture; but I have never seen or heard of a case that made so small an appeal to human sympathy, or so large a one to human contempt, as this wail of the United States bondholder because he is not permitted, freely and with applause, to collect five dollars from the Treasury when he had been promised four.

Dishonest, indeed, to pay as we promised! What, then, is honesty? Sir, in my old-fashioned opinion the honest man is he who pays according to the letter and spirit of his promise, and the dishonest man is he who wants something more than that which he agreed to take, and that their aiders and abettors are like unto them. To support this claim of unfair treatment of the bondholders the statement is constantly made that for many years, from 1853 to 1873, we were almost without silver and coined no silver dollars, and that from the foundation of the Government to the latter period we had only coined $8,000,000, while from 1878 to 1886 we had coined $215,000,000. The unfairness of those statements is made manifest when it is known that during that period we coined $176,284,000 in fractional coins and that Mexican dollars were in circulation all the time to the extent of many millions, being worth more than our own dollar and a legal tender. Let it be understood, too, that from 1793 to 1849 not a single gold dollar was coined, and not one double-eagle until 1850, when California gold began to come in.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] in his recent speech made the extraordinary assertion that in 1873 when silver was demonetized we had no silver dollars, and for that reason the bondholders fully understood they were to be paid in gold. If the Senator had examined the records of the Mint he would not have ventured that assertion, for, in addition to the six millions of our own coinage and the Mexican dollars still in the country, he would have seen that in that very year 1873 we coined $977,150, and in the year preceding $1,112,961—a total of $2,090,111. From 1839 to 1873 he would have seen that silver dollars had been coined every year with the single exception of 1858. However willing people may be to believe that the Senator from New Jersey was ignorant of these facts, it will be exceedingly difficult to persuade them that the guileless babes of Wall street did not know all about it when they agreed to receive the coin of the United States in payment of their bonds. If they were beguiled by the wiles of the immaculate Jay Cooke, and preferred to believe his rose-colored advertisements rather than the plain words written on the face of the bonds themselves, then instead of pitying them as the victims of bad faith I should rather be disposed to admire the wisdom of Providence which, in a spirit of compensatory justice, has provided that dangerous men, like dangerous animals, will devour each other when better prey is not within reach.

Mr. President, the rapacity of avarice is so repugnant to the more generous instincts of men that it always seeks to disguise its ugliness by assuming the garb of some fair virtue. A happy compensation this is, too, for it confesses thereby that there are virtues left upon earth and that men love them. In this case the bondholder and the capitalist cover their insidious approaches to degrade the one-half of our currency and secure the payment of their claims in the remaining half, of greatly enhanced value, not only in the name of honesty, but also in tender consideration of the Lord's poor!

Mr. President, there are some things which on first sight evoke no voice; they simply take away one's breath, as the phrase goes, and the astounded mind, like soldiers under the influence of sudden panic, requires to be rallied and recalled to itself before it can take in the full significance of the proposition. Well do I remember when for the first time my eyes beheld the vast and terrible grandeur of the ocean, and when I first saw and heard the dread majesty of Niagara. Speech then seemed not only impossible, but inappropriate, unfitting, useless, and utterly insufficient. So, too, there are to be seen now and then moral exhibitions of a far surpassing grandeur which strike us equally dumb with admiring wonder, and make us before venturing speech anxiously inquire of ourselves if poor depraved humanity can really thus attain to such fellowship with the gods. We hardly expected such a spectacle to be presented in the discussion of this plain and prosaic question; and yet, Mr. President, such a one confronts us when Wall street, with its congeners, comes forward as the friend and guardian of the poor.

Strange as it may appear Apollo is really stalking among the swineherds of Admetus, and asks to be recognized as the veritable sun-god. Of a truth the chiefs of capitalistic power have put into this discussion the plea that silver must be degraded from its high place for the sake of the poor! Wall street wants this done, not as calumny vainly imagines, for its own profit, but because the tender hearts of its denizens, which beat only for the alleviation of human misery, can not bear to see poor men paid for their labor in silver dollars, which are worth but 80 cents in gold though worth a full 100 in meat and flour. I have often had occasion to note with pride this disinterested devotion of capital to the interests of the workingman. It is a distinguishing feature of our civilization—more particularly when the workingman's vote is essential to financial schemes like this.

If a railroad corporation wants to gobble a few million acres of the public lands it does so in the interest—not of its shareholders—but of the poor settlers. If a manufacturer wants a tax of 75 per cent. levied on his foreign competitor's pig-iron or 150 per cent. on his rival's woolen goods, he procures it to be done, not for his own pocket, Heaven forbid! but for the benefit of his poor operatives, whose interest alone he studies. If a national bank wants the tax on checks or deposits repealed, or wants greenbacks retired out of the way of its own notes, it is done or urged to be done, not for its profit—by no means—but for the sole good of the poor whom we have always with us. In short, there is not a capitalist, or a combination of money scheming to procure an advantage of the people by legislation, who does not approach Congress vowing, under the penalties of the sweet singer of the captivity, that he prefers the American laborer to his chief joy.

But notwithstanding these things have been so long before our eyes that it would seem we ought to have become accustomed to them, we were not prepared without astonishment to see Wall street step at once to the lead of all that is beneficent in our country. Poor men who labor will now be practically without excuse. If they can not do well now, with the railroads, the national banks, the manufacturers, the bondholders, and the combined power of capital generally working and scheming only to keep up their wages and promote their interests, surely they will have only themselves to blame. Under these favoring circumstances, why wages are not already higher is one of the mysteries of political economy.

But an examination of the argument by which it is proposed to benefit labor by the degradation of silver robs the proposition of much of its philanthropy. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his recent very able report, after declaring how the circulation of dollars of a cheaper metal injures the laborer, goes on to say:

> The daily wages of our workingmen and working-women are by far the largest, by far the most important aggregate of wealth to be affected by the degradation of the dollar, or of any legal-tender equivalent of the dollar. All other aggregates of wealth * * * are not to be compared in their sum to this gigantic sum. It is this gigantic sum, the wages of labor, which is assailed by every policy that would make the dollar of the fathers worth less than its worth in gold. The debt of the United States, large as it is, is a wart beside this mountain. (See page 35.)

Prior to that, on page 19, he had said:

> Silver in fractional coins is the most convenient, desirable metal for use in the payment of petty sums. These are the bulk of human transactions where money passes. It has no rival. Who does not deem it indispensable? Silver can not profitably be discarded from large use by any civilized nation in the world, even where, as in Great Britain and the Scandinavian countries, it is used only for fractional coins made legal tender for small sums, and gold alone is cut into coins of unlimited legal tender.

These two extracts contain the gist of the argument of the gold-standard people, and disclose, when analyzed carefully, their plans for the regulation of our currency. Let us look at them closely.

It is admitted that the daily wages of labor and the daily spendings of those wages for subsistence constitute the bulk of human transactions where money passes. It is admitted that these transactions are discharged with silver, at present with fractional coins and the dollar; and it is assumed, justly, that the use of silver in fractional coin will be continued for this purpose even when we shall have ceased coining the dollar and adopted the gold standard. Such is notoriously the practice in Great Britain, Germany, and all gold-standard countries. The present silver dollar contains 412½ grains of standard silver, while two half-dollars, or ten dimes, contain only 385 grains. Now it is proposed to remove the dollar containing 28 grains more of standard metal and pay wages—"the bulk of human transactions where money passes"—with the inferior fractional coin, as is done in Europe! Is there any mental process known to human logic which can extract comfort or benefit to labor from this proposition? Nor will it avail anything to say that it is not meant to destroy the silver dollar by ceasing to coin it. We know too well that to refuse it recognition at the mints in addition to the refusal of public creditors and the national banks to receive it, together with the hostility of our Government officials, would give it a fatal blow, and would reduce still more the value of the fractional coins, in which it seems the workingman must be paid, under either standard. The further scheme of the bondholders appears to be also that in order to pay them in the dearest coin we must banish the next best—the silver dollar—and pay wages in the cheapest and most debased of all! The wart must be paid in pure gold, the mountain in debased silver! And you force the laborer to take this adulterated currency by making it a legal tender for a sum large enough to cover his daily wages; while as to the dollar already coined, if you leave alone its legal-tender quality, it is done with the understanding that it will never be offered to the bondholder—that the law was never intended for the wart, but only to regulate the mountain! Is this a land of law and liberty; of equal rights to all—exclusive privileges to none?

The truth is this war on the dollar is in the interest of those who speculate in money itself, and not of those who labor to earn it to buy bread. Our dollar is not so large as the largest silver coins of the leading gold countries of Europe. The English crown-piece is worth $1.12; the Netherland rix dollar $1.01½. The German 5-mark piece $1.07½. Taking these countries as an example, then, there seems no need for dispensing with the dollar on account of its size, or for disturbing its position as a part of that currency which serves the purposes of every-day business. So far would that course fail to prove beneficial to the laboring man that in my opinion it would positively injure him. He would not only be compelled to receive the inferior coin and lose thereby 28 grains of silver in every dollar, but he would lose the inestimable tears of the bondholders and the banks, who now not only make their own faces "foul with weeping" over his wrongs, but hire great newspapers and orators, like Eastern mourners, to howl over him also. Let their ends be accomplished by the repeal of the Bland act and the degradation of silver, and the sincerity of their consolation could alone be equaled by the hypocrisy of their present grief. Instantly they would exchange "the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness."

Again, it is said that it is necessary to adopt a gold standard in order to enable us to conduct successfully our commerce with foreign countries. It is admitted that where money passes in foreign trade gold is demanded; but it must be remembered that it is only the balances that remain after the year's dealings between the two countries that require to be paid in specie. For six years past, with the exception of one year, those balances have been in our favor to the extent of $100,000,000 per annum, and the money was due to us. So long as prohibitory tariffs continue to prevent foreign trade these balances will continue in our favor, unless, indeed, retaliatory tariffs should shut us out of a foreign market for our breadstuffs and provisions, which I think quite probable whenever Europe can arrange, as England is now successfully doing, to get its supplies from some other source.

But suppose these balances were against us and had to be paid in gold, what then? Nobody proposes to demonetize gold or discourage its use in any way. On the contrary, by keeping a full supply of silver in circulation more gold could be spared for the use of foreign commerce. Even if the importers had to pay a premium for sterling bills to pay this balance what would be their loss compared to that of the general public, which would follow the striking down of one of the great metals which has sustained all commerce, foreign and domestic, while plunging the country into all the evils of contraction? With exchange against us the import trade would indeed be put to some disadvantage, but with an abundance of silver and certificates representing silver in active circulation business would nevertheless be prosperous and prices well maintained. We could spare the gold necessary to settle our balances. But suppose that we had no money but this $550,000,000 in gold, how much more ruinous it would be to all the interests of our people to send one-fifth of it abroad annually with nothing to take its place.

The total aggregate of our foreign trade is about $1,500,000,000, but who can estimate the value of our domestic trade? Our manufactures and agricultural products combined exceed $8,000,000,000, and how often these vast values change hands who can tell? This should receive our first and most earnest attention; the welfare and convenience of this grand hive of active humanity should first of all be consulted by us in the adjustment of this great question.

But it is said that so much silver will eventually drive gold out of the country; that, according to a well-known law of finance, the cheaper metal will drive out the dearer. This is called Gresham's law. If this be true, and if we are in a position where that law is likely to exert its force, why has there not been already some indication of its effects? It has been more than seven years since we resumed the coinage of the silver dollar and made it a full legal tender. During this period the volume of silver coin has swollen from $106,573,803 to $307,658,827 on the 1st of November, 1885. According to the argument of the gold people, that ought to have displaced and driven out of the country at least an equal amount of gold. Strange to say, the very reverse has taken place. On the 1st of January, 1879, but a few months after the passage of the Bland act, the amount of gold and bullion in the country was $278,310,126; on the 1st day of November, 1885, the amount of gold coin and bullion in the country was $586,727,787. It had more than doubled in six years. During the year just past it was silver that went abroad to the extent of $13,835,220 in excess of imports; and it was gold that came in to the extent of $8,397,887 in excess of exports. Here again "the dog it was that died." (See the Comptroller's report, page 63.)

This remarkable exhibit, so confounding to the prophecies of the gold advocates, shows two things conclusively: first, that the addition of the 215,000,000 of silver dollars to our metallic currency was a welcome and much-needed one, since it not only helped to swell the volume of currency and avert contraction, but it has served to attract additional gold; and second, that Gresham's law, which declares that cheap money will drive out dear money, only operates upon that portion of a currency which is not needed and is in excess of the demand of trade. No kind of money which is current at all will leave a country where there is an active demand for it, unless indeed the demand for it elsewhere is much more active. The contraction of bank-note circulation caused by the gradual paying off of our bonds, coupled with the premium on them, has created and will create in the future a demand for specie so great that gold alone cannot supply it; it will require both silver and gold. When we consider our wondrous increase in wealth and population and the shortening supply of the precious metals, especially of gold, it would seem to be the part of wisdom to encourage the use of both.

There can be no danger of too much. In apology for the amount of silver which is held in the Treasury we are told on all sides that it is impossible to force it into circulation; that when it is paid out it invariably finds its way back to the Treasury; and this is considered conclusive proof that the people do not like the money. This is not a fair statement. In the first place, it is a legal tender in the payment of all public debts, and it is well known that silver is not offered to the bond-holding creditors. It is therefore not impossible to force it into circulation. There is certainly a way to pay it out if there was a will to do so. The only way by which silver could find its way back into the Treasury is in the payment of taxes. Now, as the payment of taxes is generally considered to be a compulsory rather than a voluntary operation, it is hardly fair, I submit, to say that a man does not like money because he is compelled to pay it out. But suppose it does come back to the Treasury—what then? My advice is pay it out again, and again, as often as it comes back. That, if I understand anything about it, is the proper use of money.

Mr. President, when we come to reflect upon all that has been done to disparage silver, its defense of itself must be considered the best evidence of its stability that could be offered. It has been assailed in every conceivable direction. It has been stabbed and betrayed in the house of its friends, whose duty it was made by law to protect it. In 1873 it was demonetized because it was worth more than gold and would not circulate; they seek in 1886 to demonetize it because it is worth less than gold and will circulate. The fact that in spite of all these assaults it is only worth 20 per cent. less than gold and that it will still buy as much of the necessaries of life as it ever would, and even as much as gold, is a stronger argument in behalf of its stability and value as a medium of exchange than any I could make. No wonder it is so popular with the people. Perhaps the most unfair treatment which it has received consists in the refusal of the Government to pay it to the public creditors as required by law and contract. The anxiety manifested by our Government to pay these creditors something more than they are entitled to receive has, I will venture to say, never been equaled by that of any other people since nations began to borrow money.

In no other instance in our history, if in this, have our executive officials been vested with the discretion of obeying or disobeying the laws as they may deem proper, and setting at defiance the people's will as expressed through their representatives. I am quite sure that no other country under the sun but ours ever felt itself compelled to borrow money to meet its obligations and complain at the same time that the legal money called for by those obligations was so abundant in its vaults that the care of it was a burden and a nuisance! A slow flash of lightning, or an honest thief, or a truthful liar are all things which may be conceived of—nay, by the aid of a very vivid imagination one may even form an idea of the existence of a sincere believer in civil-service reform; but it is hard, indeed, to imagine a government so rich in coin that it is compelled to borrow money to pay its debts.

Can such things be, and overcome us
Like a summer's cloud?

How long will the American people submit to have their finances controlled by combinations of money? When will they rise and assert their own interests under the beneficent and venerable democratic maxim, "The greatest good to the greatest number?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, in the chair). Will the Senator from North Carolina suspend to allow the Chair to present the regular order for this hour, being the bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes?

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that that bill be informally laid aside until the Senator from North Carolina can conclude his remarks on the pending resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that suggestion? The Chair hears none; and the Senator from North Carolina will proceed.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I have scarcely ever spoken in this Chamber without taking occasion to warn my countrymen against the dangers which were approaching them in the shape of plutocratic rule. The combinations of capital are many, ingenious, and powerful. The aim of all such combinations is the acquisition of wealth. The rights, privileges, and liberties of the people that stand in the way of this object are unhesitatingly sacrificed. Such is the very nature of such a pursuit. The men engaged in them are individually no better and no worse than other men; they only follow their selfish instincts; and they are only more dangerous than other men because they have more power. My opposition arises to them because their interest is opposed to that of the many—the people.

I believe with all my heart in the many ruling the few, and not the few ruling the many. In my opinion one of the very greatest of the many great dangers which threaten the prosperity of our people consists in the very manifest endeavor of the national banks to usurp the entire control of the currency of this country by degrading the money of the people, silver—retiring greenbacks, the money of the Government, and making their own notes the sole circulation of this great Confederation. On this subject I submit the wise and vigorous words of Thomas H. Benton. On the question of private banks of issue he went on to argue the question at length of a bank-paper circulation, and said as follows:

It is too great a power to be trusted to any banking company whatever, or to any authority but the highest and most responsible known to our form of government.

The Government itself ceases to be independent, it ceases to be safe, when the national currency is at the will of a company.

The Government can undertake no great enterprise, neither of war nor peace, without the consent and co-operation of this company; it can not count its revenues for six months ahead without referring to the action of this company—its friendship or its enmity, its convenience or its opposition—to see how far that company will permit money to be scarce or to be plentiful; how far it will let the money system go on regularly or throw it into disorder; how far it will suit the interests or policy of that company to create a tempest or suffer a calm in the moneyed ocean. The people are not safe when such a company has such a power. The temptation is too great, the opportunity too easy to put up and put down prices; to make or break fortunes; to bring the whole community on its knees to the Neptune who presides over the flux and reflux of paper. All property is at their mercy.

The price of real estate, of every growing crop, of every staple article in the market is at their command. Stocks are their playthings, their gambling theater, on which they gamble daily with as little secrecy and as little morality and far more mischief to fortunes than common gamblers carry on their operations.

Mr. President, no reader of history can fail to be impressed with the indispensable necessity of an abundance of the precious metals to the prosperity of our race individually and collectively. Money has in all ages been the chief minister of civilization, the main support of the comfort and happiness of man in the things of time. From the day when Abraham paid for the field of Machpelah with shekels of silver current money with the merchant, and the Prince of Uz spoke of its vein in the rocks; when the Chaldean worshiped the glittering hosts of heaven and the Iranian prophets kindled their sacred fires on the hill-tops of our mother-land to this hour, silver and gold have sustained, fostered, and enriched men and nations, and without them there has been no wealth or art, no power or progress, no might or dominion over either man or nature. Wherever nations had silver and gold, they were superior to those who had them not. Whenever a nation lost its proper supply of them it lost its prosperity and began to decay. The most philosophic of modern historians ascribes the decline and fall of the Roman Empire chiefly to the failure of its supply of gold and silver by the exhaustion of the mines of Greece and Spain, rather than to the commonly accepted causes; and the hard and cruel centuries which followed, called the Dark Ages, owed their hardness and their darkness to the want of the precious metals in quantities sufficient to stimulate the arts and industries of civilization.

In the Augustan Age the amount of gold and silver in use was estimated at $1,800,000,000. By the fifteenth century this had shrunk to $200,000,000. The opening of the New World, with its mines in Mexico and Peru, says the same historian (Allison), changed the face of the world:

The annual supply of the precious metals for the use of the globe was tripled. Before a century had expired the prices of every species of produce had quadrupled. The weight of debt and taxes insensibly wore off under the influence of the prodigious increase; in the renovation of industry the relations of society were changed, the weight of feudalism cast off, the rights of man established.

In England at the close of the Napoleonic wars silver was demonetized by a Parliament elected by the pocket and rotten-borough system, in which the great bulk and heart of the English people were utterly ignored. The ruin, suffering, and despair which ensued for many years are well known to all readers of English history and loudly warn us against a similar crime. In Germany, too, the money-lords took advantage of the receipt of the enormous war indemnity paid by France to secure the demonetization of silver, and from that day to this Germany has been suffering all the horrors of a contracted currency. The loss of the government in the sale of its dishonored silver alone, it is said, has already cost her more than the support of her vast armies, while that is small indeed compared to the losses of her people in the reduction of prices and wages of labor. France, the peculiar country of silver, was not injured half so much by her defeat and grand payment of that indemnity as was Germany by this self-inflicted wound. Even as I speak, the petitions of her peasants and farmers and indebted classes are pouring in upon her Parliament and chancellor to restore silver and save them from ruin. Since that gold policy was adopted we have received at least two millions and a half of her people as emigrants.

So the effect upon the commerce and industry of the world by Californian and Australian gold, within the memory of us all, furnishes another eloquent example of the blessings of abundant money. In the nature of things we can not have too much. There is no time recorded in history when there was more than the energy of man could turn to profit of both metals. The predictions of the money-lords, who have taken the place of the feudal lords in the tyrannical domination of the people, are false and interested. There is not enough of either silver or gold in the world. The decline of silver is the result of their own schemes. If they would work as hard to restore it as they have to degrade it, and if our Government would aid them, it would be worth as much as gold in twelve months, in my opinion. Of one thing, however, you may rest assured, Mr. President: In this country, where the people rule, silver is not going to be destroyed; they see the scheme; they are at last aroused, and those who stand in their way would do well to get out of it. Silver money has stood by them and their fathers, and they and their children will stand by it.

Mr. BROWN. On Thursday last I gave notice that I would ask to be heard on the silver question at 2 o'clock to-day. On account of a severe attack of sore throat and hoarseness I am not able to speak to-day. I shall therefore ask the Senate on Thursday next, at 2 o'clock, to permit me to be heard on that question.

Mr. MAXEY. I give notice that at the conclusion of the speech of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] on Thursday next I shall ask the privilege of the Senate to submit some remarks also on the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLACKBURN in the chair). Will the Senator from Kansas withdraw his motion in order that the Chair may submit to the Senate certain communications from the President?

Mr. INGALLS. For that purpose.

FISHING RIGHTS UNDER TREATY OF WASHINGTON.

The following message from the President of the United States was read, and, with the accompanying papers, on motion of Mr. DAWES, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 5th instant, a report of the Secretary of State, containing all the correspondence and information in the custody of his Department relative to the extension of certain fishing rights and privileges under the treaty of Washington from July 1, 1885, to January 1, 1886.

CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICAN COMMISSION.

The following message from the President of the United States was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In continuation of the message of my predecessor of the 13th of February last, I now transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, which is accompanied by the final report of the commissioners appointed under the act of July 7, 1884, to visit the States of Central and South America.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 12, 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole matter will be referred to the Committee on Printing, if there be no objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was going to suggest a reference to the Committee on Printing, and that the former report and this one ought to be printed together as one document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reference is made.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator from Kansas yields to me to submit an amendment which I propose to offer to the bill (S. 506) for the relief of Emerson Etheridge and William B. Stokes, which I move be laid on the table and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

LIABILITY OF THE UNITED STATES TO CITIZENS.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolutions; which were considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Judiciary Committee be, and they are hereby, directed to consider and report whether or not a statute limiting the time within which all actions and suits must be brought by the United States against its citizens is desirable, and, if in the judgment of the committee such a statute should be passed by Congress, to report a bill for that purpose.

Resolved, That said committee be directed to consider and report to the Senate whether the United States ought to hold itself liable to its citizens sustaining injury and loss on account of the negligence or misconduct of its officers or agents, and, if so, in what cases and to what extent; and that if said committee shall report that the United States ought to be held liable in any case to its citizens for such injury and loss, it be directed to report a bill to define the liability of the Government and to authorize suits to be brought against it in such cases, and specifying the courts in which the same may be brought, the time within which they must be brought, and the manner of bringing and prosecuting the same to final judgment.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. OTHO R. SINGLETON of Mississippi, Mr. WILLIAM L. WILSON of West Virginia, and Mr. WILLIAM WALTER PHELPS of New Jersey as Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. 2) to amend section 643 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 1684) to authorize terms of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern judicial district of North Carolina at the city of Wilmington, in said district; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 76) fixing the time when the pay of certain clerks to committees of the House of Representatives shall begin.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. INGALLS. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 12, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The Journal as read was approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the rule the Chair will lay before the House several executive communications.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of the expenditures on account of the Coast and Geodetic Survey for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES FISCAL YEAR 1882.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a detailed account of the receipts and expenditures of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER also, in accordance with the rule, laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were referred as follows:

A bill (S. 10) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 5352 of the Revised Statutes of the United States in reference to bigamy, and for other purposes," approved March 22, 1882—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 22) for the relief of Martha Murphy and P. B. Murphy—to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (S. 68) for the relief of S. B. Cranston, of Oregon—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 82) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

A bill (S. 141) to extend the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, encitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to the port of Omaha, in the State of Nebraska—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

A bill (S. 208) for the relief of Alexander Swift & Co. and the Niles Works—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 416) for the relief of J. W. Lobban—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 633) to change the name of Uniontown to Anacostia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ACTS OF ARIZONA TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER also, in accordance with the statute, laid before the House a copy of the acts of the Legislature of the Territory of Arizona; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories.

UNINDORSED PETITIONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of members of the House to the fact that quite a number of petitions and memorials have been sent to the petition-box without any indorsement upon them showing either the name of the member introducing them or the committee to which they should be referred. The clerks of the House are unable to dispose of them in making up the Journal and the Official Reporters can not properly insert them in the RECORD. If gentlemen will examine and see that they are properly indorsed the clerks can dispose of them.

REGENTS SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of the following Regents of the Smithsonian Institution for the ensuing year, namely: OTHO R. SINGLETON of Mississippi, WILLIAM L. WILSON of West Virginia, and WILLIAM WALTER PHELPS of New Jersey.

SALARY OF PER DIEM CLERKS.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent to present a joint resolution from the Committee on Accounts, and ask its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections to its consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 76) fixing the time when the pay of certain clerks to committees of the House of Representatives shall begin.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the pay of the clerks to committees of the House of Representatives, which have been or may be hereafter authorized by the House, who are paid during the session only, shall begin from the time that such clerks entered upon the discharge of their duties, which shall be ascertained and evidenced by the certificate of the chairmen of the several committees employing clerks for the session only.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASSIGNMENT OF COMMITTEE CLERKS.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. DOCKERY of January 5, 1886, "that the Committee on Accounts be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to designate the committees which, in the judgment of the said committee, should be allowed clerks for the present Congress under the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill for the year ending June 30, 1886, and report to the House without delay for its action thereon," respectfully submit the following report, and ask its adoption by the House.

The thirty-one clerks provided for in the bill referred to in the above resolution are distributed according to the appended schedule, to wit:

To the Committee on Elections, a clerk; to the Committee on Banking and Currency, a clerk; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, a clerk; to the Committee on the Territories, a clerk; to the Committee on Railways and Canals, a clerk; to the Committee on Manufactures, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Select Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic; to the Committee on Mines and Mining, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on the Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings; to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, a clerk; to the Committee on Education, a clerk; to the Committee on Labor, a clerk; to the Committee on the Militia, a clerk; to the Committee on Patents, a clerk; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, two assistant clerks; to the Committee on Pensions, a clerk; to the Committee on Private Land Claims, a clerk; to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice; to the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department, a clerk; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, a clerk; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, a clerk; to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, a clerk; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department, a clerk; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, a clerk; to the Committee on Accounts, a clerk; to the Joint Committee on the Library, a clerk; to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, a clerk; to the Select Committee on Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests, a clerk; to the Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President, a clerk, who shall also act as clerk to the Select Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics; to the Committee on Enrolled Bills, a clerk; to the Committee on Printing, a clerk.

Mr. SPRIGGS. The act allows thirty-one committee clerks, and we had thirty-three committees to which to designate them, besides providing for two assistant clerks to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. In doing this the committee gave the matter full consideration, and we have done what we think best calculated to promote the business of the House, and I trust it will be satisfactory to gentlemen on the floor. I call the previous question on the adoption of the report.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report was adopted.

Mr. SPRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MILLS. I ask that the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. PAYSON, be excused from attendance upon the House to-day, on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KING for three days, on account of important business.

SAMUEL E. BRYANT.

Mr. SCRANTON. On the 7th instant I introduced a bill (H. R. 2124) for the relief of Samuel E. Bryant. That bill has been improperly referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I ask that it be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on War Claims. It is for his pay as second lieutenant.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the bill and cause the correction to be made, if it ought to be made.

TIMOTHY M'CORMICK.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. On yesterday I introduced a bill (H. R. 3535) for the relief of Timothy McCormick. It was referred to the Committee on Claims. It is a bill to compensate for depredations committed by Indians, and in the last Congress a bill identical with this was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The reference of such a bill depends on whether the compensation comes out of the public Treasury or out of the Indian fund.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. In this case it comes out of the Indian fund.

The SPEAKER. Then the bill should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Chair will cause the correction to be made.

RAILROAD MAIL TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. BURROWS. I rise to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report back with a favorable recommendation a resolution requesting information of the Postmaster-General as to changes in the law regulating compensation of railway companies for carrying the mails.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House, if not incompatible with the public interest, what, if any, changes should be made in the law regulating the compensation to railway companies for carrying the mails, and if any additional authority or facilities are necessary to enable him to make a thorough and satisfactory examination of this subject; and he is also requested to inform this House what means will be required for that purpose.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. BURROWS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the Chair will now proceed to call the committees for reports.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. MORRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report the resolution which I send to the desk for the distribution of the President's message, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Unless there is a demand for it the reading may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the reading of the resolution will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

The resolution is as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress at the present session as relates to our foreign affairs, including appropriations therefor, together with the accompanying correspondence and documents; the claims of our citizens against the Colombian Government for losses arising out of the destruction of Aspinwall by the insurrectionary forces; the question of the adverse claims of the Argentine Government for indemnity for the loss of the Falkland Islands; the questions of isthmian transit by canal or railway; the laws regarding Chinese immigration; relating to the independent State of Congo and the Congo Basin; the new treaty power, Corea; the British-American fisheries; the relocation of our boundary lines with Mexico and British Columbia; the reorganization of our consular and diplomatic service, and the question of the acquirement of premises in foreign countries for the housing of our legations be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the public debt and the public revenues, to the national finances, to the revenue provisions of the treaties with Mexico and Turkey and other countries, the commercial relations with foreign countries having connection with revenue questions, to a provision for a revenue by duties on imports or excise, to the present wants and condition of the Treasury be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the appropriation and expenditure of the public moneys for the support of the Government, i. e., for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses, for sundry civil expenses, for fortifications, for the District of Columbia, for pensions, and for all deficiencies be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the judiciary of the United States, to legislation touching citizenship and naturalization, the suppression of polygamy, the enactment of a statute of limitations barring claims against the Government, the question of international copyright, and the reorganization of the Department of Justice be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the currency and to national banking associations be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the coinage and the mints of the United States be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the regulation of interstate commerce and the regulation of international commerce be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the improvement of rivers and harbors, including appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Resolved, That so much as relates to agriculture, including appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the Army of the United States and to the Department of War, including appropriations therefor and to providing an armament for the defense on the seacoast, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the Navy of the United States and the reconstruction of our naval establishment, including appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Resolved, That so much as relates to postal affairs, including appropriations therefor and to the reduction of rates, be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the public domain and legislation to prevent frauds and revive the homestead policy in the disposal of our public lands be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the care, education, and management of the Indians, including appropriations therefor, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the organization and government of the Territories be referred to the Committee on the Territories.

Resolved, That so much as relates to the care and improvement of public buildings and grounds be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Resolved, That so much as relates to patents be referred to the Committee on Patents.

PRINTING FOR APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to have printed or bound all documents for the use of the said committee that they may deem necessary in connection with the subject in relation to appropriations being considered or to be considered by the said committee during the present Congress.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It ought to be adopted at once, ought it not?

The SPEAKER. It can not be adopted under this call.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 3253) to amend section 1090 of the Revised Statutes relating to interest on judgments rendered by the Court of Claims; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The Committee on Territories was called.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will ask permission for the chairman of the Committee on Territories to make a report at the end of the call. The bill has been temporarily mislaid.

There was no objection.

RHODA DANE.

Mr. MATSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H R. 551) granting a pension to Rhoda Dane; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM B. KEITH.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 693) granting a pension to William B. Keith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. M. A. BICKERDYKE.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 700) granting a pension to Mrs. M. A. Bickerdyke; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PHILIP D. CAMPBELL.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 698) granting a pension to Philip D. Campbell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely the following bills; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 680) granting a pension to Rebecca S. Lowery, guardian;
A bill (H. R. 744) granting a pension to Holden Cook;
A bill (H. R. 684) granting a pension to James Dye;
A bill (H. R. 683) for the relief of Robert H. Hughes; and A bill (H. R. 675) for the relief of Samuel Henry.

JOHN P. DAVIS.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 1468) increasing the pension of John P. Davis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARET FLAHERTY.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1475) granting a pension to Margaret Flaherty; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 203) for the relief of Thomas Butler, and moved that the Committee on Invalid Pensions be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

THOMAS M. COMMUCK.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 646) granting a pension to Thomas M. Commuck; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL B. CLARK.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 414) granting a pension to Daniel B. Clark; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ASCERTAINMENT OF FACTS IN PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back, with the recommendation that it be adopted, the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the House Calendar:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of passing general laws for the ascertainment of the facts in all private measures by some judicial tribunal before action by Congress; and also the propriety of prohibiting the adjudication of private claims or relief measures by Congress, with power to report by bill or otherwise.

WAR CLAIMS.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 989) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

C. M. BRIGGS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 3828) for the relief of the estate of C. M. Briggs, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

FRANCES E. STEWART, ADMINISTRATRIX.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 3829) for the relief of Frances E. Stewart, administratrix of Michael S. Stewart, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH W. PARISH.

Mr. LYMAN, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 3830) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

WYOMING TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Territories, reported back favorably a bill (S. 602) to legalize the election of the Territorial Legislative Assembly of Wyoming; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President, reported back without amendment the bill (S. 471) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. COOPER. Differing from the majority in reference to this report, I desire consent to submit a minority report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] asks consent to present the views of a minority of the committee, to be printed with those of the majority.

Mr. CALDWELL. There is no objection to that.

Mr. COOPER. I understood there would not be.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, leave will be granted.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it now in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the President's annual message?

The SPEAKER. The Chair inclines to think that under the rules, even as amended, it is in order at the expiration of the first morning hour to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider revenue or general appropriation bills, but that a motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union generally can not be made until after the committees have been called, in the second hour provided for by the new rules, for the consideration of measures previously reported.

Mr. REAGAN. I give notice that I desire to make the motion whenever it may be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in accordance with the rules, will now call the committees for the consideration of bills, after which the motion indicated by the gentleman from Texas will be in order. The Chair will state that during the hour now about to begin each committee as reached will have the right to call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day. The call begins at seventeen minutes before 1 o'clock.

REMOVAL OF PROSECUTIONS FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. HAMMOND (the Committee on the Judiciary having been called). Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of our committee [Mr. TUCKER] is not now in his seat I desire to call up from the House Calendar a bill reported yesterday from that committee, the bill (H. R. 2) to amend section 643 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the question of consideration may be raised if any gentleman so desires.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 643 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended by inserting therein, after the word "void," in the fourth sentence thereof, the following:

"Provided, however, That when any criminal prosecution shall be removed from a State court to a United States court before a presentment by a grand jury or indictment shall have been made and filed against the defendants in the State court, it shall be lawful for the State court to proceed in such case so far as to have such presentment or indictment made and filed in said State court; and after the same is so made and filed the clerk of the United States court shall issue a writ of certiorari to the State court for like purposes and with like effect as if the case had been so removed after such presentment or indictment was made and filed in such State court."

Mr. HAMMOND. Unless some one desires to discuss this bill, which has received the favorable consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary not only in this House but in the last, I will not occupy time upon it, but will simply ask for the reading of the report, which covers only one page, and states the reasons upon which the bill is based.

The report (by Mr. HAMMOND) was read, as follows:

"The Committee on the Judiciary, having had the subject under consideration, submit the following report:

"Section 643 of the Revised Statutes of the United States has for its basis the act of March 2, 1833, 'An act further to provide for the collection of duties on imports' (U. S. Stat., vol. 4, p. 632). It provided for the removal of actions in State courts against revenue officers on petition, &c., of defendent to circuit court. It declared that when the required proceedings had been had by filing affidavit, &c., 'thereupon it shall be the duty of the said State court to stay all further proceedings in such cause and the said suit of prosecution, upon delivery of such process [from the United States court] or leaving the same as aforesaid, shall be deemed and taken to be removed to the said circuit court, and any further proceedings, trial, or judgment therein in the State court shall be wholly null and void.'

"By acts of July 13, 1866 (U. S. Stat., vol. 14, p. 171), February 28, 1871 (U. S. Stat., vol. 16, p. 438), and March 3, 1875 (U. S. Stat., vol. 18, p. 401), the act was so amended that the law now covers 'removal of suits and prosecutions against revenue officers and officers acting under registration laws.'

"The language of the act of 1833 above quoted is still the language of section 643. The bill under consideration proposes after said sentence to add these words:

"'Provided, however, That when any criminal prosecution shall be removed from a State court to a United States court before a presentment by a grand jury or indictment shall have been made and filed against the defendants in the State court, it shall be lawful for the State courts to proceed in such case so far as to have such presentment or indictment made and filed in said State; and after the same is so made and filed, the clerk of the United States court shall issue a writ of certiorari to the State court, for like purposes and with like effect as if the case had been so removed after such presentment or indictment was made and filed in such State court.'

"The judges of the United States courts have differed as to the construction of the clause of the act of 1833 and section 643, above quoted. Some have held that no removal could be had under the same until there was a case made by presentment or indictment and its filing in the office of clerk of a court of record, upon whom service could be made, and who could certify and send up such record.

"On the other hand, it has been held that a removal may be had when naught had been done by the State authorities except the issuance of a warrant for arrest by some committing magistrate. In many States these magistrates have no clerk and keep no record.

"If that trouble be out of the way when a removal occurs at that stage of affairs, the State courts are enjoined from further proceedings, and the case is between the two jurisdictions suspended.

"Who shall draw the indictment in the United States court? The United States attorney then is, by the statute, made the defendants' counsel. Can the grand jury of the United States court find a presentment or true bill for a State offense? That would seem to require express grant of authority at least.

"If the United States grand jury can so act it is more expensive to take witnesses to them than to the courts of the State and county in which the crime is alleged to have been committed, and let them determine whether the defendants should be put upon trial. Without deciding which of the two constructions of the act is correct, it seeming sufficient that the offered protection of the United States should attach only after formal and more serious charge of a crime, we recommend the passage of the bill."

The above is a copy of a report made from the Judiciary Committee of the House in the last Congress. (See Report No. —, first session Forty-eighth Congress.)

The committee again recommends the passage of the bill after it shall be amended by adding the words "or information" after the word "indictment," in lines 9 and 12. This amendment is to meet those cases less than felonies in which in some of the States the practice is to prosecute by informations.

Mr. HAMMOND. As I have already remarked, unless some one desires to oppose this bill I do not care to occupy time in discussing it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If I understand this measure correctly I do not desire to oppose it; but I would like to ask a question for information. If we have understood the report correctly the bill simply proposes to permit the State court to perfect the prosecution, allowing that tribunal to retain jurisdiction of the cause until the charge is crystallized into either indictment or presentment, and then send the whole case to the United States court.

Mr. HAMMOND. That is all.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I confess it has always seemed to me an anomaly to allow the grand jury of a United States court to find an indictment for a violation of a State statute. With my understanding of this bill I see no reason why it should not be passed.

Mr. HAMMOND. I suppose no further discussion on this bill need be had, and therefore I call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The first question was upon the amendment recommended by the committee, to insert after the word "indictment," in lines 9 and 12, the words "or information."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TERMS OF CIRCUIT COURT, WILMINGTON, N. C.

Mr. BENNETT. On behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1684) to authorize terms of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern judicial district of North Carolina at the city of Wilmington, in said district.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That terms of the circuit court of the United States for the eastern judicial district of the State of North Carolina shall be held at the city of Wilmington, in said district, at the times now fixed by law for holding the terms of the district court of the United States at said place.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Mr. BENNETT. I do not desire to discuss this bill. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, and is one of purely local concern.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BENNETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. REAGAN. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the President's message.

Mr. MORRISON. Only this morning a resolution was reported from the Committee on Ways and Means for the distribution of the President's message to the appropriate committees of the House. It has not been usual, at least not in recent years, to discuss the various recommendations of the President made to us in obedience to his constitutional obligation to recommend for the consideration of Congress "such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient" until those recommendations were presented for legislative action by bill or otherwise.

Mr. REAGAN. Let me interrupt the gentleman from Illinois by inquiring of the Speaker whether discussion is in order on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I must object.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask the gentleman from Texas to defer the discussion of the President's message until its recommendations come before the House in some legislative proposition. This is the usual course of proceeding, and I am not aware of any reason for departing from it, nor any justification for such departure.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union generally. That is the only motion which can be made under the rules.

The question was put to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to decide.

Mr. REAGAN. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 90, noes 44.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union generally, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, availing myself of the latitude of debate allowed in Committee of the Whole, I propose now to offer some remarks on a question of great interest to our people.

THE ISSUE.

The controversy about silver coinage is a contest between the bondholders, bankers, money-lenders, and those having fixed incomes on the one side, and the laborers, middle classes, and debtors of the world on the other side.

Those who desire the demonetization of silver are fraudulently endeavoring to have this done in violation of existing law and contracts in order to further enrich themselves at the expense of other people, while the working people who have to earn the means to pay all public indebtedness, the middle classes who live upon their current earnings, and the debtor class generally, ask only that they be allowed to pay all debts, public and private, according to the law and the contracts under which they were created. It is, therefore, a contest between dishonesty and honesty, between fraud and fairness, between wrong and right. And the great question involved is, which of these shall be the rule by which the people of this great free Republic are to be governed.

The rich moneyed men first conspired to degrade silver as compared with gold, and having accomplished this part of their wicked scheme for doing away with silver coin and thereby reducing the values of property and labor, doubling the value of all evidences of debt, and doubling the amount of labor of the working men and women of the country which would be required to pay these debts—the same men then turn to the people and tell them they are injured by the use of silver coin, that the value of their labor is reduced by the fact that the standard silver dollar is not the equivalent of 100 cents in gold, and that to restore to them profitable wages and good prices they must join in the crusade against silver and help to strike it out of existence as a part of the world's metal money.

I know of no writer on political economy who does not maintain that a liberal amount of circulating money is essential to the prosperity of a country. I know of none who do not insist that an inadequate amount of circulating money checks enterprise and impoverishes the people. These two propositions may be accepted as axiomatic truths, questioned by no one but the selfish and greedy gold-monometallists and their hired or deluded advocates, who have the unblushing effrontery to tell the people they will be made better off by reducing the present volume of our money, because then the smaller sum of money will be worth more than the larger, and that their smaller wages will buy more in the markets. These men, who by their selfishness and greed deceive themselves, are engaged in the unpatriotic, insincere, and unjust effort to deceive the people into the belief that they will be benefited by a policy which would double the labor they must perform, in order to pay off the many billions of dollars of national, State, municipal, corporate and private indebtedness of the country. It is the old trick of the demagogues—no longer to be successful with the intelligent people of this country—to try to lull them into a sense of security by professing devotion to their interest, in order the more certainly and securely to be enabled to rob and degrade them.

The action of Germany displays the animus, the motive of those who seek to do away with silver money. In 1857, on account of the very large amount of gold which had been taken in the few preceding years from the mines of California and Australia, gold had become more abundant and relatively cheaper than silver, and the bondholders, money-lenders, and bankers of Germany and Austria induced those governments to demonetize gold and to adopt the silver standard, because that was the scarcer and dearer metal. Afterward, when those mines ceased to yield so much gold, and when the mines of the United States began to yield silver in greater abundance than gold, making gold the scarcer and dearer money, Germany then demonetized silver, in 1871, and adopted the gold standard, each time seeking by a reduction of the volume of money to increase the value of their securities and the value of their money as compared with other property.

I speak of the effort to demonetize silver, because that is the real object of this movement. The fear that this can not be accomplished has caused them to declare now for a suspension of silver coinage. And this is no doubt what the President and the Secretary of the Treasury really desire. But the men who are controlling and giving life to this movement mean to do away with silver as money. And either the suspension of the coinage or the increase of the weight of the dollar, though not at once meeting their wishes, would still further degrade silver and give them a better opportunity to secure its complete demonetization hereafter.

We should continue silver coinage and preserve our bimetallic standard, too, as one of the means of increasing our trade and of controlling a larger part of the commerce of the silver countries of Mexico and Central and South America. We should in this respect have an American policy and not be courting the privilege of making this country a mere appendage and help to British and German policy.

ITS MAGNITUDE.

This is more than a national question. It involves the interests of all commercial nations, of all civilized peoples. This is so because gold and silver have through all the ages been recognized as the money of the world, the only international money. Many nations have had bank notes and other kinds of paper money current within the countries which authorized its issue, but not current in other countries, and therefore properly designated as local money, as contradistinguished from the world's money—gold and silver. These are recognized as the world's money not because all commodities are paid for in coin, not because all exchanges of commodities are made by the aid of gold and silver, but because these measure the value of all other money in transactions between different countries and nationalities. The value of all exchange between different countries is determined mainly by the amount of metal money available for commercial use, and the value of all local paper money is largely controlled by the amount of metal money.

We can better understand the magnitude of this question by keeping in view some important facts. The national debts of the world are alleged to amount to over $24,000,000,000, and they are steadily and rapidly increasing. The debts of the railroad companies are estimated to amount to about $6,000,000,000; the debts of states, municipalities, &c., to about $5,000,000,000—aggregating $35,000,000,000. The private indebtedness of the world would probably be the double of this sum. The amount of metal money in the world is estimated to be about $7,000,000,000. The following table, furnished to me by Mr. Burchard, the Director of the Mint, on the 20th of June last, shows the estimated amount of gold and silver coin and bullion in the countries named. I have added the aggregates of these sums:

Countries.	Gold coin and bullion.	Silver coin and bullion.	Total.
United States	$626,422,646	$269,665,758	$896,088,404
Great Britain and Ireland	583,500,000	95,000,000	678,500,000
India		1,037,000,000	1,037,000,000
France	848,000,000	595,000,000	1,443,000,000
Belgium	64,000,000	60,000,000	124,060,000
Switzerland	17,000,000	15,000,000	32,000,000
Italy	140,000,000	72,000,000	212,000,000

Spain	130,000,000	70,000,000	200,000,000
Portugal	30,000,000	10,000,000	40,000,000
Germany	325,000,000	211,000,000	536,000,000
Austria	45,000,000	75,000,000	120,000,000
Sweden	15,000,000	5,000,000	20,000,000
Denmark	14,000,000	5,000,000	19,000,000
Netherlands	28,000,000	57,000,000	85,000,000
Russia	124,000,000		124,000,000
Turkey	40,000,000	35,000,000	75,000,000
Roumania	163,000	11,000,000	11,163,000
Total	3,032,785,646	2,625,365,758	5,658,151,404

Notwithstanding the existence of these great facts, if we were obliged to belive the statements and arguments of the gold men of this country we should be driven to suppose silver to be an evil thing in our country and throughout the world, and that it is especially discredited in the commercial countries of Europe.

The Director of the Mint, in his annual report now before us, shows on the authority of our foreign ministers that in Great Britain and Ireland, with their $580,500,000 in gold, their $95,000,000 silver, and their $199,160,115 of outstanding bank notes, all are taken in business transactions at par; that in France, with her $848,000,000 of gold, $595,000,000 of silver, and her $574,675,197 of outstanding notes of the Bank of France, the gold and silver and notes of the Bank of France are at par and a legal tender; that in Belgium, with her $64,000,000 of gold, $60,000,000 of silver, and $89,000 in national-bank notes, they are at par with each other; that in Switzerland, with her $17,000,000 of gold, $15,000,000 of silver, and $24,960,304 of bank notes, they are at par with each other; that in Spain, with her $130,000,000 of gold, $70,000,000 of silver, and $4,737,538 in notes of the Bank of Spain, "gold, silver, and the notes of the Bank of Spain are at par;" that in Germany, with her $325,000,000 of gold, $211,000,000 of silver, $33,602,327 in government notes, and $252,655,564 in bank notes, the coin and paper are received indiscriminately at par; that in Austria-Hungary, with her $45,000,000 of gold, $75,000,000 of silver, $139,211,632 in government notes, and $147,659,937 in bank notes, "the notes are received at par with silver. Gold is used for trade purposes, and only on special agreement." In Denmark, with her $14,000,000 of gold, her $5,000,000 of silver, $3,752,000 notes of her silver bank, and $19,564,000 outstanding national-bank notes, "the gold and silver coin, as well as the notes of the national bank, are taken at par." In the Netherlands, with her $28,000,000 of gold, $57,000,000 of silver, $3,885,860 in government notes, and $77,790,254 in bank notes, "coin and paper money have the same value in circulation."

The foregoing table and the facts just presented enable us to understand the injury to mankind which must result from the degradation or abandonment of silver as money.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his recent annual report states that about 54 per cent. of the world's metal money is silver, and that about 46 per cent. is gold. If these estimates are to be relied on (and they are certainly accurate enough for the illustration I have in view), then there is in the world $3,780,000,000 of silver money and $3,220,000,000 of gold money. Now, the values of commodities and of all bonds and other securities are regulated and controlled by the amount of this money of the world. If we subtract the silver from the amount of metal money in the world, we shall therefore have but $3,220,000,000 by which to measure all values and all debts. The result must be that all bonds and securities, national, State, municipal, and corporate, will be about doubled in value as compared with the labor and property out of which they are to be paid, and all labor and property would be reduced about one-half in value. And it should be constantly kept in mind that all these debts are to be paid and can only be paid by labor, by the toil of men and women.

We can not realize what the amount of the world's debts are by looking at the aggregates. The human mind can not embrace their full meaning. We must adopt some mode of looking at the details in order to understand what such figures mean. Take the $35,000,000,000 of indebtedness above mentioned and imagine one man set to count it dollar by dollar and that he could count $60 per minute, $3,600 per hour, $28,800 per day of eight hours, and three hundred and ten working days in the year, it would require three thousand five hundred and twenty-five years and a fraction for him to count that sum.

The creditors of these enormous sums seek to double the value of their investments by the demonetization of silver. It is a quality of greed and avarice to overreach themselves. If they could succeed in doubling the amount of labor and property necessary to pay these debts, they would render their full payment impossible in the present condition of the world.

Great Britain, France, Germany, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, and Sweden are the great creditor nations. The United States, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Italy, Spain, Turkey, India, Egypt, Mexico, Brazil, and the other South American states, and the British colonies are the great debtor nations of the world. Many of these nations, especially those of Europe and Asia, have vast standing armies and great navies, which it taxes all their resources to their utmost to keep up. Indeed, Spain, Italy, Austria-Hungary, Russia, Turkey, and Egypt are only able to keep up their armies and navies by borrowing more money and incurring additional debts. And their people are oppressed and kept in that ignorance which springs from toil and poverty to feed and clothe these armies and in paying the interest on present debts, without the hope of being able to reduce the burden by paying off the principal. If these cormorants were as wise as they are avaricious they would see that the success of their policy in demonetizing silver would defeat the payment of these debts, and would in all human probability produce a degree of oppression and distress in many of these countries which would cause civil commotions likely to shake many thrones and hurl ruling dynasties from power. And if they could succeed in this country, the distress which would necessarily follow would cause an indignant and outraged people to drive the men who brought it about from place and from power. While the people of the monarchies of the Old World may be compelled by vast standing armies to submit to robbery by the capitalists, the gold monometallists of this country would do well to remember that ours are still a free and intelligent people, who will not consent to become the slaves of avaricious, mercenary, and corrupt men.

WHO BENEFITED AND WHO INJURED BY SUCH A POLICY.

The effect of the demonetization of silver would be to benefit a few rich men and to impoverish and degrade the vast mass of the laboring and middle classes of the people—to make a few more millionaires and a vast increase of the army of tramps and paupers. It would especially benefit the rich capitalists of Great Britain, Germany, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Portugal, which are creditor nations and gold-standard countries, and still further oppress the laboring poor of those countries. It would greatly injure the interests of the people generally of the United States, Colombia, Venezuela, Chili, Uruguay, Paraguay, Greece, Holland, Belgium, France, Switzerland, Italy, Spain, and Japan, most of them debtor nations and all of them bimetallic gold and silver standard countries, and of Russia, Austria, Egypt, British India, Mexico, Central America, Ecuador, and Peru, most of them debtor nations and all silver-standard countries.

It should be mentioned that the population of the countries which have the gold standard alone amounts to but about 93,000,000. The population of the countries which have the bimetallic gold and silver standard amounts to over 187,000,000, while the population of the countries which have the silver standard alone amounts to about 769,000,000.

The gold monometallists insult decency and defy common sense by insisting that laboring men and women are to be benefited by imposing on them the necessity of doing twice as much work as the law now requires them to do in order to pay off all public, municipal, corporate, and private indebtedness.

FALSE PRETENSES.

The gold men pretend that our silver dollar is not full weight, that it is a cut dollar, that it is a dishonest dollar, and therefore wrongly imposed on the people. One answer to this is, that it has the same amount of fine silver in it that has been in the American silver dollar from 1792 to this time, ninety-three years. Another answer is, that the purchasing power of the silver dollar is now about 25 per cent. greater than it was in 1870, when it was above par with gold, as is shown by the following table, which I copy from the recent speech of Senator BECK, of Kentucky, on the silver question:

The difference between the price of gold and silver is the result of the conspiracy between bondholders and bankers and the legislative and administrative departments of this and other governments for several years past to increase the value of gold and to degrade silver for selfish and mercenary purposes.

Another false pretense is, that silver can not be put in circulation and has to be hoarded in the national Treasury. It is hoarded there to some extent because the Secretaries of the Treasury from 1878 until now have, in violation of law, refused to treat it as money and to pay it out to the public creditors and in this way put it in circulation. But let us look further at this. We are told by the President and by the Secretary of the Treasury that there has been $215,000,000 of silver coined up to date; that $50,000,000 of this is in circulation in the form of coin; that $93,000,000 is in circulation in the form of silver certificates. This is a convenient form for its circulation, prevents loss from abrasion, and gives the people at large the benefit of all certificates lost or destroyed. That leaves in the vaults of the Treasury and out of circulation $72,000,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury shows in his report, page 13, that there was on the 1st of November, 1885, in gold in the Treasury the sum of $142,338,589.29. Now, we have heard no complaint from the gold men about the hoarding of this large sum of gold in the Treasury. He also shows that the available assets in the Treasury at that time, excluding fractional coin and other unavailable items, is $259,437,431.25. Fifty million dollars, it is believed, would be a sufficient reserve, coupled with the incoming revenue, to meet the current expenses of the Government. That sum taken from the available revenue would leave $166,849,695.74 available for the payment of the public debt. Why should we not extinguish that amount of the public debt and relieve the people of the burden of paying the interest on that sum and at the same time throw that large sum of money into circulation to give increased activity to production and to business, and thus stimulate and give fuller reward to industry and enterprise. I undertake to say we do not do this because it is to the interest of the national banks to prevent the payment of the public debt, and they have so far controlled the policy of the Government in this respect; thus sacrificing the best interests of the country and of the people, whose labor creates its wealth, to furnish bonds as a basis for banking and to gratify the inordinate greed of a rich class of consumers who create nothing.

It may be said as a partial answer to this, that the law of 1875 and of 1882 has set apart $100,000,000 in the Treasury for the redemption of the outstanding legal-tender (greenback) notes. If that law is to continue to encumber our statute-books, we would then, on the basis I have suggested, only have $66,849,695.74 available for the payment of the public debt. The payment of this sum, however, would reduce considerably the public burdens and give greatly increased activity to business and enterprise.

In 1878 Congress deliberately determined to preserve the $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes as a part of the volume of our currency, as a means of preventing hard times and to revive the business of the country and restore its prosperity. And we all know it had this effect. This was certainly better for all interests than to have reduced the volume of the currency by that sum and to have converted it into an interest-bearing bonded debt, which the stock-gamblers, bankers, and bondholders aimed to do.

The country has not yet forgotten the recklessness with which the national banks at that time contracted the volume of the currency nearly $19,000,000 in a few weeks, in order to try to intimidate Congress and the President and prevent the passage of the act of February 28, 1878, "to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character," and to prevent the passage of the act of May 28, 1878, "to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes." Their unpatriotic and selfish conduct on that occasion ought to have caused the gradual abandonment of the national banking system; and their persistent selfishness and hostility to the public welfare and the fact that they have made themselves a political power dangerous to the public still cry out for their suppression. They would have produced a financial panic at that time if it had not been prevented by the Secretary of the Treasury putting a considerable amount of money in circulation by the purchase of Government bonds in the New York market.

To this, I am aware, it may be objected that the national banks furnish a good currency, current in all parts of the country alike, and that the public interests would not be consulted by the disturbance of business and by the retirement of so much currency from circulation.

These objections may be easily and advantageously met and overcome by providing by law that there shall be no increase of the national-bank circulation; that no others shall be chartered; that as the charters of existing banks expire, and as their currency is called in and retired, Treasury notes of the United States to an equal amount shall take the place of their notes. The change would thus be made without a single jar to business, and the substituted Treasury notes would be of exactly the same nature and quality and would answer exactly the same purposes as the national-bank notes. They would not be a legal tender, and the national-bank notes are not; they would be a first-class commercial paper, and current alike in all parts of the country as the national-bank notes are; they should be made redeemable in coin at the will of the bill-holder as the national-bank notes are.

The national banks showed us by their contraction of the volume of the currency in 1878 their readiness to use the power of contraction for an immoral and dishonest purpose; and we are now fully warned that they may be expected, as long as they have the power to control the volume of the currency, to use that power to control legislation and to raise and lower the prices of staple articles of commerce, such as cotton, wheat, and flour, meats, iron, and steel, cotton and woolen goods, petroleum, &c., or to make corners on them, to enrich themselves and their confederates. By abolishing this system we would be relieved from the danger of a political power which is trying to control in its own interest the currency question; is hostile to the interest of the people; is aiming, in its own interest and against the interests of the country, to perpetuate the public debt and make it an endless burden on the people. These dangers ought to be removed by doing away with the system.

In 1878, when the bill was passed providing for the coinage of silver dollars and making them a legal tender, we were warned in awfully solemn terms by bondholders and bankers, and by newspapers and members of Congress who represented their interests, that the coinage of silver would drive the gold out of the country and produce at an early day most fearful financial distress and disasters. These dismal predictions have from time to time been repeated ever since by the same persons. These direful prophecies have gone on for eight years. I present a table furnished me by the acting director of the Mint showing the amounts of gold coin and bullion and the amounts of silver coin and bullion exported and the amounts imported during the fiscal years 1878 to 1885, inclusive, as furnishing a conclusive answer to this scarecrow declamation.

Imports and exports of coin and bullion into United States.

Fiscal years.	Imports of gold coin and bullion.	Exports of gold coin and bullion.	Imports of silver coin and bullion.	Exports of silver coin and bullion.
1878	$12,976,281	$9,204,455	$16,490,599	$24,535,670
1879	5,624,948	4,587,614	14,671,052	20,409,827
1880	80,758,396	3,639,025	12,275,914	13,503,894
1881	100,031,259	2,565,132	10,544,238	16,841,715
1882	34,377,054	32,587,880	8,095,336	16,829,599
1883	17,734,149	11,600,888	10,692,242	20,219,445
1884	22,831,317	41,081,957	14,594,945	26,051,426
1885	26,691,696	8,477,892	16,550,627	33,753,633
	301,025,100	113,744,843	103,914,953	172,145,209

From this it will be seen that during this period, covering the whole time since the coinage of standard silver dollars was resumed in 1878, we have imported $301,025,100 in gold and exported $113,744,843 in gold, showing that during this period we have imported into the country $187,280,257 in gold more than we have exported from the country. This table also shows that during that period we have exported $103,914,843 in silver, and that during the same time we have imported $172,145,209 in silver, showing that in this time we have exported from the country $31,769,745 in silver more than we have imported into it. This I submit fully explodes this stock argument of the gold monometallists.

Another of the bugaboos which these money-sharks and their representatives have used to frighten us into gold monometallism was that Europe would dump all her depreciated silver into this country and in exchange take our gold out of the country. This table is a full answer of fact to that theoretic scare-crow. During the last fiscal year we imported $26,691,696 in gold and exported $8,477,843 in gold, showing that during the last year $18,213,853 more in gold was brought into the country than was taken out; and that during the same year $16,550,953 in silver was imported and $33,753,633 in silver was exported, thus showing that $17,202,680 more of silver was sent out of the country during that year than was brought into the country.

Now that the theory that silver coinage would drive the gold out of the country has been so conclusively exploded, the representatives of the bondholders and bankers tell us that our Treasury reserve is going to be changed from gold to silver. It will be observed that their fears, the dangers they predict, the evils they say are to befall the country, are always going to happen on account of some undeveloped thing which is to occur hereafter, not because of facts which do actually exist. They argue as if we were obliged to have either a gold standard and a gold Treasury reserve or a silver standard and a silver Treasury reserve. In fact, we ought to have neither, and instead of either we ought to have the double standard of gold and silver, and a Treasury reserve of gold and silver, just as we now have.

How are the gold monometallists going to reconcile these potent official facts with their theory that silver is driving or will drive gold out of the country? So long as the balance of trade is in our favor gold will flow into the country; when the balance of trade shall be against us, both gold and silver will go out of the country.

I submit the following table, furnished me by Mr. Burchard, Director of the Mint, on the 20th June last, to show the annual increase of gold in the United States from the 1st of January, 1878, the year in which we recommenced the coinage of silver dollars, to the 1st of January, 1885. I have not been able to obtain the amount to the 1st of January, 1886. It also shows the relative amount of gold and silver each year, and the amounts in the United States Treasury and in circulation. And in another and conspicuous form it overthrows the theory that silver is driving gold out of the country. I prefer to illustrate my arguments by great, authenticated facts like those shown by these tables rather than by false though ingenious theories, which sometimes amuse and often deceive us.

THE DANGERS OF BRITISH AND GERMAN EXAMPLES.

We are asked to follow the lead of Great Britain and Germany in the demonetization of silver. The policy of those countries is simply the policy of their rich men, bondholders, bankers, money-lenders, and persons who have fixed incomes. The poorer and middle classes in those countries have little or no voice in such matters. In those governments these classes are useful as soldiers, in killing each other in dynastic wars in which they have no interest, and as laborers, operatives, and taxpayers to support royalty, aristocracy, and other privileged classes. They are not expected or allowed to deal in statecraft and great financial questions, and must be content to bear the burdens put upon them for the benefit of the privileged classes and the rich. Here we have a different theory. And if these imitators of English and German policy can have their way a few years longer, I fear it will be only a theory with us; that our boasted system of free, popular, constitutional self-government will become a matter of history, but will no longer be the existing pride and glory of every true American heart. Their whole political theory and system are different from ours. Theirs are governments of force, whose rulers are sovereigns and whose people are subjects. Ours is a government of consent, whose people are sovereign and whose officers are servants. And we should think well before we follow the examples set by them in political and financial matters.

A government of the people, by the people, and for the people is the last and highest development of political science. It means that it is the government of a people who are all sovereigns and equal before the law. It means that we are to have no royalty, no aristocracy either of rank or wealth, no classes enjoying privileges not common to all. It means a government which protects all its citizens alike and allows exclusive privileges to none. It means a government in which every citizen is guaranteed all the fruits of his labor except what is necessary for the support of government, and in which no man's prosperity can be lawfully taken from him and given to another without his consent. Such a government is only practicable among a free people of a high order of intelligence and virtue, and could not long exist among a people wanting in these qualities. It grieves me to say that while in many of our State constitutions we declare that perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free people, we are to-day the worst monopoly-ridden people, I think, in the civilized world. And if railroad monopolies, bank monopolies, and protective-tariff monopolies continue to rule this country a few years longer, as they have for the last twenty years, and to transfer the property of the country by the hundreds of millions of dollars annually from the oppressed many to the privileged and protected few, I fear that our government, hitherto the asylum of the oppressed of all lands and the home of the free and happy, will become the prey and the spoil of the rich few and of their corrupt and despotic associates. The abolition of one-half of the metal money of this country and the adoption of a policy which will require twice as many days of labor, twice as much of the products of labor, as are now required to pay all debts, public and private, which will greatly increase the wealth of the few and as certainly increase the poverty of the many, will be the longest stride ever taken toward the overthrow of our political system and the establishment in its stead of a government of fraud and force.

DIFFERENT CONDITIONS CALL FOR DIFFERENT POLICIES.

Why should we follow the example of Great Britain and Germany on the silver question? Both of those are great creditor nations; their people are holding large quantities of the interest-bearing securities of other countries—Great Britain to the extent of $3,250,000,000, and Germany to the extent of $2,000,000,000. The United States is a debtor nation to the extent of $1,843,713,715.80, as shown by the public debt statement for December, 1885. The public debt of the States, Territories, counties, townships, towns, cities, boroughs, villages, and school districts of the United States was in 1880 $1,117,585,546, as shown by the United States census. The railroads of the United States in 1880 were indebted to the amount of $5,658,914,158. These three classes of indebtedness amounted in the aggregate, at that time, to $8,620,213,419.80, and the two last items have no doubt been considerably increased since 1880. This does not include the private indebtedness of the country, and I have not the means of stating what that is, but it is probably as great in the aggregate as the public indebtedness. Now, by following the example of Great Britain and Germany on the silver question we should aid them in about doubling the value of the $5,250,000,000 of securities they together hold on foreign countries, as compared with the labor and property out of which these securities are to be paid. And we should about double the amount of labor and property which would be required to pay the $8,620,213,419.80 of our public indebtedness as well as of all private indebtedness. A comparatively few bondholders, bankers, and money-lenders in this country would be benefited by such folly, while the vast mass of the people would be injured and impoverished by it.

We ought not to follow their example, because such a course would injure the world at large while doing a great wrong to our own people. We ought not to follow their example for another important reason: Great Britain is not a silver-producing country, and Germany produces very little. The report of the Director of the Mint, recently laid before us, shows the world's product of silver for 1884 to have been $115,147,878. Of this sum it shows that the United States produced $48,800,000, which is more than 42 per cent. of the world's product for that year. We are asked, therefore, to sacrifice the silver interest of the greatest silver-producing country in the world. Besides this, Mr. Williams, a gentleman connected with the Geological Bureau, who prepared the volume now being published on the mineral resources of the United States for 1883 and 1884, states, that the lowest estimate which can be placed on the capitalized value of our silver mines and works, it would not be below $106,000,000. And he adds that "the census accounts for no less than $27,000,000 invested in the reservoirs, flumes, ditches, &c., of the hydraulic mines alone, and it has been claimed that these figures are far short of the truth."

After reviewing the question and showing the difficulty of obtaining exact information, he says:

> While, therefore, it is impossible to reach even an approximate estimate as to the actual investment in silver mining, we know it to be a large amount, perhaps $300,000,000, perhaps $500,000,000, possibly more, but certainly in excess of $106,000,000.

He also estimates that there may be about 130,000 persons engaged in silver mining in this country, and about 520,000 supported by silver mining. Towns and cities have been built up to meet the necessities of our silver-mining interests, and railroads and wagon-roads constructed for the same purpose. And they are large consumers of clothing, food, iron, steel, quicksilver, and machinery. Silver mining is the principal business in some of our Western States and Territories.

In addition to being asked to double the debt burdens of our people, we are asked to sacrifice all these resources in silver—God's boon and blessing to us and to the world—to sacrifice all the investments in our silver-mining operations; to pauperize more than half a million of people, and bankrupt thousands of our most enterprising citizens, in order to help a few rich men in our own and other countries to perpetrate upon our own people and those of other countries the most stupendous fraud, considered in all its bearings, ever perpetrated on mankind.

While this scheme of demonetizing silver is to double the value of the bonded indebtedness of the world, and to double the purchasing power of the gold of the world, and to require double the amount of labor and property now required to pay the debts of the world, I want to ask the question, for each person to answer to himself on his conscience, is there one man in the world silly enough to believe the bondholders, bankers, and money-lenders would be willing to take one-half the face of their securities in satisfaction of the sums owing to them? If they take away half the means of paying, in good conscience and honor, if they are honest men, they ought to reduce their claims for payment one-half. But they will do no such thing. They expect to be able to use the political power of this and other countries to violate the law and the contracts under which they obtain and own bonds, and to rob the people of what should go to feed, clothe, and educate their children and prepare them to become good, intelligent, and useful citizens. I can not and do not believe that God's justice will permit the consummation of such a crime against right, decency, humanity, and civilization. And is there a sane man in the world, of ordinary intelligence, who believes that the statesmen of either Great Britain or Germany would make such a sacrifice of the material interests of their countries and of the rights of their people as their moneyed men are asking us to make for our country and people? Money-lenders and stock-gamblers modestly ask us to sacrifice this great source of our wealth, which any other nation would give millions to possess. And men are found in the American Congress who advocate a policy which would lead to this result, if successful.

THE REMEDY.

We are responsible to our people for the protection of their rights. We have the power to protect them. It is our duty to protect against this cunning and wicked scheme of robbery. If I am asked how, I am prepared to answer, that—

First. I would provide for the free and unlimited coinage of silver.

Second. I would provide for the issuance of silver certificates of $5 and upward on all deposits in the Treasury or subtreasuries of silver coin or bullion of standard fineness, when $100 or more should be presented.

Third. I would so amend the second section of the act of Congress of January 14, 1875, "to provide for the resumption of specie payments," and the twelfth section of the act of July 12, 1882, "to enable banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," as to repeal the special reservation of $100,000,000 of gold for the redemption of legal-tender notes, and instead of that special reservation would provide for a general reserve of $50,000,000, in addition to the current revenues, to meet all the contingent needs of the Treasury.

Fourth. I would require the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out the silver in the Treasury as he does the gold in satisfaction of all public indebtedness; and to pay out all above the $50,000,000 reserve, and reduce the principal and stop the interest of our public debt to that extent.

Fifth. I would provide that no more national banks should be chartered; that no additional notes for circulation should be furnished to those now in existence; and that, as the charters of those in existence expire, and as their circulation is called in, a like amount of United States Treasury notes should be issued to take their place as currency.

In a former part of my remarks I stated the reasons for this, and need not repeat them.

I profoundly regret that there should be differences between Democrats on this question. The President in his message and the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report have shown wisdom and true statesmanship in many of their recommendations, and wherever I can it will afford me pleasure to sustain their views. But on this question I must follow the traditions of the Democratic party and its principles, as illustrated in many test-votes in both branches of Congress within the last ten years; and I must sustain the interests of my constituents, those of the people of the whole country and of mankind, as affected by this question.

The Democratic party is now on trial before the country. The Republican party was turned out of power because it abandoned the interests of the people on all the great questions which affected the material interest of the country, such as the regulation of interstate commerce, the tariff, banking and currency, and the coinage of silver, and surrendered the great political powers which it controlled, as the dominant political party of the country, to the service and support of the interests of the corporations and the money-power. The Democratic party resisted and denounced this course as a betrayal of the great political trust confided to the Republican party.

I do not wish to be understood as saying that all Republicans and all Democrats occupied the positions I have assigned to these parties respectively on these questions. There were Republicans, especially in the West, who did not agree with the action of their party on these questions. And there were Democrats, mainly in the East, who did not agree with their party on these questions. But I have stated correctly the positions of the two great political parties.

Now we find leading Democrats asking the Democracy, as a party, to take on these questions the very positions and to advocate the views for which the people drove the Republicans from power. Will we do this? If we do, then we ought all to join the Republican party; for on these questions there would be no difference between these parties. And if we do, then the Democratic party must cease to exist. It has been the party of the people from the foundation of the Government up to this time, resisting all through our history monopolies and class interests and defending and protecting the rights of the people. If it should ever become the defender of monopolies, corporations, and the money-kings as against the rights of the people (which God forbid) it will cease to be the Democratic party, and the people will have to look elsewhere for the guardianship, protection, and defense of their rights.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

SILVER QUESTION.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that no doubt the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures will report some measure on this subject probably at an early date, and the House will be allowed ample time for its consideration. I therefore move that the committee rise, and that this discussion shall wait some proposition to come before the House on the subject.

Mr. SYMES. I have no objection to the motion; but will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND. Certainly.

Mr. SYMES. Can the chairman of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures inform the House, with any degree of accuracy, when we may expect a report from the committee upon this subject, whether it will be in one, two, or three days, or a week?

Mr. BLAND. I am unable to give the gentleman the information he desires. Our committee has not yet had a meeting upon the subject, and I do not know what it will report or when it will report; but no doubt some proposition will come up for discussion in regular order presented by that committee, and the House will have ample time for its discussion.

Mr. SYMES. I would like to say, in view of the statement of the chairman of the committee, that I know quite a number of members here are prepared to make silver speeches, and they are beginning to get somewhat cold after the discussion in the Senate which has been going on from day to day. I, therefore, would like to give notice that at as early a date as possible, provided the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures does not report a proper measure for debate, I shall ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union in order that those gentlemen may have an opportunity to make their speeches.

Several MEMBERS. Let us have them now.

Mr. BLAND. I insist upon the motion that the committee now rise.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 58, noes 62.

Mr. BLAND. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BLAND and Mr. SYMES were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 73.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the message of the President of the United States, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 85, noes 27.

Mr. BEACH. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 6 members voting in favor thereof.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Jackson and 63 others, of Illinois.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 13, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

Mr. HAWLEY took the chair as presiding officer under the previous designation of the President pro tempore, sanctioned by the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills received yesterday from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. 2) to amend section 643 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. 1684) to authorize terms of the circuit court of the United State for the eastern judicial district of North Carolina at the city of Wilmington, in said district.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 76) fixing the time when the pay of certain clerks to committees of the House of Representatives shall begin was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair) laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 17, 1885, a statement in regard to the length of time it will require to furnish the information called for by that resolution as to settlers on lands granted to railroads in the State of Kansas; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER presented a petition of the colored North Americans, praying for such legislation as will provide for the education and elevation of the colored people; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. FRYE presented the petition of Abby L. Burbank, widow of Charles H. Burbank, late medical inspector United States Navy, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAMPTON presented the petition of Beverley Kennon, of Baltimore, Md., praying the adoption of his plan for the construction of a counterpoise battery for the protection of cannon in coast defense and on board iron-plated vessels for river and harbor defense; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 241) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish; and

A bill (S. 311) for the relief of James Trabue, Thornton Thatcher, Michael Callahan, and the widow of John Waters.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 113) for the relief of Samuel Browning, of Missouri, submitted an adverse report thereon, and moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 628) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to compensate clerks and employés for extra work performed in the exchange of bonds in the Department, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 225) to authorize Col. George W. Getty, United States Army, retired, to be placed upon the retired-list of the Army with the rank and pay of a brigadier-general; and

A bill (S. 498) for the relief of George T. Dudley.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 209) for the relief of the legal representatives of John M. Robeson, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 18) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn., reported it with amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the letter of the Secretary of State of December 17, 1885, recommending the passage of an act to permit Joseph Rawicz, United States consul at Warsaw, Russia, to accept decorations from Russia, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 1053) to permit Joseph Rawicz, United States consul at Warsaw, Russia, to accept certain decorations tendered him by the Russian Government; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. JACKSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 32) for the relief of Mrs. Lizzie D. Clarke, of New Orleans; and

A bill (S. 289) for the relief of J. A. Henry and others.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 71) for the benefit of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, and Nevada when a Territory, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 24) for the relief of Samuel B. Seat, administrator of Christian Krupp, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GRAY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 100) for the relief of William H. Crook, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting estimates for the construction of a wharf at Fort Monroe. These documents were referred to the Committee on Printing to advise the Senate as to whether the accompanying maps should be printed. I am instructed by the committee to report adversely to the printing of such maps. They have been ordered to be printed by the House of Representatives.

The report was agreed to.

BILLS OF FORTY-EIGHTH CONGRESS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably the following resolution, and I ask for its present consideration by the Senate:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to bind duplicate sets of bills and resolutions of the Forty-eighth Congress, said bills and resolutions to be furnished him from the files of the Senate document-room, and the volumes, when bound, to be kept there for reference.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 29) for printing the astronomical and meteorological observations of the Naval Observatory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. SAWYER, it was Ordered, That all papers in the claims of A. P. C. Stewart and Charles A. Weed and of Stewart & Co. be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Ernestine H. Stevens be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That, in the opinion of the Senate, the compulsory coinage of silver dollars, directed by the law of February 28, 1878, should not be suspended till the aggregate reaches the sum of $500,000,000.

FAST MAIL SERVICE WEST OF CHICAGO.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be directed to furnish to the Senate the following information, namely:

First. Over what railroads the so-called "fast mail" from Chicago, destined for points in Colorado, Utah, and Idaho, is transported, and what advantage is gained by the Government in transporting over roads other than the Union Pacific.

Second. The cost of such transportation, and, if the same is being paid for out of the Treasury, what reason exists for paying therefor out of the Treasury to other companies, instead of having the said service performed by the Union Pacific Company and crediting the compensation therefor to the said company on its indebtedness to the Government.

Third. Whether anything is gained or lost, in point of time, by sending over other roads rather than the said Union Pacific road.

Fourth. Copies of all existing contracts in relation to said transportation.

REMOVAL OF INDIANS TO INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. BOWEN submitted the following resolution; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of removing all the Indians in the United States to the Indian Territory west of the State of Arkansas, and to report by bill or otherwise.

COIN DUTIES ON IMPORTED GOODS.

Mr. EUSTIS. I desire to give notice that on Monday next, at 2 o'clock, I shall ask the consent of the Senate to call up the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] on the 18th of December last, in order that I may submit a few remarks upon it.

EULOGIES ON VICE-PRESIDENT HENDRICKS.

Mr. VOORHEES. With the permission of the Senate, before the regular order is taken up, I desire to make a brief statement.

Several days ago, as the Senate is aware, I gave notice that on Wednesday, the 20th instant, a week from to-day, I would call up the resolutions expressive of the sense of the Senate at the loss of the late Vice-President. Owing to engagements on the part of certain Senators who desire to be present and who have kindly consented to participate in the proceedings, and in deference likewise to the wishes of my colleagues in the other House of Congress, I give notice that I shall call up those resolutions on Tuesday, the 26th instant, which is a week from next Tuesday, instead of at the time heretofore indicated.

EMERSON ETHERIDGE AND WILLIAM B. STOKES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII. The bill first in order will be stated.

The bill (S. 506) for the relief of Emerson Etheridge and William B. Stokes was announced as first in order; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the bill was last under consideration the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] gave notice of an amendment which he intended to propose. Does the Senator from Oregon desire to have the amendment read now?

Mr. DOLPH. If I am entitled to address the Senate a second time upon the bill before offering the amendment I would prefer to submit my amendment at the close of some remarks; or if the Senate will permit me by general consent to be heard again—and I should like also a little more than the accustomed time, probably not to exceed ten or fifteen minutes—when I have said what I desire on the bill I shall be satisfied to let it take its course.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Oregon shall have leave to address the Senate at such length as he shall find it convenient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has heard the request. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and leave is granted.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, if it were not that I am fortified in my opinion in regard to the merits of this measure by the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, whose long experience in such cases renders him a competent judge, I might be shaken in my convictions in regard to it; but as it is, notwithstanding the apparent desire of the Senate to pass the bill, I have not changed my judgment in the least in regard to the wisdom of the measure.

If the only thing involved here was a question as to whether the United States should lose the amount which has been found due upon the statement of the account of this public officer I should not occupy the time of the Senate a moment longer; and as it is, when I have had an opportunity to notice briefly some of the arguments which have been made by the friends of the bill in favor of its passage, I shall be satisfied to let it take its course.

As I have already upon a former occasion said in substance, my opposition to it is mainly for the purpose of calling the attention of the Senate to the necessity of a statute limiting actions and suits by the United States against the principals and sureties upon official bonds, or some other legislation which shall provide for a prompt settlement of public accounts and for the prompt institution of suits against the sureties on official bonds, and the necessity for some general legislation which shall relieve the present pressure upon Congress by bills for private relief. We could pass a bill of ten lines in length which would strike at the wrong which is evident in this case and cut up this evil, root and branch, as easily as we can pass this single bill for the relief of this one claimant. Instead of that we are satisfied to drift along from session to session, lopping off here and there a branch.

What is the inference? It is that in the judgment of Congress there ought to be no statute of limitations as to actions and suits by the Government. I understand it to be tacitly admitted here that there never has been in a hundred years—in fact never since the Government was organized—a statute of limitations as against suits upon official bonds except in the single case of postmasters' bonds.

I am aware that there is a statute limiting suits upon marshals' bonds, but my present recollection is that the statute applies only to suits by individuals for some failure of the marshal to perform his official duty.

I am rather pleased to have stirred up such a storm of indignation against the Government as I did by my remarks on Friday last upon this bill. I suppose that some persons who listened to the discussion on that occasion might have supposed that Senators when speaking of the Government meant some Auditor in the Treasury Department or some overworked official who by the parsimony of Congress is allowed only about half clerks enough to conduct the current business of his bureau; but when we remember that Congress is the law-making power and is responsible for the laws which we have and for the absence of those which we have not but which we ought to have, it would appear that the denunciation ought to have been against Congress as that branch of the Government which is responsible for the evil which exists, if there is any.

I think too that a wrong impression was received as to the character of the balance which has been stated against this public officer. At least one Senator spoke of the matter as if there had been a charge of defalcation against this public officer, something that imputed moral turpitude. I suppose that in ninety-nine cases out of every hundred where there are balances stated against a public officer in the settlement of his accounts it is caused by disallowances of amounts which he has paid out which were unauthorized by law, or amounts which he claims for services which he is entitled to.

Let us examine a little more closely what the balance consists of in this case. We are told by the First Comptroller of the Treasury Department that it is mainly for printing and for clerk-hire. What is the residue for? We are not enlightened. It may be for money that was in the hands of this public officer but never was expended and never accounted for; and then how much of it was for clerk-hire? Did this public officer draw his salary regularly as secretary of the Territory and hire a clerk to perform the duties of his office and afterward charge the amount paid to his clerk to the Government, or did his representatives after his death do this and thus cause this balance?

At all events, we are told that the disallowances were expenditures that were unauthorized. That is to say, there was no act of Congress that authorized them. The proper Department had not authorized them, and I undertake to say that in most cases that is the cause of the balances which are found due against public officers. They make expenditures which are unauthorized by law, the Department disallows the expenditures, and the Government resorts to the courts to collect the amount which has been so improperly expended.

Now let us see what the result would be if in every case we were to take up the accounts of these officers and relieve them of the balances due from them under similar circumstances. We might just as well under such circumstances let every officer who was charged with the expenditure of public money be a law unto himself and have no law regulating the disbursement of public funds, and simply content ourselves with making appropriations to supply deficiencies.

If in any event such balances ought to be remitted there is not a proper showing in this case to justify it. Committees of this body have reported over and over again, and by no Senator oftener than the Senator from Massachusetts who took part in this debate, that the Government would not hold itself liable for the mistakes, the negligence, or the misconduct of its public officers. But in this case it is proposed, because it is claimed an officer of the Government has been negligent, and the Government has been guilty of laches, that the bondsmen shall be exonerated from every obligation to the Government.

It is always held also that laches will not be imputed to the Government. Statutes of limitation are not applied to the Government unless it is provided in the statute that it shall be done. As I have said, we hold that the Government is not responsible for the negligence of its public officers, and more than that, the Government reserves the right to say in what courts and in what manner and for what causes it shall be sued.

Notwithstanding this, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts who took part in this debate on Friday last grew quite eloquent when he came to consider the hardship upon one of the sureties and the wrong which the Government was perpetrating by seeking to enforce the penalty of his bond. I profess to desire quite as high a standard of public morality as any member of this body, and if the Government has been base, if the Government has been dishonest, if the Government has been infamous in this transaction it has been base and dishonest and infamous in nine out of every ten cases of suits which have ever been brought against sureties upon official bonds.

Why, sir, what is this case? Did the officers of the Treasury violate any law when they caused the suit to be instituted? No, sir; they were enforcing the law, and they would have been censurable had they not caused this suit to be instituted. Did the Attorney-General or the district attorney violate any law when they instituted the suit, or was the court violating any law in entertaining jurisdiction of it? No, sir; they could not do otherwise.

What laws, pray, are they executing? The laws of Congress, for which you and I and every member of this body are more or less responsible, and for which the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, I think, is more responsible than myself because he has been longer a member of this body and is a member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

I recollect a case in which I made a minority report from the Committee on Claims, in which, I think, if the Government is base or dishonest or infamous in this transaction there is no language which could describe the conduct of the Government in that. It was a case in which a man by the name of Graham, in 1855, who was the owner of three steamships, had been reduced to poverty by the arbitrary action of the Government. He had contracted to sell his steamships and deliver them at Havana, Cuba. He was engaged in trade between New York and Cuba. He took his ships to New York to fit them up to be turned over to the purchaser. He had fitted up one of them, and the other two were being fitted up. Some parties chartered the steamer ready for service for a voyage to San Juan de Nicaragua.

The charterers were Fletcher Webster, a son of Daniel Webster, a man by the name of Kinney, and a man by the name of Fabens. Fabens and Kinney were indicted for setting on foot an illegal expedition, but were never prosecuted. Webster was not indicted. No suit was brought against Graham or his ships. The proposed expedition for which the one steamship was chartered was supposed to be illegal. Graham, after Kinney and Fabens were indicted, applied to the Secretary of State, Mr. Marcy, to know if there was any objection to the voyage, and, receiving no satisfactory answer, he canceled the charter-party, and offered to do everything that was reasonable which would be demanded by the Government. He proposed to give bonds that the ships would not be engaged in any unlawful enterprise, but the Government detained all his steamships from some time in April until August. They were equipped with crews and supplies ready for service, and the detention occasioned a great loss. The demurrage amounted to a large sum. Graham lost the sale of his steamships, and, although worth several hundred thousand dollars, he was by the acts of the Government reduced to poverty.

I thought that the Government had acted arbitrarily. It seemed that the United States had been engaged in diplomatic negotiations with Great Britian and had seized the steamships to please Great Britain, rather than upon sufficient evidence of an intention to violate the law, and that it was a case in which the claimant ought at least to be allowed for demurrage, or have an opportunity to present his claim to the Court of Claims; but the committee said, "Not at all; we must not allow our sympathies to run away with us in such a case," and that "it would violate a general and well-established principle to hold the Government liable in such a case to its citizens." I am willing that that case shall stand side by side with this.

Then, sir, this is not a case of such supposed hardship as has been suggested. Men who sign bonds as sureties are held liable as long as the statutes of limitation have not run against the principal, and there is no obligation on the part of anybody to notify them that there has been a default of the principal. The statute is generally ten years in the case of an instrument under seal. A man who signs a promissory note as maker in form, although he may do it as surety, is held to be liable as a principal, and the party for whose benefit he signs may extend the life of the note by partial payment and the surety be held liable for an indefinite time. When a man indorses a non-negotiable note or a negotiable note before delivery the same rule applies to him. He is held as a maker.

The parties to this bond who are asking relief here executed it knowing the law. The law entered into and became a part of their contract. It was their duty to see that their principal settled his accounts, because there was no law requiring them to be notified of the default of their principal, or even permitting the officers of the Government to give them notice, and there was no statute of limitations as to the suit on the bond.

Some suggestion has been made as to the necessity of a general law to authorize all parties having claims against the Government to bring suit. A law consisting of a single section authorizing all persons having claims against the United States to bring suit in the Court of Claims would be sufficient, and a law authorizing all persons having claims to sue in the district or circuit courts of the United States in the States or the district courts in the Territories would not be a complicated or difficult matter; but I am not sure that I am in favor of such a law. I doubt the policy of referring to the courts to determine in what cases the Government shall be liable. Are we willing to allow the courts to say that the Government shall be liable in all cases, the same as a private corporation, for the misfeasance or negligence of its agents or for unauthorized contracts? Are we willing to say, for instance, that in the Post-Office Department, which is carried on for the benefit of all the citizens of the United States and all the people residing within our territorial limits, great and small, shall be held liable as a common carrier in all the vast complicated transactions of that Department? Are we willing to have it held by the courts that in our navy-yards and in our armories and in our works for the improvement of rivers and harbors and in all other public works, as the erection of public buildings, &c., the Government shall be liable to employés for the negligence of the superintendents and agents of the Government who are conducting the works? Are we willing to have it held by the courts that in the operations of the Army and the Navy the Government shall be liable for injury to persons and property or to subordinate officers and enlisted men for the negligence or blundering orders of superior officers?

I might continue these suggestions, but it is not necessary to do so for my purpose. I think the first thing to be done is to determine in what cases the Government shall be held liable for the default or negligence of its officers and agents, and then to authorize suit to be brought against the Government in such cases. And, sir, if it is impracticable to define by general law in what cases the Government shall be liable, I am sure it is impracticable to continue the present practice of entertaining every application for relief and undertaking to give it consideration. It results, as I stated in substance last Friday, in relieving one case in a hundred, while ninety-nine as meritorious cases will not be considered at all.

Even if we had such laws as I have suggested defining in what cases the Government should be liable and in what cases it might be sued and authorizing suit to be brought, it would not greatly relieve Congress unless we were satisfied to remit everybody to the general laws for his remedy and refused to entertain and hear and undertake to pass upon every case which was supposed not to fall within the general laws or which had been barred by the statute of limitations. With sixty million inhabitants, with our population constantly increasing, with the vast and complicated machinery of our Government, with a vast army of officeholders, with the new and increasing demands for general legislation, however meritorious it might be, it is utterly impracticable and impossible for Congress to undertake to hear and consider and pass upon petitions for relief from every citizen of the Republic.

I have prepared an amendment which I do not suppose will meet with favor. I offer it for the purpose of calling attention to what we are proposing to do in this case. The amendment, which is proposed to affect all cases, does not go as far as the Senate proposes to go in this case, because it only proposes to release sureties when one of the sureties has become insolvent after a period of five years from the time when the term of office of the public officer or the employment of the agent ceased. After I have offered it and it has been read, inasmuch as I have now said what I intended to say on the subject, let the bill take its course; go on, make the precedent that notwithstanding an expenditure may have been unauthorized, though there may have been no appropriation for it, though it may have been contrary to the express instruction of the head of the Department to which the officer belonged, where an officer supposed it to be for the benefit of the Government he shall receive credit for the amount of the expenditure—lay down the proposition; make the precedent that whenever there has been laches on the part of the Government officers in commencing suit on the bond of a public officer and the principal or any surety on a bond has become insolvent, these facts shall be a sufficient defense, if not in the courts, before Congress. I will pass up the amendment which I have heretofore submitted to be printed and move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill:

And whenever hereafter, in any action brought in any court of the United States upon any official bond given by any public officer or agent of the United States, it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the judge of such court that any expenditures have been made by such public officer or agent as such, and during the term of his office or employment, for printing or clerk-hire, or as payment for services rendered at the instance of such officer or agent, and in his judgment for the benefit of the United States, or for supplies furnished the United States at the instance of such officer, although there shall have been no appropriation for such purpose, and such expenditures were unauthorized by law and prohibited by general or special instructions of the Department or bureau of the Government to which such officer or agent belonged, and may have been disallowed by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, it shall be the duty of the court, upon the trial of such action, to cause to be credited to the sureties upon such bond the amount of such expenditures as of the date when the same were made. And when, in any such action which has or shall have been brought after a lapse of five years from the expiration of the official term of such officer or of the employment of such agent, it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that the principal or any surety upon such bond has become insolvent since the expiration of such period of five years, such fact shall be taken and deemed to be a sufficient defense to such action, and it shall be the duty of the court to render judgment in favor of the sureties who are the defendants in such action and against the United States for the costs of such action.

Mr. ALLISON. Is this bill proceeding under the five-minute rule?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is, with an exception by general consent on behalf of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the amendment to be insisted on?

Mr. DOLPH. I shall take no time about it. It was offered as part of my argument rather than for any other purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon desire a vote on the amendment?

Mr. DOLPH. It may be voted on without consuming time.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, as the member of the Committee on Claims making this report I desire to call the attention of the Senate briefly to the facts of the case and the grounds on which the relief is proposed; but before doing so I venture to express the hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon will not be adopted. It will load down the bill, and is likely to defeat it. It is intended for that purpose, no doubt.

Now, sir, what are the facts in this case? Etheridge and Stokes became sureties in 1866 of Carter as secretary of the Territory of Arizona. The bond required him to submit his accounts annually during his term of office. He complied with the stipulation and submitted his accounts annually to the Government. He died in 1869. His accounts were audited, and there appeared a balance against him of $9,469.09. That balance is made up entirely, as the Comptroller reports to us and as I have examined, of disallowances for printing and for clerk-hire, disallowances for expenses that he was authorized to incur.

Mr. DOLPH. Probably the Senator can tell what law authorized him to incur them.

Mr. JACKSON. I shall come to that in a moment. The law making appropriations for the expenses of the Territory fixed the amount, and also provided a contingent fund for miscellaneous expenses. Within that law, within the amount that is appropriated, funds are sent to the secretary of the Territory, and he makes the expenditures.

Mr. DOLPH. But the proper officer, the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of the Treasury—the Secretary of the Interior, I think—divides those funds. He states how they shall be expended and how much for each item.

Mr. JACKSON. He does not designate how much shall be expended for printing, nor how much shall be expended for clerk-hire. He places in the hands of the secretary of the Territory a certain amount to meet these expenses. They are expended by the secretary of the Territory. What occurred in this case? He was supplied with funds, and he expended those funds wholly in the service of the Government and for the use of the Government in meeting these Territorial expenses. When his accounts are audited, the Comptroller says he has spent too much for this item and too much for that item, and they are cut down, not according to the standard of the Territory where the expenses are incurred, but cut down on the judgment of the Auditor or Comptroller here that they are too much measured by the Washington standard. In that way an apparent deficiency is made against the secretary of the Territory, and the disallowances in all during his period of office amount to this $9,469.09. These disallowances were made between 1869 and 1871.

The principal was then good for the balance if it had been enforced against him. He had property amply sufficient to meet the balance; but no attempt at enforcement was made against him; no notice was even given to him and no notice was given to the sureties. The principal's estate was used and consumed by his family; one of the sureties has become insolvent; and fifteen years and six months afterward the Government attempts to enforce that balance against the remaining solvent surety.

The report proceeds upon two grounds: first, that the money was bona fide expended in the service of the Government; and, secondly, that the long delay in disclosing this apparent balance now appearing against the principal has worked a hardship on the sureties, inasmuch as the condition of the parties has changed materially during that period, the principal's estate having become exhausted, one surety having become insolvent, and if it is now enforced against the remaining solvent surety it would be a great hardship.

I understand the Senator from Oregon to concede that this ought to be provided for by a general law. Mr. President, we have pending a bill on this subject now; but how can ever a general law reach a past transaction of this character? It can not be made retrospective, and we have to deal with these cases specially and by special act until such a law is passed. We have a law now relating to the Post-Office Department, section 3838 of the Revised Statutes, which provides as follows:

SEC. 3838. If on the settlement of the account of any postmaster it shall appear that he is indebted to the United States, and suit therefor shall not be instituted within three years after the close of such account, the sureties on his bond shall not be liable for such indebtedness.

I concede that there ought to be a provision of that sort extending to all the Departments of the Government and applying to all sureties on official bonds; let the time be three years, five years, or ten years; but the passage of such a law now would not relieve the hardships of this case, which is conceded by the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask two minutes more.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Senator will proceed.

Mr. JACKSON. It is said this is a bad precedent. The Senate without objection at the last session passed a bill for the relief of Eugene B. Rail and other sureties of David L. Gregg, receiver of public moneys at Carson City, Nev. Gregg was appointed in March, 1865, and died in 1868. On the settlement of his account in December, 1868, there appeared a deficiency of $10,141.89. No notice of a defalcation was given to his sureties until suit was commenced against them in 1881, twelve years after the defalcation was known to the Government. At the commencement of the suit all the sureties were dead except two; one of these was bankrupt, and the other, Eugene B. Rail, was solvent. The committee recommended that he should be released. The Senate approved of this recommendation by passing the bill, a case not as meritorious as the present by any means.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent at this time to submit a resolution for adoption.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Patents is hereby authorized to take testimony relating to the subject-matter of Senate bill 191, "to establish an international copyright," and to print 250 copies thereof for the use of the committee and the Senate.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CORA A. SLOCOMB.

The bill (S. 178) for the relief of Tobias G. Richardson and Albert Baldwin, testamentary executors of the succession of Cora A. Slocomb, Ida A. Richardson, and Caroline A. Urquhart was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, in line 6, after the word "to" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "Tobias G. Richardson and Albert Baldwin, testamentary executors of the succession of," and insert "Ida A. Richardson, Caroline A. Urquhart, and Cora A. Slocomb, as the heirs at law of;" and in line 9, after the name of "Cora A. Slocomb," to insert "deceased;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to the following-named persons the sums specified, to wit: To Ida A. Richardson, Caroline A. Urquhart, and Cora A. Slocomb, as the heirs at law of Cora A. Slocomb, deceased, the sum of $12,714.40; to Ida A. Richardson the sum of $20,479; and to Caroline Augusta Urquhart the sum of $5,467.15.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a report in the case?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear it read.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, January 6, 1886:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 178) for the relief of Tobias G. Richardson and Albert Baldwin, testamentary executors of the succession of Cora A. Slocomb, Ida A. Richardson, and Caroline A. Urquhart, beg leave to report as follows:

Upon a full investigation this committee find that a favorable report upon this case, made to the Senate during the last Congress by Mr. MANDERSON, very fully and fairly sets out all the material facts therein, and they append said report in full to this.

This committee comes to the same conclusion that has been reached in all the reports in Congress upon this case, and respectfully recommend that the bill pass with the following amendment:

"In lines 6, 7, and 8 of said bill strike out the words 'Tobias G. Richardson and Albert Baldwin, testamentary executors of the succession of,' and insert the words 'Ida A. Richardson, Caroline A. Urquhart, and Cora A. Slocomb, as the heirs at law of;' and that after the word 'Slocomb,' in line 8, the word 'deceased' be inserted."

[Senate Report No. 846, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report, to accompany bill S. 630:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 630) for the relief of Cora A. Slocumb, Ida A. Richardson, and Caroline Augusta Urquhart, beg leave to submit the following report:

The Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives, at the present session of Congress, made favorable report (No. 918) upon this claim. Their report contains copies of similar favorable reports made by the same committee at the Forty-third, Forty-fourth, and Forty-fifth Congresses. While containing much repetition of matter, these reports differ somewhat from each other, and as your committee come to the same conclusion, viz, that the relief prayed for should be granted in part, a copy of the report of the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives of the present Congress is hereto attached.

These women claimants were rebel sympathizers, and until the capture of New Orleans by General Butler did everything in their power to advance the cause of the rebellion. Notwithstanding this fact, which was notorious and fully recognized by General Butler, commanding the United States forces, he saw fit, for reasons satisfactory to him, at least, to give them verbal and written assurances that during their absence within the lines of the rebel army their extensive and valuable property in the city of New Orleans "should not be interfered with by any exercise of military right," and should remain safely kept for them under the laws of the United States.

The successor of General Butler, General Banks, disregarded these assurances of safety, and took possession and held during the war all of the property of claimants, it being used in part for army purposes and part of it being held for rent to private parties. A large amount of money was collected as rent of the real estate (about $18,000), and about $15,000 was collected from a local insurance company by reason of the loss of some of the buildings by fire while they were occupied by tenants from whom the United States authorities were collecting rents. About $1,000 was collected from a gas company, being dividends upon the capital stock of the company owned by one of the claimants. All of this money was either paid into the Treasury of the United States or used for the support of its armies.

Under these facts, constituting practically the violation of that which was equivalent to a safeguard, your committee believe that the laws of civilized warfare, as construed by the Supreme Court of the United States, demand that claimants should be paid the money thus realized from their property. They therefore come to the same conclusion that the several committees of the House of Representatives have reached, and recommend the passage of Senate bill 630.

The committee attaches hereto a copy of the report made by the House Committee on War Claims at the present session.

[House Report No. 918, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4776) for the relief of Cora A. Slocumb, Ida A. Richardson, and Caroline Augusta Urquhart, submit the following report:

This case was favorably reported from the Committee on War Claims in the Forty-third, Forty-fourth, and Forty-fifth Congresses, which reports fully state the facts, and we incorporate them in this report as, together, giving a history of the claim. While your committee do not wish to be considered as agreeing with all of the conclusions stated in the several reports, we do find that the facts are correctly stated, and are as follows:

The letter of General Benjamin F. Butler, upon the assurances of which the parties left New Orleans, is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE GULF,
New Orleans, June 23, 1862.

MESDAMES: I have the pleasure to inform you that my necessities, which caused the request for permission to use your house during your absence this summer, have been relieved. I have taken the house of General Twiggs, late of the United States Army, for quarters. Inclined never on slight causes to use the power intrusted to me to grieve even sentiments only entitled to respect, from the courage and ladylike propriety of manner in which they were avowed, it is gratifying to be enabled to yield to the appeal you made for favor and protection by the United States.

Yours shall be the solitary exception to the general rule adopted that they who ask protection must take upon themselves corresponding obligations, or do an equal favor to the Government. I have an aged mother at home who, like you, might request the inviolability of hearthstone and roof-tree from the presence of a stranger. For her sake you shall have the pass you ask, which is sent herewith.

As I did myself the honor to say personally, you may leave the city with no fear that your house will be interfered with by any exercise of military right, but will be safe under the laws of the United States. Trusting that the inexorable logic of events will convict you of wrong toward your country when all else has failed,

I remain, your obedient servant,

BENJ. F. BUTLER,
Major-General.

Mesdames SLOCUMB and URQUHART.

Upon the promises of this letter, making these parties the "solitary exception," made by one who spoke for the nation, we recommend the passage of the bill.

[House Report No. 6, Forty-fifth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom the memorials of Mrs. Cora A. Slocumb and her daughters, Miss Ida A. Slocumb (now Mrs. Richardson) and Mrs. Caroline Augusta Urquhart, all of the city of New Orleans, La., were referred having considered the same, submit the following report:

That the evidence shows that in the year 1862 the claimants were the owners of a large amount of real and personal property situated in said city. In the summer of that year they applied to General B. F. Butler, then in command of the military district in which New Orleans was situated, for permission to leave the city and repair to a country-seat owned by them in the mountain region of North Carolina, where they had usually spent their summers. The permission was granted on condition that the parties should in no manner aid or abet the war then being waged against the Government. Fears having been expressed by these ladies that their property might be interfered with by the military authorities during their absence General Butler promised that it should not be disturbed. Relying on this assurance, the parties left the city and went to their country-seat above mentioned.

As long as General Butler remained in command the pledge given by him was strictly fulfilled, but not long afterward he was superseded by General N. P. Banks. Shortly after the latter took command a general order was issued for the seizure of all property belonging to absentees. Under this order all their real estate in the city, together with such personal property as was found therein, was seized by the military authorities. The most of it, including the residence of the parties, was applied to various military uses; the residue that was not so used was turned over to B. F. Flanders, supervising special agent of the Treasury in New Orleans, by whom the rents thereon were collected and paid or accounted for to the Treasury Department. The following personal property was also seized under special orders subsequently issued, to wit: Fifty-two shares of the stock of the New Orleans Gas-light Company, belonging to Mrs. Slocumb, and fifty-six shares of the same stock belonging to Miss Ida Slocumb. At a later date, four stores, also belonging to Miss Ida Slocumb, which had been insured in the Merchants' Insurance Company of New Orleans at $15,000, having been destroyed by fire, the amount payable on the loss, to wit, $14,300, was, in obedience to a military order, paid to Assistant Quartermaster McClure.

At the close of the war all the property of these memorialists which had been seized and appropriated as above stated was, by order of the President, restored to their possession; but no portion of the moneys which had been collected, as above stated, including also the dividends which had accrued on the gas-light stock above mentioned, was refunded, the same having been paid into the Treasury, and thereby placed beyond the control of the Executive. The parties therefore resorted to Congress for relief. They presented their memorials at the first session of the Forty-third Congress, by which they were referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A favorable report was made thereon by the committee, and a bill introduced providing for the payment to the parties of the amounts respectively claimed by them, but no action was taken on the bill by that Congress. The memorials were again presented at the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, and referred as before to the Committee on War Claims. A similar report was made and a similar bill introduced by the committee of that Congress. The bill shared the fate of its predecessor, no action having ever been taken on it by the House. Your committee have examined the evidence upon which these reports are based, and find that they are fully sustained by it. They deem it proper, therefore, to append them to this report.

Your committee concur in the opinion expressed by the preceding committees—

First. That the seizures of the property of the petitioners were unauthorized by law. (See the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Planters' Bank vs. Union Bank, 16 Wallace, page 485.)

Second. They violated two distinct pledges given by General Butler: (1) the promise given to the inhabitants of New Orleans, on or before the surrender of the said city, that their rights of property should be protected, subject only to the laws of the United States; (2) the special promise above mentioned made to these parties.

Your committee therefore entertain no doubt that the sums claimed by the petitioners are justly due to them. The sums are as follows:

To Mrs. Cora Ann Slocumb, for rents collected	$12,246 40
For dividends on gas stock	468 60
		$12,715 00
To Miss Ida A. Slocumb, for rents collected	5,675 00
Amount of insurance collected from Merchants' Insurance Company	14,300 00
Dividends, gas company stock	504 00
		20,479 00
To Mrs. Caroline Urquhart, rents collected		5,467 15
Total		38,661 15

The committee report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

The memorials also contain a demand for compensation for the use of of such portions of their real estate as were occupied by the military, and for personal property taken for that purpose, which was either lost or very much damaged, but as this part of the claim must rest upon evidence mainly oral and taken ex parte, the committee have not examined it, and agree with the report of the first committee above mentioned that it ought to be referred to the Court of Claims.

[House Report No. 429, Forty-third Congress, first session.]

The Committee on War Claims, to whom the memorials of Mrs. Cora A. Slocumb and her daughters, Mrs. Richardson and Mrs. Urquhart, were referred, respectfully report:

That in July, 1862, Mrs. Slocumb applied to General B. F. Butler, then commanding the military district in which New Orleans was situated, for permission to leave that city with her two daughters, Miss Ida Slocumb (now Mrs. Richardson) and Mrs. Urquhart, and retire to a country-seat in the mountain region of North Carolina, where they were in the habit of spending their summers. The permission was granted, and the general also promised that the property owned by these parties in the city, consisting mostly of valuable real estate, should not be interfered with during their absence. Relying on this promise, and availing themselves of this permission, the parties left the city and took up their residence in their home in the country.

As long as General Butler remained in command the pledge thus given by him was strictly observed, and the property of the above-named parties remained undisturbed. But General Butler was shortly after succeeded by General Banks in the command of the district, and about the 1st of August, 1862, a general order was issued by the latter, under which all the real estate owned by the above parties was (no doubt through ignorance of the pledge given by his predecessor) taken possession of by his quartermaster. A portion thereof was used for various military purposes, and the residue was turned over to B. F. Flanders, the supervising special agent of the Treasury in that city; the rents thereof were collected by him, and were duly accounted for to the Treasury Department.

Some time after, to wit, about the 15th of March, 1864, a number of shares in the New Orleans Gas-light Company, belonging respectively to Mrs. Slocumb and her daughter Ida, were also seized by the quartermaster, who received two dividends thereon, amounting, on the stock of Mrs. Slocumb, to $468, and on that of her daughter, to $504.

On being informed of these facts, Mrs. Slocumb made repeated applications for permission to return thereto; but this permission was refused, and all the parties remained in their country-seat above mentioned until the close of the war, without in any manner participating therein.

At the close of the war, however, their property was restored to them under an order from the President. This restoration took place on or about the 1st of September, 1865.

Finally, on or about the —— day of ——, 1864, the sum of $14,300, which was due to Miss Ida Slocumb (now Mrs. Richardson) by the Merchants' Mutual Insurance Company, for the loss of several buildings insured in that company, was seized under a special order from General Banks, and paid by the company to Captain McClure, acting quartermaster.

Your committee entertain no doubt that the money thus collected should be returned to the petitioners. The procedings by which the money was taken and appropriated were not authorized by any law (see 16th Wal. Rep. 485), but they were a violation of the terms of capitulation, and of a pledge given by the officer in command. The memorialists, therefore, are clearly entitled to relief.

The amount of money collected belonging to Cora A. Slocumb is:

Rents collected (less expenses)	$12,246 40
Dividends gas-light company collected	468 00
		12,714 40

The amount of money collected belonging to Ida A. Slocumb (Richardson) is:

Rents collected (less expenses)	$5,675 00
Amount of insurance collected	14,300 00
Dividends gas-light company collected	504 00
		20,479 00

The amount of money collected belonging to Mrs. Caroline Augusta Urquhart is:

Rents collected (less expenses)	$5,467 15

The committee therefore report the accompanying bill providing for the reimbursement of the above parties of the sums belonging to them, respectively, which were collected by agents of the Government, and were paid into, or accounted for to, the Treasury Department, less certain expenses incurred, and recommend its passage.

The memorialists also ask for compensation for the use of such portions of their real estate as were applied to public uses, and for personal property taken also for that purpose, and which was either lost or very much damaged. But as this portion of their claim rests, in a great measure, on oral and ex parte testimony, or on documents not sufficiently authenticated, the committee think that if any claim exists in their favor on this part of the petition it should be referred to the Court of Claims for a decision on this portion of their demand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are several reports of other committees appended. Does the Senator desire that those be read?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I rose to make a statement which the statement of the Chair has obviated the necessity of. Every report made in the case has been favorable.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GIBSON. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the title of the bill should be made to conform to the body.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I move that the title of the bill be conformed to the bill, so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Ida A. Richardson, Caroline A. Urquhart, and Cora A. Slocomb, as the heirs at law of Cora A. Slocomb, deceased."

The amendment was agreed to.

JOHN LEATHERS.

The bill (S. 767) for the relief of John Leathers was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 4, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$500" and insert "$744.90;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to refund to John Leathers the sum of $744.90, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, on account of said amount having been paid by said John Leathers as a fine for trespassing upon an Indian reservation, for which transgression the President of the United States granted said John Leathers a full and unconditional pardon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I do not want to call for the reading of the report if it is lengthy, but I should like to know on what ground the President pardoned Leathers for this trespass?

Mr. HOAR. I do not see the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] who made the report in his seat, but I will state what the report is, and the Senator from Connecticut can have it read then if he wants to.

The monuments which were put up to mark the line of this Indian reservation by the public authority, the Government engineer, and also some of the plans which were made, were erroneous and did not conform with the survey in Washington. This man was outside those monuments, and he had every reason to believe that he was outside of the reservation instead of being inside of it. Therefore he set up his trading establishment, as he had a right to do. When the case came into court the court held that, notwithstanding all the ostensible monuments in the Territory had indicated this wrong line, he was bound by the true lawful line which was of record here, and therefore convicted him; but the court recommended his pardon. The facts being brought to the attention of the President of the United States, the pardon was instantly granted. The man in the mean time had paid his fine, and the committee thought it ought to be remitted.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAILING OF LOTTERY ADVERTISEMENTS.

The bill (S. 260) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements and prescribing a penalty for the violation of the same, was announced as next in order.

Mr. JACKSON. That bill will involve discussion, and it is impossible to consider it under the five-minute rule. I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee asks that this bill may go over.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suppose an objection will carry it over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Except against a motion. A single objection carries the bill over, but the rule provides——

Mr. JACKSON. I have no objection to the bill being considered, but it can hardly be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no objection to the bill being passed over for to-day, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. JACKSON. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to that arrangement? The Chair hears none; it is so ordered, and the bill will be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

MATTHIAS LECKNER.

The bill (S. 377) granting a pension to Matthias Leckner was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Matthias Leckner, late a private in Company B, Thirteenth Regiment Kansas Infantry Volunteers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 967) to provide for the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union and for the organization of the Territory of Lincoln was announced as next in order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, with reference to that bill which is now called and the two resolutions which follow upon the same subject, I ask that they may be passed over. The report is not yet on the tables of Senators, and of course it will be impossible to consider the question under the five-minute rule. I would say, however, that I expect to call the bill up for consideration at an early day, as early next week as I can.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have the bill retain its place on the Calendar?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes, sir; it may be so ordered. Of course it can not be discussed under Rule VIII. It is not important that it should retain its place under that rule; but that order may be made, and I will call it up hereafter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar. The Chair hears no objection. The next two resolutions on the Calendar relate to the same subject——

Mr. HARRISON. The same course is to be taken in regard to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator made that suggestion, but the Chair neglected to include it in the previous order. The resolutions will be passed over.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVE OF JOHN HATFIELD.

The bill (S. 296) for the relief of Alfred G. Hatfield was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 4, after the words "pay to," to strike out "Alfred G. Hatfield;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the legal representative of John Hatfield, deceased, late veterinary surgeon of the Thirteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, the sum of $675, in full for services as veterinary surgeon for said regiment for nine months, at $75 per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the legal representative of John Hatfield."

KINSEY B. CECIL.

The bill (S. 218) to confirm the title to certain lands in Platte County, Missouri, and authorize patents to be issued therefor to Kinsey B. Cecil, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that George Smith did, on the 9th of April, 1862, make entry at the United States land office at Boonville, Mo., of the northeast fractional quarter and the southeast fractional quarter (west of Bee Creek) section 31, township 53, range 35, containing 19.52 acres, in Platte County, Missouri; that Joseph Meyer did, on the 9th of April, 1862, make entry at the land office at Boonville, Mo., of the northwest fractional quarter of the northeast fractional quarter (west of Bee Creek) section 31, township 53, range 35, containing 1.73 acres, in Platte County, Missouri; that the purchase-money for these fractions of land is still retained by the Government of the United States, and that the lands have long since passed into the hands of innocent purchasers, who have occupied the same, paid taxes, and made valuable improvements thereon, having had no notice that the entries had been canceled until recently.

The bill therefore proposes to confirm these entries, and authorize patents to be issued for the lands to Kinsey B. Cecil, the assignee of George Smith and Joseph Meyer.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

FORFEITURE OF IOWA LAND GRANT.

The bill (S. 149) forfeiting a part of certain lands granted to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of railroads in that State, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let that go over. There is a report of the committee to be printed, which has not been laid on the table.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not care to have it go over on that ground. If the Senator desires it to go over let him so state; but as far as the report is concerned I will say on behalf of the committee that there is no necessity to wait for the report if the Senate is ready to take up the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. I prefer to wait and read the report of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A single objection takes the bill over.

B. JENNINGS.

The bill (S. 85) for the relief of B. Jennings was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to appropriate $3,114.66 to pay B. Jennings, late register of the land office at Oregon City, to reimburse Jennings for money expended by him as register between the 1st of June, 1859, and December 31, 1860, for additional clerical services and extraordinary expenses during that period not heretofore allowed or paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS OF FOREIGN SUBJECTS.

Mr. PLUMB having during the morning hour presented the petition of Maurice Gandy, of Liverpool, England, praying the passage of a law permitting him to renew his application for a patent for his invention of belts of canvas or duck for driving machinery, it was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PLUMB. I now rise to ask unanimous consent to withdraw a petition which I presented this morning—a petition for the relief of Maurice Gandy. I do so for the reason that on reading the petition it is disclosed that Mr. Gandy is a British subject, and consequently not entitled under the rules of the Senate to present a petition, and I therefore ask leave to withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of my honorable friend from Kansas for information simply, if it is true that the Senate has not recognized the propriety of a petition from a subject of a foreign country.

Mr. PLUMB. That is the fact, as I am told.

Mr. HOAR. I do not in the least wish to interpose any objection to my honorable friend dealing as he sees fit with a petition intrusted to his charge, and I therefore make no objection to his request; but I should hope that if any citizen of a foreign government has any grievance at the hands of this, while he was dwelling here or elsewhere, the Senate would allow him to make a respectful statement of it and receive it without resorting to his minister.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the rule covering this point.

The Chief Clerk read from Rule VII, as follows:

But no petition or memorial or other paper signed by citizens or subjects of a foreign power shall be received, unless the same be transmitted to the Senate by the President.

ALEXANDER SMILEY.

The bill (S. 221) for the relief of Alexander Smiley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to remit the amount of $660.94 assessed against Alexander Smiley, proprietor of distillery numbered 2, in the county of Mississippi, Missouri, if the Commissioner shall be satisfied that Smiley has fully paid to the Government all taxes due for spirits actually made by his distillery from the 1st of February to the 23d of April, 1875.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ESTATE OF FRANK SOULÉ.

The bill (S. 163) releasing the estate of the late Frank Soulé, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of California, and his sureties on his official bond, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary calls attention to a verbal error in lines 12 and 13, where the word "and" is repeated.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Let that be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made.

Mr. CONGER. Is there a report in this case?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I will state that there is a written report in that case. It is the same report that I presented to the last Congress. The bill passed the Senate at the last Congress and passed in the Forty-seventh Congress, so that it has twice passed the Senate. The report goes into the whole merits of the case. It can be read if it is deemed necessary.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. MILLER, of New York, from the Committee on Finance, January 12, 1886.

Mr. CONGER. What has been read of the report recalls to my mind my own examination of the case, and I am satisfied. I do not ask that it be read further.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SIOUX RESERVATION IN DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 52) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians, in Dakota, into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, was announced as next in order.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] here who reported the bill. Let that be passed over informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over informally, if there be no objection.

OFFICIAL LETTER-BOOKS OF NORTH CAROLINA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 19) directing copies of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina to be furnished to said State.

It is a direction to the Secretary of War to cause to be made out duly certified copies of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina now in the War Department, and to be delivered to the governor of North Carolina, retaining the originals in the War Department.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI HOME GUARDS.

The bill (S. 216) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certificates of discharge to certain members of the Missouri Home Guards was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to furnish, upon their several applications therefor, a certificate of discharge to each and every member of the Missouri Home Guards whose claims for pay were adjudicated by the Hawkins-Taylor commission, under the act approved March 25, 1862, and the several acts supplementary thereto.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

OSCAR EASTMOND AND JAMES W. ATWILL.

The bill (S. 214) for the relief of Oscar Eastmond and James W. Atwill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to cause to be issued and delivered to Oscar Eastmond a commission as colonel and to James W. Atwill a commission as lieutenant-colonel of the First Regiment North Carolina Volunteers, to date as of June 20, 1865, and to cause them to be duly mustered out as of date June 27, 1865. The commissions and musters-out issued thereunder are not to entitle Eastmond and Atwill, or either of them, or any person claiming by, through, under, or from them, or either of them, to any pay, compensation, or allowance of any kind whatever, and are only to entitle them respectively to the rank of colonel and lieutenant-colonel of the regiment named.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALEXANDER FRANCESCO.

The bill (S. 424) giving a military record to Alexander Francesco, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to enter upon the rolls of Company D, Forty-fifth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, the name of Alexander Francesco, as a private, duly mustered into the service of the United States as of date October 24, 1863, and to complete his military record as follows: "Captured in Magoffin County, Kentucky, December 1, 1863; confined at Richmond, Va., December 8, 1863; admitted to rebel hospital, Richmond, Va., February 15, 1864, where he died, February 25, 1864, of chronic diarrhea."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN HOLLINS M'BLAIR.

The bill (S. 193) for the relief of John Hollins McBlair was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in line 14, after the word "sixty-four," to add:

With the pay of his grade and rank from April 30, 1884, and with a full discharge from all liability for any sums paid to or received by him previously to said date.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act only, and only so far as they affect John Hollins McBlair; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said John Hollins McBlair, late a first lieutenant in the Fifteenth United States Infantry Regiment, to the same grade and rank of first lieutenant in the Army of the United States in the infantry service, and to place him upon the retired-list of the Army as of the date of April 8, 1864, with the pay of his grade and rank from April 30, 1884, and with a full discharge from all liability for any sums paid to or received by him previously to said date.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The committee propose an amendment to the preamble, in line 8, after the word "list," to strike out "and is now so borne" and insert in lieu thereof "up to November 12, 1884;" and in line 10, after the word "officer," to insert "up to April 30, 1884;" so as to read:

Whereas John Hollins McBlair, late a first lieutenant in the Fifteenth United States Infantry, was, by order of the President, dated October 6, 1863, wholly retired from the service, and was afterward, on April 8, 1864, ordered by the President to be retired for disability incident to the service and to be placed upon the retired-list; and has ever since been borne upon such retired-list, up to November 12, 1884, and has been regularly paid as such retired officer up to April 30, 1884, and the Court of Claims has recently decided that the order of the President of April 8, 1864, attempting to revoke the order of October 6, 1863, wholly retiring him, and to restore him to the retired-list, was not operative, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the resolution of the Senate for the printing of the reports of tests of iron and steel and other materials for industrial purposes made at the Watertown arsenal.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 602) to legalize the election of the Territorial Legislative Assembly of Wyoming, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BETTS, NICHOLS & CO.

The bill (S. 556) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Treasurer of the United States to pay to the holder thereof draft numbered 5453, on Treasury Interior warrant numbered 4801, dated March 1, 1860, payable to and indorsed by Sampson & Hendricks, of Austin, Tex., on the assistant treasurer of the United States at New Orleans, for $250.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENTS TO INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTORS.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask leave out of order to offer the following resolution calling for information, and ask action upon it now:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish information to the Senate as to whether or not any collectors of internal revenue not confirmed by the Senate have received any portion of the salary pertaining to the office contrary to the law of March 1, 1879, which provides "that no collector shall be entitled to any portion of the salary pertaining to the office unless such collector shall have been confirmed by the Senate, except in the case of commissions to fill vacancies occurring during the recess of the Senate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRIS and Mr. BECK. Let that go over.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I ask to have the resolution printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will lie over and be printed.

FUNERAL OF VICE-PRESIDENT HENDRICKS.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, the actual and necessary expenses of the officers and members of the Senate who attended the funeral of the late Thomas A. Hendricks, Vice-President of the United States, in November last, on voucher or vouchers approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state that these expenses were incurred, as they always have to be in a vacation, as the result of a meeting of all the Senators in Washington that was called and held, and a committee was designated to attend the funeral. It is to pay the expenses so incurred that the resolution provides for.

The resolution was agreed to.

TENEDORE TEN EYCK.

The bill (S. 519) to authorize the President to restore Tenedore Ten Eyck to his former rank in the Army, and to place him upon the retired-list of Army officers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, after the word "empowered," to strike out "to restore" and insert "to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and empowered to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint to his former rank in the Army, and to place upon the retired-list of Army officers, Tenedore Ten Eyck, late a captain in the Eighteenth United States Infantry: Provided, That the said Tenedore Ten Eyck shall be entitled to no pay or allowances as an Army officer for the time he may have been out of the military service, but shall, from the date of his restoration, be entitled to the pay and allowances pertaining to an officer of his rank on the retired-list: And provided further, That he shall receive no pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to inquire if it is too late to object to the consideration of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. An objection is in order at any stage of the proceeding.

Mr. PLUMB. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas objects, and under the rule the bill lies over.

ROBERT J. BAUGNESS.

The bill (S. 389) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Robert J. Baugness, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It is a direction to the Secretary of War to correct the record of Robert J. Baugness, late a private in Company I, Thirty-seventh Illinois Volunteers, so as to remove the charge of desertion, and to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to the heirs or legal representatives of Baugness, deceased, the bounty and allowances that would have been due him had not such charge of desertion appeared against him on the rolls.

Mr. PLATT. Is there a report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] reported the bill. There is no written report on file.

Mr. HAMPTON. I will state for the information of the Senate that a report was made last year, and upon that report the bill was passed by the Senate. The facts of the case are that this man was a soldier, and, when not on duty at his regular post, under an assumed name went into a fight in another place and was killed. It is proved beyond all doubt that he was killed; and the bill is simply to enable his heirs to obtain his bounty and allowances.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THOMAS J. MILLER.

The bill (S. 87) for the relief of Thomas J. Miller, of Washington Territory, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of War to examine into and ascertain the loss and damage sustained by Thomas J. Miller, a citizen of Washington Territory, by the seizure and sinking of his ferry-boat on the Columbia River by the armed forces of the United States, for the purpose of preventing its being used by the hostile Indians during the late Bannock war in that Territory about the month of July, 1878; and $500, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is appropriated to enable the Secretary of War to adjust and the accounting officers of the Treasury to pay the amount of the loss and damage as allowed under the authority of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM H. MORGAN.

The bill (S. 528) for the relief of William H. Morgan was announced as next in order.

Mr. HAMPTON. I move that that bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM M. MAYNADIER.

The bill (S. 98) for the relief of Maj. William M. Maynadier, a paymaster in the United States Army, was announced as next in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The consideration of the bill being objected to, it lies over under the rule.

CHURCH AND STATE.

The next business in order was the resolution submitted by Mr. MORGAN January 11, 1886, in relation to the appointment of officers of the United States to participate with the officers of any church in the joint conduct and administration of the spiritual or temporal affairs of such church, &c.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is not present. I think the best course would be to let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will lie over, retaining its place on the Calendar, if there be no objection. The Senate is at the end of the Calendar, and the hour of 2 o'clock has very nearly arrived.

JUDICIAL SALARIES.

Mr. COKE. I ask that the regular order be laid before the Senate. I have a motion to submit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order at 2 o'clock is the bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes.

Mr. COKE. In accordance with notice given by me a few days ago, I now ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the regular order be laid aside in order that I may submit some remarks on the resolution offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas asks that the regular order be laid over informally, that he may address the Senate on the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky. No objection is made, and it is so ordered.

WYOMING TERRITORIAL LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Texas yield to me a moment?

Mr. COKE. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask permission to call up a message from the House with reference to Senate bill 602. The House has sent us an amendment. It is in relation to the apportioment of Wyoming Territory, and as that Legislature is in the very act of assembling and can not assemble legally unless we concur with the House, I ask to call it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 602) to legalize the election of the Territorial Legislative Assembly of Wyoming.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the Senate concur in the House amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The House amendment is to strike out all after the word "and," where it occurs the second time in line 10 of the bill, and insert:

The governor, secretary of the Territory, and president of the council shall act as a board of apportionment in said Territory, for apportioning the members of the next Legislative Assembly thereof, and shall meet at the capital of said Territory on the first Monday in September, A. D. 1886, and shall, or a majority of them, reapportion the members of the council and house of representatives thereof upon the basis of the voting population as shown by the number of votes cast for Delegate in Congress in November, 1884, allotting members of each house of the Legislative Assembly to the different sections of the Territory pro rata, as nearly as practicable according to such population, and to that end may apportion when necessary in joint council districts.

That sections 2, 3, and 4 of "An act providing for the reapportionment of the members of the Legislatures in the Territories of Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming," approved June 3, 1880, be and the same are hereby continued in force so far as applicable to said Territory, and shall be in force as a part of this act, except as herein modified and provided.

Mr. HARRISON. I only desire to say that the modification which the House has made amounts to this, that instead of laying the duty upon the Legislature now about to assemble, and whose assembling is legalized by the first section, to make an apportionment for the next Legislature, the House has provided that the same officers who were authorized by the act of 1880 to make an apportionment shall make it for the next Legislature. I much prefer the bill as the Senate passed it, but as the Legislature is now in the very act of assembling, indeed has come together and organized, and as I am advised by the Delegate from that Territory that his people desire to acquiesce in this amendment, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

COIN DUTIES ON IMPORTED GOODS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] is before the Senate.

Mr. COKE. I ask that the resolution be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. BECK on the 18th of December, 1885, relative to the payment in coin of customs dues and the disposition of the coin so paid.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the suspension of the further coinage of silver so earnestly pressed upon Congress in the message of the President and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, is a matter of such transcendent importance and fraught with such momentous consequences to the country, that while careful and respectful consideration should be given to the arguments of these high officials in support of the proposition, these should stand alone on their merits, without aid or intendment in their favor, by reason of the exalted source whence they come. The question is too great to be settled on the dictum of any man or men, however high they may be in official position. The representatives of the States and the people in the two Houses of Congress have duties and responsibilities in respect to this great question which they must meet on their own independent judgment in their own way, and without reference to the views of others, except to the extent they are sustained by reason and logic and right. Approving as I do substantially in other regards the principles and policies of the Administration, I regret to differ with the President and Secretary of the Treasury on a vital question like this, but my convictions, after a careful and thorough consideration of all they have said in support of their views, are diametrically opposed to those expressed by them, and I must stand by and maintain them. The policy of precipitating this question upon the country regardless of a public sentiment which has shown in every possible way a fixed determination to adhere to our silver coinage I believe hurtful to the best interests of the country, as tending directly to destroy confidence in its silver currency, but it having been the choice of the President to continue the agitation begun and presistently kept up by his Republican predecessors, however much we may deplore the fact, nothing is left to those who can not concur in his views but to join issue squarely with him.

The proposition of the President and Secretary of the Treasury is to suspend the further coinage of silver; the only contingency upon which, in their judgment, the coinage of silver, if suspended, can ever be safely resumed being an agreement between the United States and leading European powers for concert of action in coining and maintaining in circulation silver money, a contingency which they frankly confess is not likely to occur, and which the numerous fruitless efforts of this Government to bring about shows can not be hoped for. So that the recommendation to suspend the further coinage of silver means, in plain English, to demonetize silver, except that already coined. That is plainly the proposition submitted to Congress and with which we have to deal. If adopted it is an absolute rejection of bimetallism, under which this country has prospered, and the erection of the single gold standard as the basis of our financial system.

The argument upon which this vital and far-reaching policy is recommended is based solely and wholly upon the alleged depreciation of silver as compared with gold. The unsoundness of the basis of the argument is believed to be susceptible of demonstration so conclusive as to leave no doubt or question. It is true that the silver in the coined silver dollar, when exposed in the market for sale as merchandise, is worth only 80 cents in gold, yet it is also true that the general range of prices for all other sorts of merchandise, for all kinds of property, are more depressed than for silver bullion. Gold has appreciated, has risen in value, until 80 cents of that metal will purchase what formerly was one dollar's worth of silver bullion, but it will purchase a still larger proportion of any other character of property or merchandise.

When silver bullion more than holds its own in comparison with other commodities and the 80 cents in gold which it now sells for will buy more of the necessaries and comforts and luxuries of life, more wheat, more pork, more beef, more sugar, coffee, and tea, more dry goods, more in fine of any description of property, real or personal, than it would have bought when the same amount of bullion would have brought 100 cents in gold, then it must be conceded that silver has not depreciated, but that gold has risen in value. There is no other way of determining this question than by comparison in the mode indicated; for the depreciation or appreciation of any character of money, whether gold, silver, or paper, can not be proved except by comparison with the prices of commodities of which it is the measure of value.

I have before me a table, too long to consume time in reading, prepared by the late Director of the Mint, Hon. H. C. Burchard, containing a list of ninety commodities exported from the United States, with their declared values at the time of export, for the years 1870, 1883, and 1884. These commodities comprise agricultural, manufactured, and mining products, and were selected with a view to making a just average of the prices of all sorts of products and merchandise for the years named, and it is shown conclusively by this table that the prices in 1870 were 26 per cent. higher than they were in 1884, or, in other words, that in the general range of prices of all commodities there was an average fall of 26 per cent. between 1870 and 1884. I have before me a similar table indicating general prices of commodities in England, which shows between 1873 and 1885 an average decline of 28 per cent.

I have before me still another table of twelve leading staple commodities, among them flour, cotton, and wool, which show an average decline in England of 36 per cent. between 1873 and 1885. In 1873 the silver bullion in a dollar was worth 103 cents in gold. It is now worth 80 cents in gold; a fall of 23 per cent. It is an abuse of terms to say in the light of these undisputed facts, when silver bullion has been less affected by this general decline than any other known commodity and can be exchanged now for more of anything of value in the world except gold than it could be in 1873, when it outvalued gold, that silver has depreciated. I can take the 80 cents in gold for which the bullion in the silver dollar will sell in the market and buy with it more of anything that any man has for sale than it would have bought in 1873, when it would have sold in the market for 103 cents in gold; and the tables I have referred to prove it incontestably. Every farmer who raises wheat, or cotton, or wool, or beef, or pork knows this to his sorrow, and needs no testimony other than his own experience.

No, Mr. President, silver has not depreciated, but gold has risen in value, and a gold dollar will buy to-day an average of from 25 to 30 per cent. more of the products of the farm—of wheat, of cotton, of wool, of pork, and of beef—than it would in 1873; and, more than that, it will buy that much more of the sweat and toil and life of the wage laborer, because when the product declines in value wages must also come down. Silver has remained with the farmer, the laborer, the miner, with the producer in every branch of industry, and follows and abides in value with the products of labor, falling as they fall and rising as they rise, while gold has left all and mounted to an altitude of its own, depressing all the products of labor in value exactly in proportion to the height of its rise. If silver bullion was alone in its decline this would be depreciation, but when it bears the same relation to all other commodities it has always borne, the margin between it and gold can only be referred to the rise in value of gold.

That gold has risen in value and that all property and products of labor have declined correspondingly, so that gold commands from 25 to 30 per cent. greater purchasing power than it had in 1873, can not be questioned. The causes leading to this condition are not difficult to discover. It is a well-known truth that when supply and demand are in a normal condition, and balance each other, prices of commodities are to a great extent regulated by the volume of money in circulation, an ample volume causing good prices and an inadequate volume lower prices. When money is abundant, property and commodities bring good prices, and when money is scarce, property must be sacrificed in order to get it. The scarcer the money in circulation the more valuable it is and the more property and labor it will buy; that is, the lower the prices of property and the wages of labor. This is within the experience and knowledge of all men. A destruction of one-half of the money of the world will leave to the other half the same purchasing power formerly possessed by the whole.

Of course it can not be stated accurately how much of gold and silver there is in the world, but it is estimated by the most eminent statisticians, who have explored all the avenues of information that there are thirteen thousand million dollars' worth of gold and silver, of which about seven thousand millions are coined and circulated as money, half of it being gold and the other half silver. The Director of the Mint in his annual report gives the production of gold and silver of the last calendar year of the world at $189,500,000, of which he says $99,500,000 is gold and $90,000,000 silver.

All the statistics, both as to the total amount of gold and silver in the world and the annual production of these metals for many years, show the two metals nearly equal in amount. It is safe to say that silver constitutes one-half of the metallic money of the world. England, being a great creditor nation, in 1821 demonetized silver and established the single gold standard. The whole world was and is indebted to England. Five hundred millions of dollars is estimated to be her annual income from her foreign investments and foreign trade. She desired dear money—that is, money with the greatest possible purchasing power—and made gold her only legal tender, so her debtors must pay her in gold. Germany, another great creditor nation, after she had conquered France and exacted the great war indemnity of $1,200,000,000 in gold, in 1871 demonetized silver, impelled by the same reason which had prompted England.

The bankers, capitalists, bondholders, and syndicates of England and Germany and the other European states which have followed their lead in demonetizing silver, and who mainly hold and own or control the enormous indebtedness due by all the world to these great creditor nations, were the movers and prompters and promoters of the policy of degrading and demonetizing silver—of course for the purpose of magnifying and increasing the value and purchasing power of the gold which they exacted from debtors. The passage of the act of February 12, 1873, taking away the right of free coinage of silver, and the adoption of the Revised Statutes in June, 1874, by the Congress of the United States, taking away the legal-tender quality from the silver dollar, completed the demonetization of silver in this country and established the gold standard. No greater outrage was ever perpetrated under the forms of law than these enactments which demonetized silver.

The first, so artfully embodied in a long bill of sixty-seven sections, that General Grant, then President, who approved the bill, did not know of it, as is shown by his well-known letter to Mr. Cowdry, written seven months afterward, which I will not read here because every Senator has seen it, and the last contained in the Revised Statutes, which were enacted in bulk upon the assurance of the revising committee that no new matter had been inserted. The subject had not been discussed before the people or by the press, had not been debated in Congress, had not been considered by the country, and the people as well as the President who approved the bill, were utterly ignorant of what had been done for many months afterward. Had the people been aroused to a knowledge of the fact in time this effort to despoil them would have been overwhelmed with defeat. When England demonetized silver the American silver dollar was worth 103 cents in gold.

When Germany demonetized silver in 1871 the same dollar outvalued gold the same per cent., and when silver was fraudulently and surreptitiously demonetized in the United States in 1873 it outvalued gold to about the same extent. It was not demonetized because it was a cheap dollar or a dishonest dollar, as is alleged against it now, for it was worth more than gold. The great creditor nations, England and Germany, with the lesser European states which joined them in their policy, demonetized silver on a cold calculation that by destroying one half of the world's money the other half would be greatly increased in value, and the creditor section of this Union, where the great national and other banks are, where the Government and other bonds—State, railway, municipal, and corporation, and four-fifths of the gold coin and other active banking capital of this country are found—demonetized silver in the United States in 1873 on exactly the same sort of calculation.

Bankers, bondholders, and capitalists dictated the demonetizing policy in Europe and in the United States alike and for the same reasons. The aim and purpose in Europe was to make profit by oppressing foreign debtors and borrowers, while in the United States it was to profit by the oppression of our own countrymen, to make money scarcer and dearer, and compel the payment of principal and interest in the appreciated and enhanced coin. In the debate on the silver bill in 1878 Mr. Hereford, of West Virginia, in a speech in this body, read an extract from a lecture delivered by Professor Sumner, of Yale College, before the students of that institution a few days before, against remonetizing silver, in which the learned professor said:

> The indebted landholders would be the gainers. It is from the laborers and those receiving fixed incomes that the indebted landholders would derive a part of their advantage. It won't affect city landholders, only cotton and wheat growers would be the gainers. It would be a gain for the West and South at the expense of the East and North, and no gain to the national wealth.

The landholders alluded to by the distinguished professor are the great body of producers in the South and West. The people who raise "cotton and wheat" are the same who raise wool and corn and pork and beef and all the agricultural products which clothe and feed the people of this country, with a surplus to export which constitutes 80 per cent. of our exports and preserves the balance of trade in our favor in spite of a protective tariff, and brings from abroad the gold coin which swells the reserves in our bank and Treasury vaults.

This utterance of Professor Sumner was not more frank than was the declaration of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], who, in a speech in the Senate on the 13th of December, 1878, in opposition to the remonetization of silver, used this language:

I speak, sir, in behalf of the bondholders of Massachusetts, and I do not in so speaking speak for a handful of men in State street or a platoon of men in Wall street, but I speak for every one man, woman, and child in three in the whole population of that State, who have $230,000,000 now invested in her savings banks and reinvested by those banks in these securities—to a very large extent.

These representative gentlemen disclose the true reason of the opposition to silver coinage. Gold interest and principal on their bonds, the gold made more valuable by the demonetization of silver and higher premiums accruing on the bonds as a consequence of it, and their vast banking and other cash capital increased from 25 to 40 per cent. in purchasing power, in its command over the products of labor—this is what this crusade against silver means. It matters not that not only the West and South, the people who raise cotton and wheat, but all the people, North, South, East, and West, who are debtors and borrowers, are to be saddled with an enormous addition to their debts; it matters not that the silver dollar has been a legal-tender coin from 1792 up to 1873, when it was secretly demonetized, and is the money of the contract under which the bonds were issued; it matters not that the Constitution expressly recognizes both silver and gold as money and forbids the States to make any other a legal tender, the bonds must be increased in value; the premiums on them must be run up; the vast banking capital must be magnified, enhanced, and increased in value and power; and silver, although it is the money of the great mass of the people, used in their daily transactions not only in the West and South, but in the East and North as well, must go, if it is in the power of organized capital to destroy it.

The people are satisfied with silver. There is no depreciation of the silver dollar; it pays debts as well as gold; it passes as current as gold; it buys property as readily as gold. Silver certificates are as good as any bank notes, and are preferred to gold. The people desire no interference with it; it is a currency they are attached to. They have in every form in which their wishes can be expressed declared their approval of silver. But the war against it goes on with increasing vigor. The fight against silver is a fight against the people. It is a fight of capital against producing labor. It is a contest between bonds and dollars and banks on one side and American citizens on the other; between greed and avarice and cunning for more dollars, and men, women, and children for bread and meat.

Who are the aggressors in this contest? Who demonetized silver in 1873, the dollar which had been the standard of value since 1792? Not the people, for they knew nothing of it. Their President (General Grant), did not hear of it until months after it had been done, although he signed the bill through which it was accomplished. The people rose in their might, and over the veto of the man who was in the Presidential office, by more than a two-thirds majority in both Houses of Congress, remonetized silver in 1878, and declared by the law of that date that the silver dollar should be a legal tender for all debts, public and private. It seems that under our form of government this ought to have settled the question, but it did not. The same people, the same influences, the same banking corporations that compassed the demonetization of silver in 1873, and that by every means known to political warfare opposed the remonetization of silver in 1878, have from that time until this waged a fierce and unceasing war upon silver coinage, have degraded and dishonored the silver dollar in every conceivable way, and have to a great extent nullified the law of 1878.

The national banks, the fiscal agents of the Government, created for the convenience of the Government, holding their charters by the grace of the Government, are the leaders, the chief inciters and promoters of this war. These banks, as shown by the official reports of the Director of the Mint, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency, have now hoarded in their vaults $250,130,471 in gold, out of a total of gold coin in the United States amounting to $542,174,636, being within a small fraction of one-half of all the gold in the country, while they hold only $11,978,833 of silver out of a total of $278,824,201, full tender and subsidiary together, now coined. They have the gold which is to be raised in value, and the Government and the people have the silver which they have degraded and are seeking to demonetize.

In addition, these banks hold United States bonds amounting to $340,144,650, now payable in coin, silver or gold or both, at the option of the Government, which, if silver is demonetized, must be paid principal and interest in gold. The loans and discounts of these banks which represent the debts due them from the people, now payable in silver as well as gold, but which if silver is demonetized will be payable only in gold, amounted, as reported by the Comptroller of the Currency, on the 1st day of October, 1885, to the enormous sum of $1,301,155,304. The holdings by State and savings and other banks, all of which have generally made common cause with the national banks in the war on silver, of gold and bonds and the indebtedness of the people to them can not be definitely ascertained, but are believed to be greater than those of the national banks.

These facts give some idea of the enormous stake at issue in this contest, and of the reasons for the persistent aggressiveness with which it is waged by the opponents of silver coinage. The banks, being the arbiters and controllers of the currency of the country, commenced the fight on silver in 1873 when the silver dollar was worth 103 cents in gold, and have, with the aid of the executive department of the Government, the whole power of which, with its vast patronage, from the beginning of this agitation has been used earnestly and zealously in co-operation with them, succeeded in discrediting silver through an exaltation of the value of gold. They call this depreciation of silver; I call it a forced rise in the value of gold, created and brought about by the joint action of the banks and the executive officers of the Government in boycotting the silver dollar, in contempt and defiance of the act of 1878 remonetizing silver, and the known and oft-expressed will of the people.

If gold had been denounced from the White House and from the Treasury Department, and the banks had dishonored it and defamed it, had conspired to degrade it, had excluded it from their clearance-houses, as has been done with silver, who doubts that gold would have been the cheaper metal now? The reports of the Secretaries of the Treasury, of the Comptrollers of the Currency, and the Directors of the Mint, as well as the messages of all the Presidents from 1878 to this time, so far as they relate to this subject, have been loaded with invective of the silver dollar, and framed with special reference to discrediting our silver currency.

After their efforts have been crowned with success, and gold has been exalted in value by their abuse of silver, we are called on to abolish the coinage of our silver dollar, because it is a cheap, depreciated, dishonest dollar. It was an honest dollar, and more than an honest dollar, because worth 103 cents in gold when the banks and bondholders brought about its demonetization in 1873. Five years after, in 1878, when we remonetized silver, although Germany had demonetized silver in 1871, and the United States, the leading silver-producing nation in the world, had followed in abandoning silver in 1873, the discount on silver bullion was only 8 cents on the dollar. This was the discount when it seemed that all the great powers of the world were about to abandon silver. When this Government remonetized silver in 1878, had the law been executed, had silver been paid out to the bondholders as the law required it should be paid as well as gold, had the executive officers of our Government honestly and in good faith and with that loyalty to the will of the people as expressed on the statute-book which should characterize their every act sustained our silver coinage, had the national banks—the creatures and agents of the governments—sustained it in good faith, as the banks and bondholders would have been compelled by self-interest to do if our executive officers had discharged their duty in paying out silver to the public creditors, there is not a shadow of doubt but that silver would have been as good as gold.

An Andrew Jackson in the White House at any time since 1878 to enforce the law, and take by the throat the combination formed and inspired for its nullification and defeat, would have settled this question, and the country would not have been vexed nor business depressed by this agitation. Half of the people in this country have been made to believe by official reports emanating from the Treasury Department that all the available space in our mints, our subtreasuries, and in our Treasury building in Washington is filled with useless silver dollars, which can not be gotten into circulation, and that the expenditure of $2,000,000 per month for silver bullion to coin more of them is idle extravagance, and these reports give this as a reason for discontinuing the coinage of silver and relying on gold alone. They fail to state the whole truth, for the officials of that Department know as well as anybody that there are in actual circulation among the people at least ten dollars of silver coin to one dollar of gold coin, and that three-fourths of the silver dollars in the Treasury are represented by silver certificates in active circulation among the people, maintaining the prices of property, the wages of labor, and doing good service as ready instrumentalities in the business and commerce of the country, and that the silver dollars in the Treasury, to the full amount of the silver certificates issued, must be kept there—are required by positive statute to be kept there—for their redemption.

The official report of the Director of the Mint shows on the 1st day of July, 1885, the total coinage of silver dollars to have been $203,884,381, and of this amount that $38,471,269 was in the banks and in general circulation among the people in actual coin, leaving in the Treasury $165,413,112, and against this amount in the Treasury that there were outstanding $140,323,140 of silver certificates. These silver certificates are redeemable in silver dollars on demand, and of course the silver dollars must be kept in the Treasury to redeem them. It is true that on the date named $38,370,700 of these silver certificates were in the Treasury, having been paid there in regular course of business, but were there to be paid out as other moneys are paid. These facts show that of all the silver dollars coined all have gone into circulation, either in the actual coin or in silver certificates, which represent them, except $25,089,972. Why is this amount not in circulation? I answer by reading from the Treasurer's report made at the beginning of this session of Congress. On page 14 he says:

The issue of silver certificates, by Treasury officers in the South and West, for gold coin deposited with the assistant treasurer at New York, under departmental circular of September 18, 1880, was discontinued in January last (1885). The amount which had been issued in this manner to the date named was $90,730,500.

The gold coin was paid over the subtreasury counter, dollar for dollar, for these silver certificates, which are redeemable only in silver dollars. These cheap, dishonest, discounted silver dollars, not worth so much as gold by 20 per cent., according to the reports of the Treasury Department, which cumber, as they tell us, the Treasury vaults and can not be gotten into circulation, are there to redeem these same silver certificates which the people are glad to get dollar for dollar in exchange for the gold coin. If the practice of allowing the people of the South and West to give gold coin in exchange for silver certificates had not been discontinued on the 1st of January, 1885, now more than one year ago, the ratio at which these exchanges had been made up to that time would have put in circulation among the people silver certificates covering a larger amount of silver dollars than are now in the Treasury unrepresented by outstanding silver certificates.

The message of the President and the reports from the Treasury Department express grave apprehensions that the Treasury will be depleted of its gold, yet here is a mode of replenishing the Treasury with gold and at the same time of putting all the silver in circulation, through representative silver certificates, preferred by the people to gold coin, which has been deliberately abandoned by the Treasury Department. Why was this done? Of course it was done to discredit silver, to prevent as far as possible the circulation of silver certificates. There could have been no other motive for it. I read again from the Treasurer's report. On page 24 he says:

The further issue of silver certificates should be discontinued, as being both expensive and useless.

To the extent that the Treasury Department has the power to do it silver certificates have been suppressed by a refusal to accept gold coin for them, and this recommendation refers to the law under which the holders of silver dollars may exchange them for silver certificates. The national bank circulation, according to the Comptroller's report, has decreased within the last three years $48,000,144, and is still steadily decreasing; but he says on page 18 of his report:

While the bank-note circulation of this country is steadily decreasing, there has been no reduction in the total circulating medium in the United States, the reduction in the national-bank currency outstanding having been more than met by the coinage of the standard silver dollar and the issuance of certificates thereon.

Notwithstanding this admission, that the country has been saved from the ruinous consequences of a heavy contraction of its currency by the national banks solely by our silver coinage and the issuance of silver certificates, the official who makes the admission joins in swelling the chorus of all the officers of the Treasury Department that silver coinage must cease and silver certificates must be suppressed.

Nor do they stop at this, for the Secretary of the Treasury, on page 15 of his report, gravely informs us that our silver remonetizing act of 1878 and the act of May 31, 1878, which prevented the cancellation and destruction of, and preserved as part of our circulating medium, the $346,000,000 of United States legal-tender notes so familiar to us as "greenbacks," are two evils "which are each a separate menace to the public tranquillity and injurious to the public morals and the public faith."

Every form of money known to our people—silver dollars, silver certificates, legal-tender greenbacks or United States notes, except gold coin and national-bank notes, which are elaborately praised and defended—is denounced earnestly, unsparingly, and fiercely in the reports from the Treasury Department. The meaning of this can not be misunderstood—indeed, is openly avowed in these reports. Notes issued by the national banks and withdrawn by them at their will and pleasure, with no responsibility to the public either in issuing or withdrawing them, are to be our sole paper currency, and gold and the comparatively small amounts of silver already coined are to be our metallic currency hereafter, if the views of the executive department of the Government on this subject are to prevail. This is a consummation for which the national banks and the other holders of Government bonds have long struggled. A monopoly of the paper circulation of this country, which can be expanded or contracted at their pleasure, is what they desire, and this means absolute dominion over the people, their property and values. A deposit of Government bonds being the basis of their circulation, every holder of one of these, whether a stockholder in a national bank or not, is interested in extending this use of his securities, because it renders them more valuable and increases the premium on them.

I make no war on holders of bonds, and will defend their right to be paid the uttermost farthing of the principal and interest of their securities according to the terms of the contract—that is, in silver and gold, or either, at the option of the Government—against assault from any quarter. I make no war upon national banks, because while I opposed their being rechartered, because I do not believe that the sovereign power to furnish a paper currency should be delegated to any corporation, but that our paper currency should be issued by the Government, based on and redeemable in coin, yet the law was passed, and their rights under it I would protect as fully as any Senator would who voted to recharter them, but the people who hold the bonds and own the banks are the aggressors in this contest. They are making war, in their own interest and for their own enrichment at the public expense, on the established currency and the established coinage of the people, and those of us who oppose them are simply maintaining as best we may the rights and interests of the people under existing law.

The United States legal-tender notes, and the silver dollars, and their representatives, the silver certificates, which the Secretary of the Treasury denounces as "evils" and each of them "a separate menace to the public tranquillity and injurious to the public morals and the public faith," are the only barriers which stand between the people of the United States and the greed and avarice of the banks, and the end and aim of this agitation is to remove them. As long as we have these forms of money, which are beyond the power of the banks to suppress or withdraw as they can the notes issued by themselves, we have a safeguard against undue contraction of the volume of our circulation, a security against money "corners" and spoliation by Wall street sharpers, and they should never be surrendered.

The people engaged in national banking are neither better nor worse than other people; they are simply a fair average of American citizenship. I will never by my vote intrust them or any other set of living men with the unrestrained power over the prosperity of the country and the property and values and products of labor of the people which they would possess, if permitted to dictate the amount and character of money to be circulated in this country and to contract or expand its volume at pleasure, as they will have if we abolish silver coinage.

The President and Secretary of the Treasury, while urging the demonetization of silver, claim to be in favor of both a gold and silver circulation, but contend that the silver already coined is ample, and that more of it will drive the gold out of the country. This is the old argument most relied on and most vehemently urged in the debate on this question in 1878 by those who opposed silver remonetization. It has been so effectually exploded and refuted by the experience of the country since that time that it is wonderful to see men of intelligence revamping and putting it into service again.

Official reports placed the amount of gold in this country in 1878, when the silver-coinage law was passed, at $244,353,390. The Director of the Mint reports on the 1st day of July, 1885, the amount of gold in the United States to be, bullion and coin, $609,021,731. So instead of silver remonetization driving gold out of the country as predicted, the amount of gold in the country has nearly trebled. This is a fact which no amount of theorizing can answer, and it is a fact which utterly annihilates the old argument against silver coinage. We coin only $24,000,000 of silver per annum, and the Director of the Mint reports the gold product of the mines of the United States at $38,800,000 for the last fiscal year, and it was more the year before; and, besides, we have the imports of gold to add to our stock of that metal.

The fact as shown by the statistics on this subject is that gold has accumulated in this country more rapidly since the remonetization of silver than it ever did before. The silver coined into standard legal-tender dollars amounted on the 1st day of July, 1885, according to official reports, to $203,884,381, and to this has been added $2,000,000 per month since. The balance of our silver coinage, amounting to about $75,000,000, is debased below the standard, and is legal tender only in amounts of $5. Excluding from the calculation the debased coinage, the stock of silver which the President believes sufficient for our purposes now amounts to some $215,000,000 of legal-tender dollars. General Grant in his letter to Mr. Cowdry, to which I have before adverted, expressed the opinion that our people would in time hoard away as much as two or three hundred millions of silver—lay it up in small amounts, not in banks, but at home. There is not even a gold standard country in Europe which has not more silver in proportion to population than the President, though claiming to be a bimetallist, is willing to have coined here, and not one of them that does not, as our official reports show, coin silver every year. Great Britain coined in 1884 nearly one-third as much silver as she did gold, and in 1883 her silver coinage was only $600,000 less than her gold coinage—the two being nearly equal.

If the developed, stationary, fossilized states of Europe are compelled to coin some silver annually, even those of them which have the single gold standard, to meet increased demands there, what must be the necessities of this great country in its grand march of progress and improvement? The United States, if we had enough for to-day, must provide an increased amount for increased population, increased commerce, and increased industrial activities, certain to need it the next year, and so on with each recurring year, as this vast country and its teeming wealth is populated and developed. Our paper currency and our vast system of paper credits and exchanges, through which the great commerce and business of the country are carried on, must rest on a gold and silver basis, and derive its efficacy solely from that support. The paper is worthless except as a representative of these metals, in which all of it is redeemable on demand.

The growth of the country in population, commerce, and wealth demands a constant and automatic expansion of the volume of its paper, and of necessity of its gold and silver basis. If the metallic basis is too narrow, ruinous contraction of the volume of circulation, if it is safe and redeemable, results; prices are thrown down, business paralyzed, and bankruptcy ensues. If the volume of paper is expanded on an insufficient metallic basis, distrust of its redeemability and want of confidence ensues, followed by panics, broken banks, and ruined fortunes. A demonetization of silver, except the legal-tender dollars already coined, will subject the country to a constant menace of these calamities, by narrowing the metallic basis of our circulation. The gold product of the world, it is agreed on all sides, is now and for several years has been declining, while increasing wealth and luxury are carrying a larger proportion of it every year into consumption in the arts.

The product of gold in the United States is by official reports 33⅓ per cent. of the annual product of the world, and this comes chiefly from the Pacific coast. I read from the last report of the Director of the Mint, to show the declining condition of its production there:

The decline in the production of gold on the Pacific coast is shown by the continued falling off in the deposits at the mint at San Francisco. The following table, exhibiting the deposits of gold bullion at that mint for a series of years, together with their yearly dimunition, shows the decrease in production to have been in the last four years $8,072,438.07.

Fiscal years.	Deposits.	Decline yearly.
1881	$28,846,898 04
1882	27,724,391 09	$1,122,506 95
1883	26,499,222 38	1,225,168 71
1884	23,417,948 16	3,081,274 22
1885	20,774,459 97	2,643,488 19
Total decline		8,072,438 07

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury for 1884 says on this subject:

The production of gold is diminishing, that of silver has practically reached its maximum, and there are strong indications that from this time the yield of both gold and silver mines will speedily decline.

By the reports of 1885 both gold and silver show a decline from last year.

Nobody denies the insufficiency of the world's supply of gold as a basis for the paper circulation necessary to do the business of the world. Is it prudent, is it wise, is it just to labor, to debtors, to producers, in the face of these admitted facts, to discard one-half of our metallic currency and take not the risk but the certainty of producing a contraction of our volume of circulation which will enormously increase the purchasing power of gold, which is in the hands of comparatively a few capitalists, while it will reduce wages, paralyze business, lower the prices of property, and add greatly to the burdens of debtors? The holders of gold and of bonds would reap a golden harvest, but to the great mass of the people who toil and produce and create the wealth of this country it would bring suffering and distress.

The European powers which have demonetized silver are creditor nations; $5,250,000,000 were due England and Germany alone from foreign nations; but the United States is a debtor nation, and, besides, produces 47 per cent. of all the silver annually produced in the world. They made money by demonetizing silver out of the foreign nations indebted to them, but both our Government and people are heavily indebted both at home and abroad.

By following the example of European states we destroy the value of our great silver mines, add vastly to the burden of our debts, public and private, and depreciate silver to such an extent as to compel other nations now using silver also to abandon it and compete with us and other gold-standard nations in a struggle for the gold, which is insufficient now and declining in production. These are some of the consequences of the policy urged upon Congress by the bondholders, bankers, and gold-holders, who would be enriched, while all others would be impoverished by it.

The specter of an exclusively silver circulation so alarming to some has no terrors for me. Germany was a silver-standard country until her conquest of France. Russia and Austria are now silver-standard countries. Silver was our standard of value from 1792 to 1873. Silver measures values to-day on three-fourths of the earth's territory and for nearly five-sixths of the population of the world. If our tariff is ever reduced so that our manufactured goods may find a foreign market, it is to China, Japan, Mexico, South and Central America, all silver-using countries, that they must go.

But we are in no danger of being reduced to a silver basis, though I would welcome it in preference to a despotic domination by national banks under the single gold standard, for the two go inseparably together, as we will see if silver is ever demonetized. If silver goes, the $346,000,000 of legal-tender notes will also go, for the banks are as determined in their hostility to the latter as they are to silver, and if successful in demonetizing silver will be irresistible in their onslaught on the legal-tender notes. France is the thriftiest and most prosperous nation on earth. Her ablest financiers inform us that not less than six hundred, and some place it as high as nine hundred, millions of dollars of silver are in circulation in France, in harmony, and side by side, with her gold currency. Her silver, when reduced to dollars, contains 15½ grains of silver in its relation to gold, while our silver dollar contains 16 grains. Hers is a cheaper dollar, because it contains 3 per cent. less silver, yet her silver money is not at a discount but on a parity with gold, nor does it drive the gold out of circulation, although England on one side and Germany on the other are gold-standard countries.

The Bank of France, according to the report of the Comptroller for 1884, had in its vaults $205,837,867 of silver money, the balance of the silver of that country being in the hands of the people. The amount in the Bank of France is several millions more than had been coined in the United States of legal-tender dollars up to the 1st of July, 1885, and lacks only ten or twelve millions of being as great as all coined up to this hour. If France can absorb and circulate from six hundred to eight hundred millions of silver dollars, cheaper dollars than ours, at par with her gold, and in harmony with it, without driving it out of the country or into hiding-places, ought we to be alarmed about the $215,000,000 of legal-tender dollars of silver we have in circulation? This country can absorb and circulate very much more silver than France, for in resources, population, territory, commerce, and industrial activity it is vastly greater.

The French Government sustains its silver currency, stands by it and holds it up, while the American Government wields its vast power to depreciate and destroy American silver coinage. Give us the executive vigor and good faith in upholding our silver coinage that is exerted in maintaining silver currency in France, and we will circulate greatly more silver than can be circulated in France, and that alongside of a good gold circulation. Our people prefer solvent, safe, redeemable paper to either gold or silver. Both of these metals are too cumbrous for convenience. The Government saves in the casual loss and destruction of paper money, which is clear profit, and in preserving these metals from loss by abrasion, the result of frequent handling, greatly more than the cost of building vaults to store them, and the silver dollars in the Treasury, kept there to redeem the silver certificates in circulation, are as much in circulation as if in the pockets of the people.

The hue and cry raised by our Treasury officials against silver because it will not circulate is a false clamor. The fact that the people, against the best efforts of these officials to suppress silver certificates and their refusal to pay out silver to the public creditors, use them interchangeably with United States notes and national-bank notes, and freely exchanged gold coin for them dollar for dollar as long as the Government would permit it, proves conclusively that silver if represented by notes of convenient size would circulate to an unlimited extent among them. The only mode in which gold is circulated is through bank notes of various and convenient amounts redeemable in coin. Why not circulate silver in the same mode?

Since 1878, now a period of about eight years, we have coined the amount of legal-tender silver dollars I have already stated, and at the same rate of coinage, that is, $2,000,000 per month, it will take fifteen years to raise our coinage to $575,000,000, which is less than the smallest amount claimed by anybody to be the silver circulation of France; and by that time, with our growth and improvement, we will need two or three times as much of that money as France has now. The truth is that the rate at which we are now coining silver does not meet the annual demand for increased circulation, and with each year of increased growth and wealth and industrial extension the present rate of coinage will become more and more inadequate and insufficient. The fears of the President that we will be plagued with too much silver seems to me to be utterly groundless; on the contrary, it is very reasonably to be feared that under existing laws we will not have enough. We can not afford to demonetize silver upon the theories of doctrinaires, however plausible they may be, when experience, that safest of all guides, both in this country and France, so thoroughly refutes them.

Gold and silver are precious metals the world over, and have been so through all ages, and will continue to be, and silver as fully so as gold. These metals have in all ages been yielded by Mother Earth in quantities and proportions adapted to the wants and necessities of mankind. Notwithstanding the estimates of the aggregate of both metals in the world show equal proportions of gold and silver, it is a part of their history that their relation to each other has constantly been changing by reason of the changing proportion of their production. At one time gold has been produced largely in excess and at another silver, but it has been the unvarying history of these metals that an excess of either has always been corrected by a corresponding production of the other in its turn, and that the supply of both has kept pace with the growth of population, business, and commerce of the world.

The flood of gold which was poured between 1851 and 1856 from the mines of California, Australia, and Russia, estimated at $900,000,000, which caused a decline of 5 per cent. in that metal as compared with silver, and caused alarmists to advocate its demonetization as they now do of silver, as we all know has been corrected by the more recent discoveries of silver; and so it has been for all time. A law of nature seems to have joined these metals together, and to have denied perfect efficacy to their functions as money except as co-operative forces. Under the double standard they support each other. If gold is scarce and high, silver becomes more abundant; if silver disappears, gold flows into its place. The people who have both to rely on can depend with absolute certainty on the presence at all times of one of them; a corner on both is impossible.

It is through this co-operative action of the two metals under the double standard that a sufficient circulation is assured for the demands of trade and commerce, for living wages to labor, for fair valuations in the transfers of property, and a safeguard is furnished as far as human wisdom can devise one against crises and panics and the loss and ruin they entail. Alexander Hamilton, in his report on the Mint in 1792, said:

To annul the use of either of the two metals as money is to abridge the quantity of circulating medium, and is liable to all the objections which arise from a comparison of the benefits of a full with the evils of a scant circulation.

I make no apology, in view of the importance of the question, for reading some quotations I find grouped in a very able and comprehensive pamphlet on this subject by Judge Robert W. Hughes, of Virginia. He quotes M. Edward Cazalet, of Milan, a distinguished and very able Italian banker, who says:

It is computed that the total metallic circulation of the world amounts to $7,000,000,000, of which about 3,750,000,000 are gold, and 3,250,000,000 are silver. The whole of this mass of metal is now doing service as currency, and to demonetize or eliminate either metal would involve a reduction of the circulation by about one-half. The half demonetized would be incalculaby depreciated in value; the half which remained to do double service would be appreciated to an equal extent. Since the value of all articles of commerce is represented by the currency, the value of these articles must fall in proportion to the reduction in the volume of the currency, otherwise the moneyed currency could not possibly do the work which the two metals combined had previously performed. Thus, to settle a debt of $100 it would be necessary to sell merchandise which under the double currency had been valued at $200. The creditor would gain at the expense of the debtor. * * * As the currency of a country is the only legal tender which can be offered in payment of a debt, the debtor would have to procure that currency from a circulation which had been suddenly contracted, and in proportion to this contraction the debtor would be a loser and the creditor a gainer. When the enormous amount of international and national as well as personal indebtedness is considered, and when we bear in mind that this indebtedness would be well-nigh doubled by the demonetization of either gold or silver, it becomes clear that such an event would revolutionize the actual conditions of society, and be nothing short of a universal calamity. (See M. Cazalet's pamphlet on bimetallism, pages 14, 15.)

He also quotes from Sir Archibald Alison's History of Europe the extract I now read. He says:

The two greatest events which have occurred in the history of mankind have been directly brought about by a successive contraction or expansion of the circulating medium of society. The fall of the Roman Empire, so long ascribed in ignorance, to slavery, heathenism, and moral corruption, was in reality brought about by a decline in the silver and gold mines of Spain and Greece. * * * And, as if Providence had intended to reveal in the clearest manner the influence of this mighty agent on human affairs the resurrection of mankind from the ruin which those causes had produced was owing to the directly opposite set of agencies being put in operation. Columbus led the way in the career of renovation; when he spread his sails to cross the Atlantic he bore mankind and its fortunes in his bark. * * * The annual supply of the precious metals for the use of the globe was tripled; before a century had expired the prices of every species of produce were quadrupled. The weight of debt and taxes insensibly wore off under the influence of that prodigious increase; in the renovation of industry the relations of society were changed; the weight of feudalism cast off; the rights of man established. Among the many concurring causes which conspired to bring about the mighty consummation, the most important, though hitherto the least observed, was the discovery of the mines of Mexico and Peru.

Speaking of a later period, the historian says:

If this circulating medium of the globe had remained stationary, or declining, as it was from 1815 to 1859, from the effects of South American revolution and English legislation, the necessary result must have been that it would have become altogether inadequate to the wants of man; and not only would industry have been everywhere cramped, but the price of produce would have universally and constantly fallen. Money would every day have become more valuable; all other articles measured in money less so; debt and taxes would have been constantly increasing in burden and oppression; the fate which crushed Rome in ancient, and has all but crushed Great Britain in modern times, would have beset that of the whole family of mankind. All these evils have been entirely obviated, and the opposite blessings introduced, by the opening of the great reserve treasures of nature in California and Australia. * * * Before half a century has elapsed the prices of every article will be tripled, enterprise proportionately encouraged, industry vivified, debts and taxes lessened.

Sir Archibald wrote before 1873, says the author.

Prefacing another quotation, the author proceeds:

Unfortunately, the policy of England and Germany has brought about a condition of things the opposite of that thus described by the historian. By their scheme of demonetizing silver the condition of the world at present is the reverse of that which was presented in the sixteenth century after the opening of the mines of Peru and Mexico, and in our own nineteenth century after the opening of those of California and Australia. M. Emile de Laveleye, in his International Bimetallism, page 41, says of this change: "What happened after the placers of California and Australia sent their millions of gold to Europe? At first gold, accumulating in the banks, produced a severe fall of interest and a slight rise of prices. These two events, equally favorable to commerc and industry, excited all over the world an unexampled activity. Enterprises of every kind everywhere started up. Thence resulted, first, a great demand for produce and a rise of prices; secondly, a great demand for capital and a rise in discounts. After 1873 we witnessed a worse phenomenon; silver is expelled, gold becomes scarce, prices fall; industry, losing money, limits its operation; the spirit of enterprise declines; capital, little demanded, becomes a glut; the rate of interest falls. The connection of cause and effect is as evident here as in the period of expansion."

The author then quotes from a distinguished German writer, M. Herr von Barr, who, after showing the direct loss to Germany from the depreciation of her silver coin, and the product of her silver mines, which he places at an enormous figure, from the demonetization of silver, says:

This direct loss, important as it is, is nothing, however, compared with the indirect loss resulting from the fall of prices.

Himself a large land-owner, he first speaks of agriculture:

It is cruelly suffering from the reduced value of all produce. The farmers are paying their rents irregularly, or not at all; their stock in trade has often to be distrained to recover arrears of rent. The land-owners are overwhelmed by mortgages. When at last, in order to extricate themselves, they try to sell their estates, they find no purchasers, or have to be satisfied with a price one-third below former estimates. The discouragement is universal. No more agricultural improvements are being effected; employment is, consequently, lacking; and there is great indigence. Hence that increasing emigration, for which special trains and steamers have to be arranged. It is a veritable exodus. What remedy for so much suffering? The agriculturists, perceiving at length the real cause of the evil, demand the abandonment of the gold standard. * * * The fact is strange, yet certain, that from this intense crisis has sprung that odious and inexplicable return to the intolerance of the Middle Ages, called the antisemitic movement, the Judenhetze (Jew hatred). The Jews, being large holders of the gold, whose power is unduly increased, are regarded by the populace as enriching themselves by the ruin of others. The capitalist, unhurt, even profits by the cheapness of enforced sales.

All that this writer says is verified by information received through various sources from Germany, and is substantially corroborated by reports recently received from Germany through the State Department and submitted to Congress. If we are wise we will profit by the experience of the world in dealing with this great question. Shall we add to the wealth of the already rich, and still further impoverish the poor by investing the dollar which ought to buy one bushel of wheat with power to buy two? Shall we add one-third to the burden of our national debt and to every dollar of our private indebtedness, so that one-third more cotton, wheat, corn, pork, beef, ore of minerals, and manufactured goods, and one-third more of labor will be required to pay them? Shall we drive our people, by annulling silver as money and narrowing the coin basis of our paper circulation, and the consequent contraction of our currency, and the depreciation of the wages of labor and all the products of labor in consequence of the forced appreciation of money, to demand and clamor for an irredeemable paper circulation? Shall we close the English market to Western wheat and the lower grades of Southern cotton by so degrading and cheapening silver that England may get it on her own terms to send to India to buy up India wheat and India cotton, and thereby be enabled to pay the heavier cost of transportation from India, which alone gives us now the English market? Shall we, by demonetizing silver, bend the necks of our people to the yoke of European policies, which enslave all the producing classes to the power of hoarded and organized capital in the hands of an arrogant aristocracy? If we desire to do these things we will demonetize silver; otherwise, we will not.

Mr. President, in 1878 I advocated the free coinage of silver on the floor of the Senate, and am convinced now, as I was then, that in the free coinage of all silver of American production is to be found the ultimate solution of the silver question. The seigniorage to the Government on our silver coinage is reported by the Director of the Mint as being over 18 per cent., and the net profit, after paying all the expenses of the mint for both gold and silver coinage, as we are informed by the report of that officer, since the passage of the act of 1878 is $25,338,389.97, while the coinage of gold is free. This legislative discrimination against silver should not be on our statute-book. It handicaps silver. The two metals should be on the same plane and have the same opportunities, and no burden placed on one not resting equally on the other. Our great aim is to have the two metals circulate at a parity, and to accomplish this one should not be put at a disadvantage in comparison with the other. We have adopted the English plan of minting silver, which is intended there to hold silver down and exalt gold, while we are supposed to be endeavoring to secure equality of value in the two metals.

I ask attention to an extract I will read from Mr. Ernest Seyd on this subject:

The expenditure of the mint falls on the taxation; the expense for coining gold is consequently borne by all classes, although gold is used principally by the smaller number, the wealthier portions of the community. The mere assertion that the coining of gold is intended for the benefit of all classes does not, in face of the patent fact that the poor use it but rarely, meet the justice of the case. In England the extreme injustice of this matter becomes all the more glaring when it is borne in mind that the British silver coinage, that upon which more than three-quarters of the nation are dependent for their intercourse with each other, is charged with a heavy seigniorage of from 8 to 10 per cent., a profit which serves the mint as a set-off against the free coinage of gold. Gold, it may be said, is coined in England gratuitously for the higher classes at the cost of the lower classes, which deal in silver. Moreover, while the coinage of gold is thus of full value, open and free to all, and the supply unrestricted within the natural boundaries of commerce, the silver coinage is debased; the mint refuses to coin it for the public, it has but a strictly limited legal-tender value, and the amount in circulation thus becomes restricted within narrow and unnatural boundaries.

Producing, as we do, within 3 per cent. of one-half of all the silver produced in the world, its admission to free coinage would withdraw from the markets of the world nearly or quite half of the silver bullion sold; and after deducting from our product that portion which goes into the arts, the addition to our stock of silver money would be only some ten or twelve millions per annum over and above our present coinage. This diminution of the stock of bullion on the market, coupled with the determination the adoption of this policy would show in our Government to maintain silver, would raise the value of bullion, would appreciate silver throughout the world, and strengthen the hands of those in Europe who are struggling to throw off the despotism of gold monometallism.

The production of silver has already commenced to decline in the United States according to official reports, but at the present rate of production, with our mints thrown open to the free coinage of all the silver product of American mines, it would be ten years before our silver coinage would equal in amount the silver now in circulation in France at the lowest estimate made of it, and at the end of the decade it would be seen that every dollar of it would be needed.

The only logical way of treating this question is, in my judgment, so far as the law can do it, to place American silver on an exact equality with gold at the mints, in the Treasury, the custom-houses, everywhere and in every way. Whether right or wrong in my judgment as to free coinage, we certainly have a right to demand an enforcement of the law of 1878, and that our executive officers shall no longer make war upon silver currency—that the national banks, which exist by permission and enjoy the franchises of the Government, shall no longer be permitted to discriminate against and boycott silver, and that silver shall be paid out at the Treasury to the public creditors in common with gold. This Government owes no gold obligations except a few certificates for gold deposited. Its bonded debt, every dollar of it, is payable in gold and silver coin, or either, at the option of the Government. These bonds were originally payable in lawful money. Legal-tender notes are such money. Every legal-tender note has stamped upon its back these words:

This note is a legal tender for all debts public and private except duties on imports and interest on the public debt.

The principal of the public debt was payable in these notes most clearly. The holders of the bonds, not satisfied to be paid as all other creditors were paid, besieged Congress until through their importunities the act of March 18, 1869, "to strengthen the public credit," was passed. That act is in these words:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order to remove any doubt as to the purpose of the Government to discharge all just obligations to the public creditors, and to settle conflicting questions and interpretations of the laws by virtue of which such obligations have been contracted, it is hereby provided and declared that the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment in coin or its equivalent of all the obligations of the United States not bearing interest, known as United States notes, and of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of any such obligation has expressly provided that the same may be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver. But none of said interest-bearing obligations not already due shall be redeemed or paid before maturity unless at such time United States notes shall be convertible into coin at the option of the holder, or unless at such time bonds of the United States bearing a lower rate of interest than the bonds to be redeemed can be sold at par in coin. And the United States also solemnly pledges its faith to make provision at the earliest practicable period for the redemption of the United States notes in coin.

Gold and silver coin is the currency in which the Government pledges itself to pay its public creditors by this act. The act of July 14, 1870, under which the public debt was refunded, pledges payment in gold and silver coin of "the standard value of the United States" on that date. The silver dollar of 412½ grains of standard silver was the standard value of the United States at that time, and the legal-tender silver dollar of to-day contains 412½ grains of standard silver, and is exactly the dollar described in the act of July 14, 1870. The bonds of the United States, bought originally with paper money worth only 50 cents in the dollar in gold or silver and payable in legal-tender notes through the acts of Congress of 1869 and 1870 above referred to, were made payable in gold and silver coin of a specified standard. Having secured this purpose, the next step was to demonetize silver, take away its legal-tender character, so that only gold coin, and that enhanced in value, would pay the bonds, and this was accomplished in 1873.

In 1878 the people, having become thoroughly aroused, brushed the bondholders and bankers aside and remonetized silver, and made the silver dollar of 412½ grains a full tender for all debts, public and private, as it had been up to 1873, and at the same session of Congress, in order to remove all doubt as to the meaning of the movement then in progress to remonetize silver, both Houses by large majorities adopted the following concurrent resolution, which was introduced in the Senate by Hon. Stanley Matthews, of Ohio, then Senator, and now an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Whereas by the act entitled "An act to strengthen the public credit," approved March 18, 1869, it was provided and declared that the faith of the United States was thereby solemnly pledged to the payment in coin, or its equivalent, of all the interest-bearing obligations of the United States, except in cases where the law authorizing the issue of such obligations had expressly provided that the same might be paid in lawful money or other currency than gold and silver; and

Whereas all the bonds of the United States authorized to be issued by the act entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," approved July 14, 1870, by the terms of said act were declared to be redeemable in coin of the then present standard value, bearing interest payable semi-annually in such coin; and

Whereas all bonds of the United States authorized to be issued under the act entitled "An act to provide for the resumption of specie payments," approved January 14, 1875, are required to be of the description of bonds of the United States described in the said act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt;" and

Whereas at the date of the passage of said act of Congress last aforesaid, to wit, the 14th day of July, 1870, the coin of the United States of standard value of that date included silver dollars of the weight of 412½ grains each, declared by the act approved January 18, 1837, entitled "An act supplementary to the act entitled 'An act establishing a mint and regulating the coins of the United States,'" to be a legal tender of payment, according to their nominal value, for any sums whatever: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars, of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

Notwithstanding this record, and the additional fact that coin—gold and silver—received at the custom-houses has been dedicated by law to the payment of the interest on the public debt and the creation of a sinking fund, and that large amounts of silver dollars and silver certificates are paid in at the custom-houses, the holders of Government bonds declare that honor and good faith require that they be paid in gold, and the President expresses a grave apprehension in his message that if the further coinage of silver is not suspended payments may have to be made on the public debt in silver.

The claim that any obligation of any sort rests on the Government in law or morals, in justice, equity, or reason, to pay these bonds in gold is utterly unfounded, and so proven to be by a simple recital of the law and facts. No more preposterous claim was ever seriously made, much less considered, except one, and that is that silver should be demonetized, and that all the ills and evils attendant upon that act should be borne by the people of the United States, in order to prevent some silver from being paid to the holders of Government bonds. Nobody asks that the bonds be paid exclusively in silver, although the legal and moral right of the Government to do it is perfect. But we do ask that silver be not discriminated against, that the law be not violated as it has been, that silver as well as gold be paid out to public creditors, and that no more reports be made from the Treasury Department that silver can not be gotten into circulation, when in violation of the law the Department refuses to pay it out, and allows bonds which ought to be paid to remain outstanding, and keeps locked up in the Treasury vaults millions upon millions of dollars which ought to be in circulation relieving the distress of the people.

If the laws of the land in relation to silver dollars and to the payment of the public debt were enforced or obeyed there would never be a silver dollar in the Treasury unrepresented by an outstanding silver certificate, and there would be no more agitation in this country over the silver dollar, because the bankers and bondholders, who from motives of self-interest have fomented the disturbance, would be prompted by the same motives to maintain and protect it. This action on the part of the Government would be taken by the world as a declaration of an American policy, to be adhered to and maintained, and could not fail to encourage and strengthen throughout the world all who in behalf of the great mass of laborers and producers are struggling to prevent the destruction of one-half of the money of the world.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

JUDICIAL SALARIES.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the unfinished business should first be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate the regular order.

John E. W. Thompson, of New York city, N. Y., to be minister resident and consul-general of the United States to Hayti.

Walker Fearn, of New Orleans, La., to be minister resident and consul-general of the United States to Roumania, Servia, and Greece.

William A. Seay, of Louisiana, to be minister resident and consul-general of the United States to Bolivia.

CHARGÉ D'AFFAIRES.

John E. Bacon, of Columbia, S. C., to be chargé d'affaires of the United States to Paraguay and Uruguay.

SECRETARIES OF LEGATION.

D. Lynch Pringle, of South Carolina, to be secretary of the legation and consul-general of the United States to Gautemala.

Joseph L. Morgan, of South Carolina, to be secretary of the legation of the United States to Mexico.

Agustus Jay, of New York, to be second secretary of the legation of the United States at Paris.

James Fenner Lee, of Maryland, to be secretary of the legation of the United States to Austria-Hungary.

William W. Rockhill, of Baltimore, Md., formerly second secretary of the legation of the United States to China, to be secretary of the legation at Peking.

Charles Denby, jr., of Indiana, to be second secretary of the legation of the United States to China.

CONSULS-GENERAL.

Pierce M. B. Young, of Georgia, to be consul-general of the United States at St. Petersburg.

Michael H. Phelan, of Saint Louis, to be consul-general of the United States at Halifax.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 13, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House for a moment to the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] on yesterday. It is reported here in the RECORD that the gentleman from Illinois on yesterday, in reference to my motion that the House proceed to the consideration, in Committee of the Whole, of the President's message, said:

I ask the gentleman from Texas to defer the discussion of the President's message until its recommendations come before the House in some legislative proposition. This is the usual course of proceeding, and I am not aware of any reason for departing from it, nor any justification for such departure.

Mr. Speaker, I was acting, and the House was acting, in conformity to the rules of the House, and the gentleman has been long enough here to have known the fact. He knows that the President's message and the report of the Secretary of the Treasury are before the country and are being widely considered and discussed. He knows that the enemies of silver, at least I know it, have organized and adopted a secret plan for the purpose of forming public sentiment against silver throughout the country. I did not think it was an assumption of anything improper, or merited a rebuke from that gentleman that I occupied the place I was permitted to occupy by the rules of the House in defense of the rights of the people; and I think he might have spared me this wrong and this discourtesy.

Mr. MORRISON. I not only had no right to rebuke the gentleman from Texas, but I had no such purpose. I said nothing which was intended for any rebuke or discourtesy, nor, as I believe, which may be so interpreted. I simply asked the gentleman to defer the discussion of the President's message until it was distributed to the appropriate committees, at the same time calling attention to the fact that this was the usual course of procedure.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman said: "This is the usual course of proceeding, and I am not aware of any reason for departing from it, nor any justification for such departure."

Mr. MORRISON. The course I indicated was the ordinary one, and I asked the gentleman that that course might be followed. I simply intended to say I knew of no reason why we should depart from the ordinary way." Of course I knew the gentleman from Texas was within the rules.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not wish to seem to acquiesce in any rebuke from the leader on this side of the House.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CURTIN. It was your pleasure, sir, to do me the honor to place me first on the list of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I did intend to afford to this House my reason for declining that honor, but on the advice of many friends and in view of the sentiment of the public journals of the country, I have concluded to offer no reason of my own.

As to declining the position it was your pleasure to give me I did not need the advice of any man, for my disposition in that respect was made up from the beginning. But for reasons of my own, which seem to be understood by my friends and members on this floor, I do ask the House to excuse me from the important duties of that position.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be excused from service as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House do not excuse the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects to excusing the gentleman from Pennsylvania from service as chairman of that committee. The question is then, Will the House excuse the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. CURTIN was excused from further service as chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In continuation of the message of my predecessor of the 13th February last, I now transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State, which is accompanied by the final report of the commissioners appointed under the act of July 7, 1884, to visit the states of Central and South America.

PUNISHMENT OF INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication of 2d instant from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting, with accompanying papers, a draught of a bill to amend section 9 of the act of March 3, 1885, relating to the trial and punishment of Indians committing certain specified crimes.

The subject is presented for the consideration and action of Congress.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. LANDES, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. COMPTON, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, notifying the House of the passage of the following bills; in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

A bill (S. 16) for the relief of J. A. Wilson, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Gregory Jarratt, deceased;

A bill (S. 128) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind.; and

A bill (S. 671) making appropriation for the purchase of the old Produce Exchange building and site, bounded by Whitehall, Pearl, Moore, and Water streets, New York, for Army purposes.

TESTS OF IRON AND STEEL.

Mr. FARQUHAR, from the Joint Committee on Printing, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following concurrent resolution of the Senate; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the reports of tests of iron and steel and other materials for industrial purposes, made at the Watertown arsenal, and transmitted to the Senate by the Secretary of War on the 3d of December, 1884, and the 11th of December, 1885, be printed; and that 3,500 additional copies of each report be printed, of which 1,000 copies of each report shall be for the use of the Senate, 2,000 copies for the use of the House, and 500 copies for the use of the War Department.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I send to the desk a letter from the Chief of Ordnance explanatory of the resolution. I ask that the letter be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 12, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to a "concurrent resolution to print reports on iron and steel tests," which passed the Senate December 18, 1885, and which I presume has been referred to your committee.

These are reports of valuable tests which are made and reported to Congress annually by authority of law. The Senate concurrent resolution last session to print the report of 1884 was not acted on by the House, but it has been included in the Senate concurrent resolution now before you.

The information given in these reports is of the greatest value to the industrial interests of the whole country, and they should be printed at as early a day as possible, and I respectfully recommend your early and favorable action thereon.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,
Brig. Gen., Chief of Ordnance.

Hon. E. BARKSDALE,
Chairman Committee on Printing, House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

The Senate resolution was concurred in.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be allowed a clerk during the session, and that he be paid $6 a day as compensation for his services.

CHARLES T. REBER.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3831) granting a pension to Charles T. Reber; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

H. G. HUNTER.

Mr. ERMENTROUT, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3832) for the relief of H. G. Hunter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MAGGIE JOHNSON.

Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3833) granting a pension to Maggie Johnson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES H. GRAHAM.

Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3834) for the relief of James H. Graham; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LEMUEL C. CANFIELD.

Mr. BURROWS (by request), by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3835) for the relief of Lemuel C. Canfield; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES DUNBAR.

Mr. LORE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3836) granting a pension to James Dunbar; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JABEZ BURCHARD.

Mr. LOWRY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3837) for the relief of Jabez Burchard, assistant engineer United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES A. M'DANIEL.

Mr. LOWRY, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3838) for the relief of Charles A. McDaniel, paymaster United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH D. STONE.

Mr. LOWRY, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3839) for the relief of Elizabeth D. Stone; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask a change of reference of House bill 1171, amending the act of June 3, 1884, to provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces. I think it was inadvertently referred to the Committee on War Claims. It has heretofore been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs, and I think that is the committee to which it should now be referred. It is a general act, amending the present act by a change of only a word or two.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the bill should go to the Committee on Military Affairs, and it will be so referred.

CAROLINE L. MAURY.

Mr. BLANCHARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3840) for the relief of Caroline L. Maury; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES LESTER.

Mr. ST. MARTIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3841) for the relief of Charles Lester; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ADDITIONAL EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MAYBURY offered the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the following additional force is hereby authorized to be employed in the service of the House of Representatives during the remainder of the present session of Congress, to be paid from the contingent fund of the House, namely: Under the Doorkeeper, eight pages, including one riding page, at $2.50 each per day; two messengers, at the rate of $800 each per annum.

P. L. WARD, EXECUTRIX.

Mr. LIBBEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3842) for the relief of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN ELLIS.

Mr. LIBBEY also introduced a bill (H. R. 3843) for the relief of John Ellis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN JACK AND OTHERS.

Mr. LIBBEY also introduced a bill (H. R. 3844) for the relief of John Jack and others, mechanics at the Norfolk navy-yard, who lost tools at the fire at that yard in April, 1885; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARY HORN.

Mr. STORM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3845) granting a pension to Mary Horn, mother of James Horn, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now proceed, under the rule, to call the committees for reports.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the petition or memorial for the relief of Charles Spencer, has directed me to report it back with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The rule provides that when a petition or memorial has been improperly referred to a committee through the petition-box the committee shall return it to the box with an indorsement showing the proper reference. The petition indicated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] will be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The call of the select and standing committees and of the commissions and committees authorized by statute to report to the House was continued and concluded, no further reports being presented.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now call the committees, under clause 5, Rule XXIV, for the consideration of such bills as may be indicated by them. The call will be for one hour, beginning at thirty-three minutes after 12 o'clock p. m.

PRINTING FOR THE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, there is a resolution on the Calendar that I desire to call up at this time. It is in relation to printing for the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] calls up for consideration the resolution indicated by him, and moves that the House do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for its consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HOLMAN in the chair.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I move the committee proceed to consider the resolution I have indicated, and which is now on the Calendar. I ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be authorized to have printed and bound all documents for the use of the said committee that they may deem necessary in connection with subjects in relation to appropriations being considered or to be considered by the said committee during the present Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this is the usual resolution adopted at the beginning of every session of Congress. It calls for a very moderate amount of money, and its adoption will aid greatly the intelligent discharge of the duties of the Committee on Appropriations. I move the resolution be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOLMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration a resolution authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to have certain printing done, had directed him to report the same back with the recommendation that it be agreed to.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope this resolution will be adopted.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TUCKER (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). On behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary I desire to call up a bill (H. R. 3827) reported from that committee to remove the political disabilities of Thomas L. Rosser.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the fifth clause of Rule XXIV, by which members will see that during this hour private bills can not be called up for consideration—only bills on the House Calendar or on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the morning hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees (or the call completed) the Speaker shall again call the committees in regular order for one hour, upon which call each committee, on being named, shall have the right to call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day on either the House or Union Calendar.

Mr. TUCKER. Does the Chair rule that the bill I have mentioned can not be brought up during this call?

The SPEAKER. It can not be, under the rule. It is a private bill and upon the Private Calendar, which is not one of the Calendars embraced in the terms of the rule.

Mr. TUCKER. Would it be in order for me to ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up now?

The SPEAKER. Not at this time.

TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURE OF WYOMING.

Mr. HILL (when the Committee on the Territories was called). I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 602) to legalize the election of the Territorial Legislative Assembly of Wyoming.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the election of the members of the Ninth Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Wyoming, at the general election held on the 4th day of November, 1884, subject to the filling of any vacancies that may have arisen or may arise and legal contests, is hereby declared valid; and that the Legislative Assembly so elected is fully authorized to transact such business as belongs to the Legislative Assembly of said Territory, and that all their acts shall be held to be as legal as if the Territory had been regularly apportioned into council and representative districts; and that it shall be the duty of the Legislature of said Territory to apportion the Territory into council and representative districts.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the amendments of the committee, embraced in the report which accompanies the bill, be read for adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the bill by striking out all after the word "and," in the tenth line, and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"The governor, secretary of the Territory, and president of the council shall act as a board of apportionment in said Territory for apportioning the members of the next Legislative Assembly thereof, and shall meet at the capital of the said Territory on the first Monday in September, A. D. 1886, and shall, or a majority of them, reapportion the members of the council and house of representatives thereof upon the basis of the voting population as shown by the number of votes cast for Delegate in Congress in November, 1884, allotting members of each house of the Legislative Assembly to the different sections of the Territory pro rata, as nearly as practicable according to such population, and to that end may apportion when necessary in joint council districts.

"That sections 2, 3, and 4 of an act providing for the reapportionment of the members of the Legislatures in the Territories of Montana, Idaho, and Wyoming, approved June 3, 1880, be, and the same are hereby, continued in force so far as applicable to said Territory, and shall be in force as a part of this act, except as herein modified and provided."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no wish to say anything on this subject, except to suggest that the month of October might be more convenient than September for the meeting of the board of apportionment.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] desires to offer that amendment I have no objection. So far as I am concerned October would be as acceptable as September.

Mr. STRUBLE. It may not be improper to say it was the judgment of the Delegate from the Territory of Wyoming that the date named in the bill would be satisfactory to the Territory; at least he made no suggestion that a later date would answer better.

The amendments reported by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

Mr. CALDWELL (when the Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President was called). Mr. Speaker, I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 471) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President.

The Clerk was proceeding to read the bill, when,

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, said: Mr. Speaker, as a parliamentary inquiry, I ask whether it is in order to raise the question of consideration upon this bill——

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. And whether that question should be raised before the bill is read or afterward?

The SPEAKER. After the bill is read any member will have the right to raise the question of consideration, provided it be done before the House actually enters upon the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire at the proper time to raise that question, unless some other gentleman should be ready to do so.

The SPEAKER. The right to raise the question is reserved until the reading of the bill is concluded.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President of the United States, the Secretary of State, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Secretary of the Treasury, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Secretary of War, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Attorney-General, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Postmaster-General, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Secretary of the Navy, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Secretary of the Interior, shall act as President until the disability of the President or Vice-President is removed or a President shall be elected: Provided, That whenever the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States shall devolve upon any of the persons named herein, if Congress be not then in session, or if it would not meet in accordance with law within twenty days thereafter, it shall be the duty of the person upon whom said powers and duties shall devolve to issue a proclamation convening Congress in extraordinary session, giving twenty days' notice of the time of meeting.

SEC. 2. That the preceding section shall only be held to describe and apply to such officers as shall have been appointed by the advice and consent of the Senate to the offices therein named, and such as are eligible to the office of President under the Constitution, and not under impeachment by the House of Representatives of the United States at the time the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon them respectively.

SEC. 3. That sections 146, 147, 148, 149, and 150 of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, while I have no desire whatever to interpose any delay to the action of the House on this bill, I would be glad if I could have the opportunity to have the minority report printed and laid before the House before any action is taken, and for that purpose I respectfully request the further consideration of the bill be postponed.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. An order was made that the views of the minority should be printed with the majority report, and in view of the fact that that has not been done I wish to make the further parliamentary inquiry whether the consideration of the bill is in order if the point be made against it.

The SPEAKER. The consideration of the bill is in order unless the question is raised and the House declines to consider it, because the views of the minority might never be presented. It is a question for the House to determine whether the House will proceed before the views of the minority have been presented.

Mr. COOPER. As I understand it the gentleman raises the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair understands.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman from Ohio, in charge of the minority views, can have those views read from the Clerk's desk without the delay incident to having them printed. I desire, and it is the desire of the committee, not to cut off the minority from any of its rights; but I do not believe it would be proper to delay the consideration of the bill if the House sees proper to take it up, and to delay it merely for the purpose of printing the minority views, which have no parliamentary status in the House. At the same time I wish to carry out the views of the committee to treat the minority not only with courtesy but with due regard for all its rights, and I think every such end would be attained by having the views of the minority read from the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the views of the minority are at the Government Printing Office, and are not here.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. If it is in order I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether the views of the majority have been printed and are accessible to members.

Mr. CALDWELL. They have been.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I have been informed by gentlemen who wish to get copies of the majority report that they found it impossible to secure them.

Mr. CALDWELL. The majority report has been printed, but I understand the number of copies on hand is not sufficient. I do not know but the failure has arisen because of the effort to supply the demand on the floor. I do not know whether there are copies enough to supply the House.

Mr. COOPER. There are not enough copies to supply the demand on the floor of the House. I wished to get a copy myself and was unable to do so.

The SPEAKER. This question is not debatable, but the Chair has allowed it to go on in the hope it might result in some accommodation.

Mr. COOPER. If the consideration be postponed until to-morrow I shall make no further objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. Having been called up——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can withdraw the call which he has made to take the bill up for consideration.

Mr. CALDWELL. Very well; I will do so. But I do not wish to lose any standing which the bill now has.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman loses no right whatever.

Mr. CALDWELL. That being the case, I will allow it to go over until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. That is to say, the gentleman will call it up when his committee is called to-morrow or the next day.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will withdraw the bill now and give notice I will call it up to-morrow. I will submit another inquiry to the Chair: If we do not take our right to-day, and call the bill up to-morrow, and then are not able to put it through in the hour allowed under the rules, would it come up the next day?

The SPEAKER. The committee has a right to two hours on two different days for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. At the request of several gentlemen, and as there does not seem to be copies enough of the bill and report on hand to supply the demand on the floor of the House, I would ask for an order to reprint the bill and report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DUNN indefinitely, on account of the recent death of a relative.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, as the committees have all been called, and there seems to be no business prepared, and in order to enable the committees to consider measures before them and make report, so the House may have something to act on, I move the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of Messrs Janney, Selectman Marshal, and others, asking an appropriation for the improvement of the Occoquan River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of R. D. Beckley and Leon Howard, for difference of pay between laborer and messenger for services rendered by them in the Forty-eighth Congress—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BARRY: Petition from certain citizens of West Point, Miss., recommending the suspension of the coinage of silver—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Petition of the executive committee on Indian concerns of the Western yearly meeting of Friends of Indiana, and resolutions of the East Cherokee council, asking an appropriation to cover expenses and the sale of certain lands—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: Petition of Elon A. Marsh and Minard Lafever, asking that certain letters patent granted be made operative—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. CASWELL: Petition of E. S. Williams, for increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLLINS: Petition of Hugh Watt, of Boston, Mass., for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. COX: Petition of William H. Allen, of Franklin County, North Carolina, praying that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. ELY: Papers relating to the case of W. H. Collins—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. FINDLAY: Petitions of John Dickinson, of New York; of G. D. Dunham, of Illinois; of E. Karulson, of New York, and of Philip Sinsz, of Maryland, to have glaziers' diamonds manufactured in foreign countries taken off the free-list and subjected to duty—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of Mrs. E. M. Ball, in relation to adjustment of salaries of postmasters—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. GROUT: Memorial of David Buchanan, asking change in system of post-office box rents, and that fourth-class postmasters may be elected by the people—to the same committee.

By Mr. JACKSON: Petition of cigar-makers, for abolition of tax on tobacco and cigars and for the repeal of law requiring manufacturers to give bond—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. JAMES: Petition of Hattie D. McKim, widow of William A. McKim, who died while in the service of the United States on the gunboat Nyack, of disease in the service, March 26, 1865, for back pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HALSELL: Papers relating to the case of J. W. Ewing, assignee of M. R. Garram, administrator of C. H. Mitchell, deceased—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. HEARD: Petition of W. C. Windom, referring to the subject of the adjustment of the salaries of postmasters of certain classes—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HILL: Papers relating to the claim of Andrew Gleason—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JACKSON: Petition of R. M. Clark and of Thomas M. Taylor, praying the passage of a resolution requiring arrears of salary to be paid certain postmasters—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. JOSEPH: Petition of Richard Hager and others—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KLEINER: Petition of citizens of Pike County, Indiana, in favor of granting pensions to the soldiers of the late war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAWLER: Petition of Mrs. Mary A. Mitchell, for pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. LIBBEY: Petitions of Samuel Harper, of Chattooga County; of William Falin, of Scott County; of Misheak Seamons; of Harriet Y. Gordon, of Chattooga County; of Ellis H. Dickson, of Chattooga County, Ga., and of Charles M. Carter, of Charles City County, Va., asking reference of their several claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of George Minga, of Virginia, praying that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

Also, petition of Minnie L. Tunis, praying that war claim of John E. Tunis, of Virginia, be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. LYMAN: Papers relating to the claim of Jacob Bogert—to the same committee.

Also, petition and papers in case of Maj. G. W. Candee—to the same committee.

Also, petition and papers for relief of William B. George, late private Company L, Fourth Iowa Cavalry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petitions of Terence and Joseph Byrne; of Jacob D. Eavy; of Abram Geim; of Mrs. Catharine Little, of Washington County, and of William W. Wenner, Michael Culler, and Charles W. Hoffman, of Frederick County, Maryland, asking reference of their several claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petitions of Robert W. Smoot; of Michael Brown; of Reuben Rowzee; of Henrietta Talbert and Susan Benson, heirs of estate of Jonathan B. Benson; of Margaret A. Hickman; of James F. Price, and of Mary E. West, administratrix of Richard F. West, asking reference of their several claims to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. MORRISON: Petition of Charles Spencer, of Memphis, Tenn., for relief—to the same committee.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Communication of the United American Clay Tobacco-Pipe Manufacturing Association, asking that the duties on imported clay pipes be made 25 cents per gross, or, if not so made, that the ad valorem duty be increased—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ROGERS: Petition of H. H. Haynie, for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: Papers relating to the claim of Sarah T. Duke—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAM WARNER: Petitions of A. J. Walker, administrator of estate of Polly Walker; of J. H. Sanders, of Jackson County, Missouri, asking reference of their claims to Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions, praying Congress to place the coinage of silver upon an equality with gold; that there be issued coin certificates of one, two, and five dollars, the same being made legal tender; that one and two dollar legal-tender notes be issued, and that the public debt be paid as rapidly as possible by applying for this purpose the idle surplus now in the Treasury, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures:

By Mr. BARRY: Of citizens of Yalobusha County, Mississippi.

By Mr. BLAND: Of citizens of Rolla, Mo., and of Douglas County, Missouri.

By Mr. MILLARD: Of Mortimer Spring and others and of A. S. Hungerford and others, of New York.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 14, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

Mr. HAWLEY resumed the chair as presiding officer.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Martha J. Coston, a resident of the District of Columbia, praying for the opening of Vermont avenue, in the city of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON. I present the petition of Rudolphus Knorr, of Stapleton, Staten Island, N. Y., in which he states his service in the Navy Department of the United States for thirty-seven years, and prays that he be placed upon the retired-list of the Navy. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. I present the memorial of Maj. Edward Ingersoll, and a large number of other officials and employés in the Springfield armory, in behalf of one William Tegethoff, in which they represent that William Tegethoff has spent his life in the armory and has devoted himself with great diligence to the service of the United States there by the making of some quite rare inventions which have saved the United States a very large sum of money; that in his devotion to this work he has lost his eye-sight and become blind and in needy circumstances. Having spent all his life in the service of the United States, all these officers and officials, together with the late Secretary of War, commend his case to the United States for relief.

I desire to have the memorial referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ask them to consider it early. The committee will find reference to precedents that will aid in this person's behalf in the memorial itself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLATT. On the 10th of December I introduced a bill (S. 347) to relieve commercial travelers from license taxes. I desire now to present a petition of the officers of the National Travelers' Protective Association of the United States and also of the presidents of State divisions of that association in support of the bill. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say in connection with that, for the consideration of the committee, that it is represented to me by the merchants and artisans doing business and labor in this city that the present condition of things as to commercial travelers, as they call themselves, is altogether too favorable to the traveler and altogether too hard against the merchant and the artisan who has to pay his rent and taxes in this town, and who is exposed to any surplus stock from any other city being brought here and sold in a room where only a nominal rent for two or three days is paid, to the great injury of the laboring people who work in the shops, &c., in fabricating articles that are consumed here. I wish to call that view of the subject to the attention of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLATT. I have no doubt the Committee on Commerce will be exceedingly glad to have these gentlemen appear before them. If there is anybody in the District of Columbia or anywhere else who believes that restriction creating inequalities between citizens of States should still be retained in the District of Columbia I think they ought to have a hearing.

Mr. MCMILLAN. As the Committee on Commerce has been referred to, I will only take occasion to say that we are always ready to hear both sides of every question, and we shall be glad to hear any persons interested in this question if they will communicate with the committee. They can send a communication to me or any other member of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. VOORHEES presented a petition of the executive committee on Indian concerns of the Western Yearly Meeting of Friends, held at Plainfield, Hendricks County, Indiana, praying for certain legislation concerning the educational interests of the East Band of Cherokees in North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BECK. I present the petition of Albert W. Bow and other citizens of Cumberland County, Kentucky, praying for the passage of the bill granting national aid to education throughout the United States, commonly known as the Blair bill. As the bill has been reported, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I have been requested by the Delegate from Montana, as well as by the Board of Trade of Helena, Montana, to present resolutions adopted by that organization remonstrating against the stoppage of the coinage of the silver dollar, and for other purposes. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I also present a memorial, principally signed, I believe, by citizens of Kansas and Illinois, remonstrating against the suspension of the coinage of silver, and for other purposes. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I have had a number of petitions sent to me, I hardly know why, from other States, with a request that I present them, praying for the stoppage of the silver coinage. I did not present them, and have returned them respectively to those who sent them, because I am satisfied they were dictated by a letter which I received, I do not know how, marked "confidential circular," and reading thus:

BOARD OF TRADE AND TRANSPORTATION,
New York, December 24, 1885.

[Confidential circular.]

DEAR SIR: Thanking you for your letter of recent date, the committee on silver coinage desire to know if you will co-operate with them in the way of distributing documents, and otherwise, for the purpose of influencing public sentiment in favor of the early suspension of the Bland law?

To that end it is earnestly requested—

First. That you write a personal letter at once to the Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., urging him to refrain from placing extreme silver men on the Coinage Committee, and so give "fair field and no favor" to all interests. This is very important, and to be of any value must reach Washington before January 5; if too late for letter to reach, please telegraph.

Second. That you write separate personal letters to your own Representative in Congress and your United States Senators expressing your views to them in the same manner as you did in your letter to this committee; also asking them if they will favor the suspension of the Bland law.

Third. After writing the above letters, please inquire quietly among your friends and neighbors to ascertain their views upon the question, and induce as many as possible to write Mr. CARLISLE and your Member of Congress and Senators in like manner.

Fourth. Please make note of all persons who promise so to write and send list of their names to undersigned, who will from time to time issue confidential information on the situation. The committee asks in return, occasionally, such information or suggestions as you can give.

If you will co-operate in the manner indicated you will assist very materially in a work which promises success. Personal letters are suggested in preference to formal petitions, as experience has shown them to be most effective. Will you favor us with a reply?

Very truly, yours,

THE COMMITTEE ON SILVER COINAGE.
A. B. MILLER, Chairman.

Believing that the papers were sent to me in accordance with that secret circular, I have respectively returned them to those sending them.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of Thomas M. English, administrator of the estate of Richard Fitzpatrick, deceased, praying for the payment of a judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of that estate; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Colorado, which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

STATE OF COLORADO, GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
Denver, Colo., December 28, 1885.

Hon. H. M. TELLER:

In compliance with the request embodied therein, I have the honor to transmit herewith a certified copy of house concurrent resolution No. 6, "expressing the sense of the General Assembly of Colorado in regard to the coinage of silver."

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

BENJAMIN H. EATON, Governor.

Substitute for house concurrent resolution No. 6, expressing the sense of the General Assembly of Colorado in regard to the coinage of silver.

Whereas class legislation, under whatever guise, has always been condemned as being inimical to the best interests and subversive of the rights of the people; and

Whereas the discrimination against silver, which is one of the principal sources of wealth of this country, now being practiced by monometallists is calculated to produce public discord and disaster: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Colorado, First. That we are in favor of the free and unlimited coinage of silver (of the present standard value of 412½ grains to the dollar) the same as gold, and do earnestly recommend Congress and the incoming Administration to use all legitimate means to secure legislation to this end; and

Resolved, Second. That our governor be requested to forward duly attested copies of these resolutions to the President and Vice-President elect of the United States, the Speaker of the national House of Representatives, and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and also to the governors of the different States of the Union, asking their co-operative action upon this all-important question.

Approved March 5, 1885.

STATE OF COLORADO,
Secretary's Office, ss.

I, Melvin Edwards, secretary of state of the State of Colorado, do hereby certify the foregoing to be a correct transcript of "substitute for house concurrent resolution No. 6, expressing the sense of the General Assembly of Colorado in regard to the coinage of silver," approved by the governor March 5, 1885, and filed in my office on the 5th day of March, A. D. 1885.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Colorado, at Denver, this 28th day of December, A. D. 1885.

[SEAL.] MELVIN EDWARDS,
Secretary of State.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SEWELL. I am instructed by the Committee on the Library to report to the Senate a communication addressed to that committee by Mr. George Ticknor Curtis on additional accommodations for the Library. It is a valuable contribution to the literature of the country on that subject, as it gives some practical suggestions, and I move that it be printed and referred to the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The communication will be printed and referred to the Select Committee on Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 269) for the relief of W. H. Powell, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration and that they be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. 317) for the relief of Horace A. W. Tabor; and

A bill (S. 1042) to pay B. S. James for transporting the United States mails.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Claims, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of A. W. Shaffer, asking for relief in the reimbursement claim of Joseph Ivery Baker, late captain Fourth Massachusetts Cavalry, have considered the same, and, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate of February 7, 1884, report as follows:

That they have referred the same to the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," approved March 3, 1885.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 1076) providing for the collection of statistics touching marriage and divorce; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1077) granting a pension to Newcomb Parker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1078) granting a pension to William C. Wirt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 1079) to regulate the rate of postage on "fourth-class matter;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1080) for the erection of a statue and monument to James Madison; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 1081) for the relief of William G. Ford, administrator of John G. Robinson, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, introduced a bill (S. 1082) to amend the military record of Charles W. Lambert; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES. By request of the Sedgwick Post, No. 38, Department of Indiana, Grand Army of the Republic, I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 1083) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to pensions and certain laws relating to pensions enacted since the revision of the statutes, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JACKSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1084) to authorize the purchase of five manuscript volumes (being letter-books) of William Vans Murray, formerly minister at the Hague and at Paris; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 1085) for the relief of Terrence O'Connor, minor child of Thomas O'Connor, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 1086) to accept and ratify an agreement made by the Sisseton and Wahpeton bands of Sioux Indians, and to grant a right of way for the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railway through the Lake Traverse reservation, in Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to withdraw Senate bill No. 899, granting a pension to Thomas G. Newman, and introduce a bill granting a pension to Thomas G. Newnam. The gentleman does not want his name to go upon the record incorrectly.

The bill (S. 1087) granting a pension to Thomas G. Newnam was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (S. 1088) to amend and re-enact section 4289 of the Revised Statutes, relative to the limitation of the liability of the owners of vessels; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 1089) for the relief of the merchant marine of the United States engaged in the foreign trade; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FRYE. This is the bill for the relief of the merchant marine prepared by the joint committee of the Marine Association of New York and the national board of steam navigation. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced a bill (S. 1090) granting a pension to G. R. Turner, M. D.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 1091) to authorize the increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Shakopee, Minn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. HALE. Yesterday I introduced a bill (S. 1071) for the relief of Frances W. Dyer, and through my mistake it was referred to the Committee on Finance. I ask that that committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims, which considered and reported it in the last Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the change of reference is made accordingly.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Charles W. Faulcke be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. PIKE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of Albert H. Emery be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims, no adverse report having been made.

On motion of Mr. CALL, it was Ordered, That James J. Johnston have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files, there having been no adverse report.

STATISTICAL ABSTRACT FOR 1885.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask for the adoption of the following order:

Ordered, That 1,000 copies of the Statistical Abstract of the United States for the year 1885 be printed for the use of the Senate; 200 of which number shall be for the use of the Committee on Finance.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. I will state that this document has already been ordered to be printed by the other House, and while the type is standing it was thought advisable that we should have an additional number printed. It is a very valuable document and a great many copies of it are called for, and there are none later than the edition for 1883 now available. As the matter in the abstract mainly refers to topics over which the Committee on Finance have control, we ask for 200 additional copies for service there.

The resolution was agreed to.

PAYMENTS TO INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTORS.

Mr. BECK. Under the call for resolutions yesterday, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] offered a resolution, which was objected to by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and myself. I desire now, if it is the proper time, to call it up and state the reasons why I objected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Kentucky will kindly wait a few moments until the Chair has exhausted the call for "concurrent or other resolutions" the resolution offered yesterday by the Senator from Vermont will be in order.

BERLIN CONFERENCE ON CONGO FREE STATE.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the general act of the conference of Berlin, relating to the Free State of the Congo, which was signed and promulgated on 26th February, 1885, a copy of which is now presented, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the same be translated under the direction of said committee and printed. And so much of the President's message as relates to this subject is also referred to said committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I send to the desk a copy of the original general act, as it is termed, of the conference at Berlin, in reference to the Congo country. The President, in his message to Congress, refers to this topic in such a way that I fear some unnecessary animadversion has been made upon that conference, and also upon the minister who participated in it. I am not aware that any authentic English translation of this act has been made, and I desire very much that we may have a translation of it about which there can be no dispute. For this purpose I have offered the resolution providing that the translation shall be made under the direction of the Committee on Foreign Relations. The President has not communicated to the Senate, so far as I have been advised, certainly not with his message, any of the papers that related to the Berlin conference, but a statement is made in the message to the following effect:

A conference of delegates of the principal commercial nations was held at Berlin last winter to discuss methods whereby the Congo Basin might be kept open to the world's trade. Delegates attended on behalf of the United States on the understanding that their part should be merely deliberative, without imparting to the results any binding character, so far as the United States were concerned. This reserve was due to the indisposition of this Government to share in any disposal by an international congress of jurisdictional questions in remote foreign territories. The results of the conference were embodied in a formal act of the nature of an international convention, which laid down certain obligations purporting to be binding on the signatories, subject to ratification within one year.

As I am informed of the substance of that general act, it is misapprehended in the message. Our minister at Berlin, who participated in this European conference, did not undertake to bind, nor did he bind, the Government of the United States in any sense whatsoever to this agreement as a convention between this and any other power. No action had been taken by that officer which made it necessary that the Senate of the United States should pass upon anything that he had done; but the agreement of the conference established through the enlightened judgment of all the great European powers a status quo in regard to the law which should obtain in the further conduct of affairs in what I may term the waist of Africa, the belt about the equator, which reaches from ocean to ocean.

The Congo State had its boundaries in effect determined by the agreement of that conference, and it included the watershed of the Congo River, practically placing the great basin of the Congo within this free state, which, however, was enlarged when it came toward the Atlantic Ocean on the west, for the purpose of getting a coast-line from which more immediate or more convenient access might be had to that part of the Congo River called Stanley Pool, above the falls, by railway or by some other means of local access.

The conference went very far beyond that, however, and made certain very valuable and important agreements in reference to a long line of the coast of Africa reaching, I believe, from 5° north of the equator down to the mouth of the Zambezi River. That agreement, as long as it is maintained by the European powers who have adhered to this conference, or by any other powers who may hereafter adhere to it, will be found to be of great advantage to the people of the United States who may have commerce in that country, because it will protect them in the enjoyment of all their rights almost as completely as they would be protected by proper authority within the boundaries of the United States. In other words, a very free and liberal declaration of principles has been established in that country, which the governments who have acceded to the agreement engage that they will put in force and maintain so long as the agreement stands.

But notwithstanding the very great advantages which would inure to the people of any commercial nation who should visit that country for purposes of trade, neither the preceding administration nor the minister of the United States who was at Berlin considered that the Government of the United States had given its consent in any way at all to become a party to the agreement as an engagement. A mere declaration has been submitted to the judgment of the enlightened world by this great conference upon this very important topic and in regard to this very important country, and the question whether we shall accede to that agreement is one that is entirely a matter of option on our part. It is something that need not be transacted even through the diplomatic functions of the Government. An act of Congress originated by any member of this body or of the other House which should declare that the Government of the United States adheres to or accedes to that agreement would make us a party to it precisely as it does to postal conventions and various other conventions of that kind which have been agreed upon by other nations, and to which we have the right to accede if we choose or to withhlod our concession if we please.

I fear that some injustice has been done by a misapprehension or a misinterpretation of this act on the part of the Government of the United States toward our late minister at Berlin, who, I am satisfied, in the most enlightened way and with the greatest care and circumspection, has not exceeded his authority and has not sought in any way to involve us in entangling alliances in respect of any foreign country, but who has submitted, along with the other powers who were concerned in that conference, a great and general act, the benefits of which I have no doubt will be felt by generations of men through long long years to come.

I desire, therefore, that the Committee on Foreign Relations may take the subject up and see whether this act is of the character that it is described to be in the message of the President.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I hope the resolution of the Senator from Alabama will be adopted; but I do not rise to speak to that resolution, but rather to call the attention of the Senate, and especially of the Committee on Foreign Relations, to the statement made in the document which I have before me, printed some days ago, respecting the appointment of Mr. Keiley as minister to Austria. The Secretary of State has, it appears, in this document, in a communication to the minister to Vienna, stated that Mr. Kasson, who was appointed to Madrid during the term of the present Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] as Secretary of State, was objected to by that country and afterward appointed minister to Vienna. That statement appears in this printed document, which is now I believe before the Committee on Foreign Relations. I desire to say, on the very best authority, that that statement is wholly erroneous, that no objection was made by Spain to the appointment of Mr. Kasson; and in saying this I ought to state that I have no doubt the Secretary of State was misled by a subordinate in his office who gathered some information from newspaper comments made about that time and not from any statement made through any of the ministers or authorities of Spain.

I see that the Senator from New York is giving his attention. I remember that at the time he did me the honor to consult with me somewhat respecting the appointment of Mr. Kasson to Austria in lieu of Spain. After Mr. Kasson had been appointed to Madrid there occurred a vacancy in the mission to Austria-Hungary, and the Secretary of State then asked me if I believed Mr. Kasson would prefer the Vienna mission to the Madrid mission, and I stated to him that I would communicate with Mr. Kasson, but I had no doubt he would prefer Vienna. I did communicate with him, and he stated that owing to the situation in the East he would much prefer to go to Vienna, if agreeable to the Government; and before the appointment was actually made, as I remember, to Madrid, but after the tender of that appointment, Mr. Kasson was selected for the Vienna mission, no objection having been made from any official quarter to his appointment to the Spanish mission.

For the purpose of making it clear that I am right in these suggestions I ask the Secretary to read the letter addressed by the then Secretary of State, now a Senator from New York, to Mr. Kasson on this subject, a copy of which I understand has also been presented to the present Secretary of State:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 5, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your inquiry touching the statement that the Spanish Government made objection to your appointment as minister to that country in 1877 and during my term as Secretary of State, I take pleasure in saying that no such question was ever raised.

The appointment for Madrid, originally proposed by me, was changed, upon your preference, to Vienna, and for reasons having no connection whatever with or knowledge of either government.

I am, yours, very truly,

WM. M. EVARTS.

Hon. JOHN A. KASSON, Washington.

Mr. ALLISON. I make this statement for the purpose of placing on record here, where this communication was first made public, the facts in this case, and not with any view, of course, of criticising the State Department, for I have no doubt it acted in perfect good faith but upon imperfect and inaccurate information in respect to the subject. I do it in justice to a constituent of mine who served ably in the other House and for some years as our minister to Vienna and, as was well stated by the Senator from Alabama, at Berlin.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator, before he takes his seat, state what communication he refers to here?

Mr. ALLISON. I refer to the communication made by the Secretary of State in answer to a resolution of the Senate in which is published a letter addressed by the Secretary of State to Mr. Francis, the American minister then at Vienna—the Keiley correspondence, in which the Secretary of State communicated to Mr. Francis that Mr. Kasson, a citizen of my State, had been appointed as minister to Spain and objected to by that Government and afterward sent to Vienna without objection. I merely wished to place upon record in as public a way as this letter appears the fact that this was a misconception on the part of the Secretary of State of the facts in the case, and that he was led into it, as I have already stated, by a subordinate in the Department of State.

Mr. VEST. I am very glad indeed to hear this statement. As a matter of course it ought to be known. I must say, however, that if it was a misunderstanding or misconception it was pretty general throughout the country at the time. I know I saw it in the papers. I recollect that it was stated recently that Mr. Kasson was not acceptable to the Spanish Government on account of some views expressed in a public address in regard to the annexation of Cuba to the United States. It was so stated at the time. There was nothing reflecting on his personal character in any way, but it was because of some statement that he had made in regard to the Government in Cuba and the propriety of that island being annexed to the United Srates.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I need to add nothing to what I expressed in the letter which I sent to Mr. Kasson and which has been read at the desk. The Senator from Missouri is quite right in thinking that there was newspaper comment in that direction and with that purport; but the transaction, so far as the Government was concerned, in the arrangement of these two missions, had no connection with that subject whatever, and the interpretation of the press upon that arrangement of the two missions was voluntary on its part and not provoked by nor justified by the administration. Mr. Kasson, well known to all of us at that time as now, had shown a disposition to undertake a foreign service if the administration would place it at his disposal. With that view I was authorized by the President to propose to him the mission to Spain, which he accepted. Another gentleman, who had been offered the Austrian mission but had declined the foreign service because of reasons that he thought might not permit him to undertake it, had shown some disposition to find a motive and an inducement suitable to his literary character and pursuits as well as his public capacities to undertake the Spanish mission, though he had declined the Austrian; and upon that consideration I was able to present to Mr. Kasson the choice of the Austrian mission, higher in grade, in emoluments, and rank, I think as well, and the other gentleman took the Spanish mission, Mr. Lowell, who afterward was transferred to the Court of St. James.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks for the immediate consideration of the resolution offered by him. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REFERENCE OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In that connection I move, what ought to have been done before, that all those parts of the message of the President submitted at the commencement of this session relating to foreign affairs be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

PAYMENTS TO INTERNAL-REVENUE COLLECTORS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. "Concurrent or other resolutions" are still in order. If none others are to be presented the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. BECK. Let the resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish information to the Senate as to whether or not any collectors of internal-revenue, not confirmed by the Senate, have received any portion of the salary pertaining to the office, contrary to the law of March 1, 1879, which provides that "no collector shall be entitled to any portion of the salary pertaining to the office unless such collector shall have been confirmed by the Senate, except in cases of commissions to fill vacancies occurring during the recess of the Senate."

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, when that resolution was offered yesterday, as I observed a few moments ago, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] and myself objected to its consideration and asked that it lie over. I did so for the reason that all the information that can be given, in my opinion, the Senate has now. Every collector of internal revenue since 1879, who was appointed in the place of an officer suspended, has received his pay regularly, under all administrations, all of them are receiving it now, so that there is no necessity for any official information on the subject.

I went to the Department this morning, saw the First Comptroller and his deputy, in charge of these matters, and I found that the cases are very numerous in which regular payments have for years past been made to internal-revenue officers appointed in cases of suspension of others. It has been done, as they understand and as I understand, not in violation of law but in pursuance of law. We all know that in 1867 the tenure-of-office law was passed to prevent the removal by President Johnson of any class of officers. That law was very sweeping; but after the election of President Grant, in 1869, this provision was made, section 1768 of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 1768. During any recess of the Senate the President is authorized, in his discretion, to suspend any civil officer appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, except judges of the courts of the United States, until the end of the next session of the Senate, and to designate some suitable person, subject to be removed, in his discretion, by the designation of another, to perform the duties of such suspended officer in the mean time; and the person so designated shall take the oath and give the bond required by law to be taken and given by the suspended officer, and shall, during the time he performs the duties of such officer, be entitled to the salary and emoluments of the office, no part of which shall belong to the officer suspended.

That is all that it is necessary to read. That continued to be the law until March 2, 1875. Observe that in President Johnson's time all removals were substantially prevented. After the Republican party came into absolute power with a President of their own choice, then the law I have just read was passed. In 1875 serious apprehensions were entertained in regard to the election of a Democratic President, and it was not proposed that he should have such far-reaching power over officials as was given in 1869 while General Grant was President, and therefore this law was enacted:

And no collector shall be entitled to any portion of the salary pertaining to the office unless such collector shall have been confirmed by the Senate, except in cases of commissions to fill vacancies which may have happened by death or resignation during the recess of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the date of that?

Mr. BECK. March 2, 1875. After Mr. Hayes obtained possession that provision was found to be very embarrassing, because a number of cases occurred even under a Republican administration where changes had to be made and men suspended for other causes than death or resignation during the recess of the Senate. The Supreme Court of the United States in the mean time had occasion to consider the question in Farden's case (see 99 United States Reports, page 10), in which the question came before the court in a case arising prior to that act of 1875 on the claim of a man who had been deputy collector and had been appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to fill the place of a suspended officer. He had authority from Mr. Douglass, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and from the Treasury Department to assume the duties of collector. The question was presented whether a suspension created a vacancy in the office, and the Supreme Court—I will read only a few words of its decision—said:

Whatever the legal relation of the individual may have been, in the strict technical sense it is clear, we think, that for all practical purposes during the continuance of the order of suspension the office was vacant and without any incumbent to discharge the duties which the law requires to be performed by the collector of the internal revenue. Plainly it was not a case of sickness or temporary disability, and consequently the duties were not devolved upon the deputy as in that case made and provided.

They decided that the suspension of the man in that case to all intents and purposes created a vacancy, and they directed the salary to be paid to the man appointed in place of the officer suspended. Judge Clifford closed the opinion thus:

Suffice it to say that the court, in view of the whole case, is of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to receive the salary and commissions allowed by law to the collector of internal revenue during the period that he performed those duties under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, as found by the court below, and that the suspension by the supervisor of internal revenue, and the action of the Secretary of the Treasury directing him to continue in the office until a successor to the suspended officer was appointed and qualified, created such a vacancy, within the meaning of the act of Congress, for all practical purposes in the administration of the duties of the office as entitles the claimant to that compensation. Assume that to be so, and it follows that there is no error in the record.

That was decided in October, 1878. In March, 1879, the Democratic party was about to take possession of the Senate of the United States, and it became somewhat important for the Republicans to modify the law that was passed in 1875, in order to allow their officials to be paid. Therefore, on the 1st of March, 1879, three days before the majority in this body became Democratic, this law was passed, repealing the former act of 1875 and providing:

And no collector shall be entitled to any portion of the salary pertaining to the office unless such collector shall have been confirmed by the Senate, except in cases of commissions to fill vacancies occurring during the recess of the Senate.

The Supreme Court had decided that a vacancy was created by the suspension of an officer holding the office in Farden's case, and the law of 1875, which limited the right to pay only successors appointed in cases of death or resignation was so far repealed as it might have become very troublesome again if the Democracy should not confirm the men appointed while they controlled confirmations. Therefore the provision was made broad—broad enough to cover all vacancies. That remains the law to-day. Under that law every Comptroller, Republican and Democrat, has paid the men who have done the work when officials are suspended, under the construction given to the effect of a suspension by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. HARRIS. Before confirmation?

Mr. BECK. Of course before confirmation they are paid regularly every month or every quarter. I have inquired of the Treasury officials, and find that to be so. Therefore it was that I objected to the assumption in the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] that the law had been violated. The Senator from Vermont may still entertain a different opinion, but I do not think his colleague does. That is all I care to say.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has read the different acts of Congress. The first one merely went upon the idea that two officers should not draw salary for the same office, confining it to one. That was under the tenure-of-office act. The second one merely provided for payment to an appointee to succeed in cases of death or resignation. The last act, passed in 1879, it seems to me upon a plain reading of it refers to all collectors who shall not have received the confirmation of the Senate except those appointed to fill vacancies during a recess. That act provides that—

No collector shall be entitled to any portion of the salary pertaining to the office unless such collector shall have been confirmed by the Senate, except in cases of commissions to fill vacancies occurring during the recess of the Senate.

I do not think that the decision of the Supreme Court or the argument of the Senator from Kentucky covers vacancies created by the President himself. I deny that the President of the United States can not only appoint men to office but that he can also take money out of the Treasury to pay them. It seems to me that would be a usurpation of the prerogative of Congress. Here is a law on the statute-book, and I am rather surprised that the Senator from Kentucky is not in favor of having the Secretary of the Treasury obey all laws. That is his usual position in relation to certain statutes, and I am rather surprised that he should be opposed to the enforcement of the execution of the law in this case.

Manifestly this is a resolution that refers to information that it is proper not only for the Senate to have, but for parties who undertake to assume the duties of an office on suspension, which is not a vacancy and may not become a vacancy. They ought to know whether they are to have pay or not, and know that if they should not be confirmed they would not draw any pay. It strikes me that under this provision of the law, if these parties that have been nominated in the cases of suspension by the President, but not nominated to fill vacancies, have been drawing pay, it is contrary to the provisions of this statute.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I did not rise to object to the Senator from Vermont sending such a resolution to the Treasury. I have stated exactly why I objected to it yesterday, believing it to be absolutely useless, believing that the laws are complied with as well as the practice under former Secretaries and the present Secretary, and that the actions they have taken are according to law; but if the Senator desires any further information on the subject and desires a report, for one I have no sort of objection. The practice always has been what it is now—since the passage of the act of 1879.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the following amendment to be added to the resolution, which I hope the Senator from Vermont will accept:

And also whether the payments made to such collectors since March 4, 1885, were prior to that date made to such collectors under like conditions.

Mr. MORRILL. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be so modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 128) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 3253) to amend section 1090 of the Revised Statutes, relating to interest on judgments rendered by the Court of Claims; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further morning business the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

SIOUX RESERVATION IN DAKOTA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first bill in order under Rule VIII will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Senate bill No. 260——

Mr. DAWES. Are not bills passed over yesterday without losing their place on the Calendar first to be taken up? There is Senate bill No. 52.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Where does the Senator find the bill now upon the Calendar?

Mr. DAWES. I have not found the Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That bill was passed over without prejudice. The Chair thinks the Senator from Massachusetts was out of the Chamber at the time.

Mr. DAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the order of business of the bill referred to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No. 34. The Chair recollects the bill was passed over without prejudice, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have it passed now, if it can be done.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Massachusetts think it can be considered under the five-minute rule?

Mr. DAWES. I do not apprehend that it will cause any debate. But it is immaterial to me under what rule it is considered. I do not think it will require debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Massachusetts to ask for the consideration now of the bill mentioned by him?

Mr. DAWES. I should like to have it considered now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. CONGER. What is the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the Senate proceed now to the consideration of Order of Business 34, the title of which will be read.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 52) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians, in Dakota, into separate reservations, and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DAWES. I should like as the bill is read to ask action of the Senate on the amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, so that it need not be read over the second time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment of the committee was, in section 2, line 5, after the word "namely," to strike out the following words:

Commencing in the middle channel of the Missouri River, opposite the mouth of White River; thence down the middle channel of said Missouri River to the south line of Brulé County; thence west on the south line of Brulé County to the west line of said county, including, however, entirely within said reservations all islands, if any, in said river; thence due south to the forty-third parallel of latitude; thence west along said parallel of latitude to a point due south from the source of the principal branch of Pass Creek; thence due north to the said source of Pass Creek; thence down said creek to the White River; thence down White River to the place of beginning in the Missouri River.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Commencing in the middle of the main channel of the Missouri River at the intersection of the south line of Brulé County; thence down said middle of the main channel of said river to the intersection of the ninety-ninth degree of west longitude from Greenwich; thence due south to the forty-third parallel of latitude to a point due south from the source of the principal branch of Pass Creek; thence due north to the said source of the said principal branch of Pass Creek; thence down Pass Creek to White River; thence down White River to a point intersecting the west line of Gregory County extended north; thence south on said extended west line of Gregory County to the intersection of the south line of Brulé County extended west; thence due east on said south line of Brulé County extended to the point of beginning in the Missouri River, including entirely within said reservation all islands, if any, in said river.

Mr. DAWES. There is a mistake in the print of this amendment, and I move to amend the amendment in line 22 by inserting after the word "latitude" the words "thence west along said parallel." Those words seem to have been left out in the print.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 6, line 10, after the word "seventy-two," to insert "and the south half of township 109, range 71;" so as to read:

The whole of township 106, range 70; township 107, range 71; township 108, range 71; township 108, range 72; township 109, range 72, and the south half of township 109, range 71, and township 107, range 70, except sections 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, 10, 11, and 12, and such parts as lie on the east or left bank of the Missouri River, of the following townships, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 6, line 22, after the word "seventy-four," to insert "south half of;" and in line 23, after the word "seventy-five," to strike out "township 109, range 76;" so as to read:

Township 106, range 71; township 107, range 72; township 108, range 73; township 108, range 74; township 108, range 75; township 108, range 76; township 109, range 73; township 109, range 74; south half of township 109, range 75, and township 107, range 73.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to section 7.

Mr. DAWES. I offer an amendment after line 21 of section 6 as part of that section:

But the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railway Company and the Dakota Central Railroad Company shall respectively have the right to purchase of the United States at the sum of $2.50 per acre, prior to any white person and to any corporation or association, the fee title to the two separate sections of land embraced in said agreement: Provided, The said railway companies shall have made the payment and performed the conditions to be by them under said agreement performed: And provided further, That said right of purchase shall be exercised within six months after the passage of this act.

The explanation of that is this: These railroad companies have purchased of the Indians, with the approval of the Interior Department heretofore, this ground in connection with their railroads, and have paid the Indians $5 an acre for it. This bill will open the whole of that territory to public settlement. It is supposed by the railroads that the title they thus acquired is only the Indian title of possession. They are entitled to the fee, and this secures them the fee. They have paid $5 an acre to the Indians for it, and they propose to pay to the Treasury of the United States two and a half dollars an acre for what interest the United States may possibly have in that land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to section 20. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was in section 20, line 2, after the word "Island," to insert "and Farm Island;" so as to read:

SEC. 20. That all the lands acquired by the provisions of this act, except American Island and Farm Island, shall be disposed of by the United States to actual settlers only, under the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In section 20, line 21, before the words "American Island," I move to insert:

Or to exclude the said lands or any thereof from the operation of the general laws of the United States now in force granting to railway companies the right of way and depot grounds over and upon the public lands.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator mean to say that after a homestead has been acquired under the provision of section 20 it shall still be within the power of Congress to take the land for railroad or other purposes?

Mr. DAWES. Under the power of eminent domain.

Mr. ALLISON. Would not that be so without the specific reservation?

Mr. DAWES. I suppose it would; but when this bill passed at the last session the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], thinking there might possibly be some doubt, moved this paragraph as an amendment to make it clear; it was not in the original bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I see here the words:

Or to grant to railroad companies the right of way through said lands.

That is in the print of the bill. It does not seem to me to be necessary to say that Congress shall have the right to grant the right of way through lands that can be condemned under the general laws relating to taking private property for public use.

Mr. DAWES. The idea of the amendment is that these lands opened to the public shall come under the general law in reference to public lands which authorizes the construction of a railway through them on payment of a certain sum of money. That was the object of the amendment suggested to me now by the Senator from Wisconsin as making it clear.

Mr. ALLISON. What I fear is that under this provision, after a man shall have required his title and paid his 50 cents an acre, Congress may still under this provision grant the right of way to a railroad over his land. It may be regarded as in the nature of an exception to the first provision.

Mr. DAWES. I suppose that Congress has the right to establish a railroad over a man's private land, but not without paying what the land is worth. That is under the right of eminent domain, taking it for public purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. And that would be so if this entire proviso were not in the bill.

Mr. DAWES. If anything more could be done under the proviso, I would not propose it.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to it with that statement.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts if under the last provision in section 20 it will be possible for a railway desiring to cross the Missouri River to pass upon or over the island there named?

Mr. DAWES. I do not think it would. That very question was considered, and as this island was of more use to the cities named than it could possibly be to the public, they were very anxious to have it appropriated exclusively for a park. To run a railroad across would destroy that use of it. The phraseology was drawn to exclude railroads.

Mr. ALLISON. If it is understood that this section is intended to exclude railways from crossing the Missouri River at this point, and that has been carefully considered by the committee and is deemed wise, I shall interpose no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. Is it in order to move amendments now? I should like to offer some.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All the amendments proposed by the committee have not yet been considered, and the reading of the bill has not been concluded.

The reading of the bill was resumed at section 21. The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 23, after the word "balance," to insert the words "which is hereby reappropriated;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 23. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, which sum, together with the unexpended balance, which is hereby reappropriated, of $10,000 appropriated in act of March 3, 1883, for procuring the assent of the Sioux Indians to an agreement therein specified, to be expended in defraying the necessary expenses of procuring the assent of the Sioux Indians to this act provided in the preceding section; and the same shall be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and be repaid to the Treasury from the proceeds of the sale of the land authorized by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is now open to further amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question about section 17. I call his attention to the phraseology used in line 9. The requirement there is that the Secretary of the Interior shall purchase from time to time "such and so many first-class American breeding cows." I would suggest that the word "first-class" is liable to require him to buy animals worth a great deal of money, but that would be worth less to Indians than they would be to anybody else. I would strike out the word "first-class" at all events, and leave it discretionary. Under that he could buy animals that might cost $500 or $1,000 a head or $5,000 a head. It might be mandatory on him to buy that very class and not reach those that would do the Indians the most good.

Mr. DAWES. Of course there is no such intention as that, and if the bill is open to such a construction I should be glad to have it amended, but I should like to have some adjective employed. There are two kinds of American cows that would be called good cows of their kind. One is the Southern cow and one is the Northern cow, and I should like to have something indicating what kind of stock the Indians are to have. If the Texas cow were sent up there it would be worse than nothing. It is the Iowa and such cows as that which are the only serviceable cows to these Indians. I do not know but that it would be safe enough to strike out "first-class" and say "of good quality"—"American breeding cows of good quality."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator move that amendment?

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator from Kansas moves that, I shall not object to it.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that amendment. In line 9 of section 17 I move to strike out the word "first-class," and after "cows," in line 10, to insert "of good quality;" so as to read:

Such and so many American breeding cows of good quality, not exceeding 25,000 in number.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts what the provisions of the seventh article of the treaty of 1868 are.

Mr. DAWES. I only speak from memory; I have not the article here. It is that article of the treaty which requires the United States to furnish teachers and houses for every thirty scholars of school age who are furnished to be educated by the Indian authorities. I am not certain, but I think that is the article of the treaty. There is a provision in that treaty which runs through all of the treaties made about that time by a commission which was sent out, that the United States obligated itself to furnish a teacher and school-house for every thirty scholars that were furnished for the schools. The United States has failed largely to fulfill that obligation, not only toward these Indians but toward others, and excuses itself because it says that the first obligation is upon the Indian himself to furnish his scholars and invite the United States to educate them.

Mr. PLUMB. Section 20 of the bill I suppose is intended to require the settlers to pay to the Government exactly what the Government pays for the land. This section provides that the settlers shall be authorized to take these lands under the provisions of the homestead act, but shall pay the sum of 50 cents per acre for each and every acre embraced in their several homesteads. I suppose that it is intended to require the settlers to pay to the Government exactly what the Government pays to the Indians.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; the Government pays it to the Indian in this way: the fund goes into the Treasury as a fund to be held by the United States for the benefit of the Indians, and in that way the Indians get exactly what the settler pays.

Mr. PLUMB. I would suggest that there is no provision here for the payment of fees, and the section should be amended to require the payment of the fees in addition. One of two things would happen: either the fees themselves would have to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or they would not be paid at all, and the land officers would be required to do the work for nothing. I would say that—

In addition to the fees prescribed by law for similar duties.

Mr. DAWES. I supposed that would follow of course.

Mr. PLUMB. I doubt if it would.

Mr. DAWES. If it would not follow, and if the Senator, who is more familiar with the method of taking up homesteads, says it would not follow, I hope he will put in an amendment to cover the point. The matter was discussed in committee, and those members of the committee, perhaps less familiar than the Senator with the methods, were of opinion that the Indian would get 50 cents an acre clear of all expenses; but if the Senator is in doubt about it I will agree to an amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 7 of section 20, after the word "him," I move to insert—

In addition to the fees provided by law.

Mr. DAWES. I hope that will be adopted if the Senator has any doubt about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Now I would ask the Senator from Massachusetts why he has fixed the period of four years as the time the settlers are to live on this land before getting title instead of five, which is the provision of the present homestead law?

Mr. DAWES. There are several modifications of the homestead law so far as this land is concerned the Senator will see, and they are of such a stringent nature that it was thought by the committee that four years was long enough. To begin with, the settler can not pay up at the end of six months and then sell his land. That provision is to prevent the fraudulent use of people to go on and take up land under agreements that they will sell to some corporation or some syndicate. They are to live on the land four years before they can get any title and before any agreement made by them in reference to it will have any force in law. They can not make an agreement to sell the land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, being the bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. We are so near——

Mr. BROWN. I gave notice on Tuesday that I should move at this hour to take up the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] on the silver question, as I desire to submit some remarks. I should like if the Senator who has the pending bill in charge would allow it to be passed over informally that I may make that motion.

Mr. DAWES. If the bill considered during the morning hour takes any considerable time I shall let it go over.

Mr. BROWN. If it takes but a few minutes I shall not insist on precedence over it.

Mr. HOAR. I of course do not propose to object to the laying aside of the regular order informally if my colleague can finish in a few minutes the bill in his charge. I feel a little guilty in regard to the judges' salary bill, which is in my charge, that I have let it pass by now for six or eight days for the discussion of matters which will be discussed again hereafter when we have a bill before us.

Mr. DAWES. If this takes any considerable time I will let it go over, but it is so nearly through that I should like to have it disposed of.

Mr. BROWN. If it takes but a few minutes, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is understood that the unfinished business shall be laid aside for the purpose of finishing the pending bill, and also the regular order to hear the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HOAR. I must give notice that on the next legislative day after this I shall feel compelled to insist that the pending bill be finished at the hour when it is rightfully before the Senate, and if there are to be further discussions I think this will not interfere with them, because I think the pending bill can be finished in a very few minutes; but I will not even assume to take these few minutes from the Senator from Georgia. I will let it go over now.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] who is not now in his seat gave notice a day or two since that he would desire to follow the Senator from Georgia upon the silver question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], the Chair understands, has likewise given such notice.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Colorado desire to say something about the bill which we have been considering, and I think I shall be obliged to let it go over. It will come up again as unfinished business during the morning hour, if there is any time, will it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will.

Mr. HOAR. I hope we shall have a session to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has agreed to adjourn to Monday when it adjourns to-day. The unfinished business is informally laid aside. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] has the floor.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 602) to legalize the election of the Territorial Legislative Assembly of Wyoming, and the presiding officer announced the signature of the President pro tempore thereto.

COIN DUTIES ON IMPORTED GOODS.

Mr. BROWN. I ask unanimous consent to take up the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] on the silver question with a view of submitting some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unanimous consent is granted, the Chair hearing no objection.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted December 18, 1885, by Mr. BECK, relative to the payment of customs dues and the disbursements thereof, &c.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the silver question is in no sense a party question. Many of the leading Democrats both in and out of Congress differ with the President, Secretary of the Treasury, and other Democratic leaders upon this question. Many of the most distinguished and intelligent leaders of the Republican party agree with the President and Secretary of the Treasury. But a large number of Republican leaders equally as distinguished differ with their party friends on this question, and believe that the coinage of silver should be continued, at least to the extent now prescribed by law, while some think the annual coinage should be increased to a higher figure. No Senator or Representative, no matter which side he takes of this important question, can be charged with a want of fealty to his party on account of his position. I have no hesitation in expressing my deliberate and fixed opinion that it would be unwise and unjust to the people of this country to discontinue the coinage of silver at present or to lessen the amount annually coined under the present law.

An intelligent writer has lately made the statement that the national public debts of the civilized world, embracing mainly the public debts of Europe and America, amount in round numbers to $25,000,000,000. Upon this enormous sum the people are paying more than an average of 4 per cent., or $1,000,000,000 per annum of interest. The same writer is of opinion that all the state and county and corporation debts of the world aggregate about $50,000,000,000, making the indebtedness of the world, national, state, and corporate, amount to $75,000,000,000, which at 4 per cent. would be three billions a year of interest, with which the labor of the people is now taxed, an annual interest of twice the amount of the whole public debt of the United States.

The holders of this immense amount of bonds and other obligations form a class, and the laboring people of the world who are wealth-producing and who labor to pay this enormous amount annually form another class. They are very properly designated the creditor class and the debtor class. It is the interest of the creditor class, holding this immense amount of bonds and liens upon the labor of the people, to have both the principal and interest paid in the most valuable currency which it is in their power to receive from the debtor class.

These bonds and other obligations, so far as this country is concerned, were contracted to be paid in a fixed currency, specified and defined in the contract. Most of the debt was contracted during the war, and it was agreed between the debtor and the creditor as to the larger part of it that the debt should be paid in the lawful money of the United States, or greenbacks, which were then the lawful money and currency of the country, and, in fact, almost our only currency; and during a not inconsiderable proportion of the time one dollar in silver was worth two dollars and a half in greenbacks.

A farmer furnishing bacon to the Army worth $100 in silver received $250 in greenbacks, or a bond of the Government for $250. In other words, he received in a bond of the United States two and a half times as much as his bacon would have brought in silver. The same was true of the manufacturer, the merchant, and all other classes who furnished supplies to the Army of the United States. Thus the matter stood at the end of the war. The bondholders during all the period while greenbacks were so heavily depreciated got two or two and a half times as much in bonds for the articles delivered by them to the Government as they would have brought in gold or silver. In that state of the case what peculiar obligation rested upon the Government of the United States to pay these bonds in a better currency than was provided for any other creditor of the United States?

What peculiar claim did the bondholder, who obtained his bonds during this state of inflation and got this large increase upon the gold or silver value of his commodities, have to be paid in better currency than the balance of mankind who might be creditors of the United States? Why should he receive in payment a better currency than the Army or the Navy or the clerks in the Departments or the day laborer who toils upon the public works of the United States? I can see no reason whatever why the discrimination should have been made in his favor. The soldiers who imperiled their lives in the storm of battle received their wages in greenbacks. Their widows and minor children, where the husbands and fathers were slain in battle, received their pensions in greenbacks, and I believe they still do. All the officers and employés of the Government received their compensation in greenbacks, and I believe they still do. The men who toiled upon the new vessels of the Navy, as well as the men who labored during the extremes of heat and cold in the improvement of your rivers and harbors, received their pay in greenbacks, and they still do. What greater equity existed in favor of the bondholder than existed in favor of either of the classes to which I have referred? If there were any I am not aware of it.

But the association of bondholders, on account of the large increase that had been paid them above the gold and silver standard, had an enormous amount of our securities in their hands. The debt amounted to $2,756,000,000 at the end of the war, and while a portion of this debt was owned by every class in the community, the great bulk of it belonged to a comparatively small class of capitalists, who were able, when a United States bond for $250 could be obtained for commodities worth $100 in silver, to advance the amount and take the bond. This creditor class, holding this large amount of bonds of the United States acquired under circumstances most favorable to their own interests, naturally desired to increase the value of the obligations held by them, and they went to work, systematically I have no doubt, and used the columns of influential newspapers and the brains of influential men, and they finally had the pleasure to see the passage of the act of 1869, declaring that the principal of the bonds as well as the interest should be paid in coin. There was an exception in this act, applicable to a certain class of bonds, but the exception was so qualified as to destroy its effect and leave the rule substantially as above stated.

There was no new consideration for this important alteration in the contract so far as the then bondholders were concerned. Many of them got their bonds when the legal money of the United States, greenbacks, was so depreciated that the bonds only cost them about 40 cents in the dollar in gold or silver, and the contract between them and the people was that the bonds might be paid in the same currency they gave for them, to wit, in greenbacks, or in lawful money, as it was called. Instead of carrying out this contract Congress gratified them by the passage of the act above mentioned, by which it declared that they should receive payment in coin; that is, in gold or silver. But they were not content with this, and they soon had the pleasure to see the passage of another act, which is dated 14th of July, 1870, authorizing the refunding of the bonds, and prescribing that the new bonds should be paid in coin of the standard value prescribed by law at the date of the passage of this act.

The gold dollar then consisted of 25.8 grains of standard gold and the silver dollar of 412.5 grains of standard silver.

But let it be borne in mind that while they were procuring this legislation greatly enhancing the value of their securities, they did agree to receive payment in the coin of the United States of the standard of that date. In other words, they agreed to receive payment in silver dollars or gold dollars of the standard weight which the law then authorized and of the standard weight which it now authorizes, as neither the weight of the silver nor the gold dollar has been changed by law since that time.

Now, we would naturally enough conclude that this system of changing the contract from time to time, at each change making it more valuable to the creditor party, had been carried far enough, and that the people would not be asked to do more than pay an original greenback debt worth 40 cents in the dollar in the gold and silver coin of the standard of 1870 or the gold and silver coin of the present date. But not content with the advantages they had obtained over the people, the next step was that of demonetizing silver. What would have been the effect if silver could have been permanently demonetized, and the coinage of the standard silver dollar discontinued, and the guarantee given that nothing but gold should be received in payment of the public debt? This would still further have enhanced the value of their bonds, as it would largely have diminished the quantity of the coin with which, under the contract, they were to be paid by striking down silver coin, which would have greatly increased the value of the gold coin, which would have then been the only coin we could have had to give them in payment. This would have added probably from 25 to 50 per cent. to the value of their bonds, and it would have enhanced the burdens of the people out of whose labor they must be paid a like amount.

But after the act demonetizing silver had gone into effect, the people, who felt that they had already been greatly wronged, determined to take the matter into their own hands, and they sent representatives to Congress to repeal the act demonetizing silver and provide for a reasonable amount of annual coinage, and a very moderate amount under the circumstances. As the people since that period, at each biennial election, have selected members of Congress who could not be charmed by the seductive influence of this great creditor class, it became necessary in their estimation, notwithstanding their frequent failures, for the creditor class to continue their efforts to procure legislation to discontinue the coinage of silver. They have failed to procure legislation to stop the coinage of silver. But notwithstanding this failure, they have still been so fortunate, while others have been compelled to take silver or greenbacks, as to continue to receive gold alone in payment of both the principal and interest which have fallen due, and up to this date, if I am correctly informed, there has not in any instance been a silver dollar paid to a Federal bondholder for years past, if indeed there has been any instance since the passage of the act of 1870. What has been the result?

A 6 per cent. United States bond during the war was worth, say, 40 cents in the dollar in gold or silver. Upon the passage of the act of 1869 they rose nearly to par. Upon the passage of the act of 1870 a 4 per cent. went to a par, and since that, as the interest and principal falling due from year to year have been paid in gold only while all the other creditors of the United States are required to take silver or greenbacks, the bonds have steadily advanced, until they are now worth 120 to 124 in the market, and still the cry is that the patriotic bondholders must be dealt liberally with, and that the taxes of the people must be increased to give them a better currency than other people receive, so as to keep up the credit of the United States.

I think it proper that we keep the credit up to a point that is reasonable. When a 3 per cent. bond is at par, I do not care to tax the people to put the credit any higher. If, with the surplus in the Treasury from year to year, we have to purchase the 4 percents to keep up the sinking fund, I do not desire that the people who sold them for 40 to 50 cents in the dollar pay 120 to 130 for them.

There is neither reason nor justice in the demand that we depreciate part of the currency of the United States, namely, greenbacks and silver, in order to make gold more valuable, and pay the bondholders a more exorbitant price.

I think that every officer of the Treasury who has to pay out money on the public debt or public expenditures of every character should treat all creditors alike, and should pay to the bondholder for his interest or his maturing bond either gold or silver, as the one or the other may be most convenient for the Treasurer at the time; and bear in mind, Mr. President, if you pay out twenty or thirty or forty millions of dollars a year in silver to the public creditors, who are a very influential and powerful class, you make it their interest to aid in keeping up the price of silver, while if you pay them in gold alone, they will be always attempting to depreciate silver to make the gold received by them more valuable as the representative of more property. I say, treat every creditor alike. If you pay the bondholder in gold alone, pay gold to the officer, pay gold to the laborer, and if there is really any difference in the purchasing power of the gold and silver dollar, there is greater reason why the bondholder, in view of the original cost of the bond, should take the silver dollar than there is why the laborer should take it and leave the gold dollar to the bondholder.

There is a great clamor on the part of the bondholders for a suspension of the coinage of silver and much apprehension on account of the large amount of silver dollars lying in the Treasury vaults. Now, I say it is the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to dispose of those silver dollars by paying them out to the public creditors whenever anything is due, and the bondholder should take his full share of them. If this does not dispose of them, then the Secretary of the Treasury should call in enough bonds upon which the people are now paying interest to absorb the silver dollars that are lying in the Treasury, and thus relieve the people of a large amount of interest which they are paying annually upon the portion of the debt that is subject to call and is not called in, and pay off the debt to all classes of creditors as far as we have silver coin not otherwise appropriated. If it is said this is not honest, as it is not an honest dollar, I reply that it is always honest to pay a debt in the very currency which the creditor by the contract has agreed to take. The contract in this case, as amended at the instance of the creditors, is that every one of these bonds may be paid in silver dollars or gold dollars at the convenience of the Treasury, and no American need blush when the Government carries out in honest, strict, good faith its contract with its creditors, and pays them in the very currency which the creditors have contracted to take.

The money received into the Treasury from customs on imported goods is, under the law, to be collected in coin, and is by act of Congress first specially set apart for the payment of the interest on the public debt. The contract with the bondholders, then, is to take the coin of the United States, either gold or silver. The act of Congress requires the coin that is received for duties on imports to be set apart for the payment of the interest upon the public debt.

A large portion of the customs is paid in silver coin, and yet not a dollar of this coin, which is the currency agreed on by the parties to the contract, and which is specially set apart by act of Congress to that use, is paid to a single bondholder. The silver dollars are reserved for the people, the laborers, the debt-paying class; the gold dollars are reserved for the bondholders, who are the creditor class. And as the gold goes alone to the most powerful creditor class, all the immense power and influence of that class are constantly brought to bear to depreciate the value of silver, in which the people are paid, and enhance the value of gold, in which the bondholders are paid. This is neither fair dealing nor common honesty.

This is a subject upon which the people should be aroused, and they should require their representatives, no matter in what department of the Government, to see to it that this law is executed and the contract of the Government with the bondholders complied with, and that any surplus silver dollars of the standard of 1870 which the Treasury may at any time possess be paid to the bondholders and other creditors, so as to stop interest and to that extent reduce the burdens of the people. The Secretary of the Treasury tells us in his report that the estimated amount of gold and silver coin in the United States on the 30th of June, 1885, was $820,000,000, $542,000,000 of which consisted of gold coin and $278,000,000 of silver coin.

According to this estimate there are nearly twice as many gold dollars as there are silver dollars in the United States, or, in other words there is a little over one-third of the coin in the United States silver, and nearly two-thirds gold. The bondholders then may well struggle to demonetize silver and make gold the only standard, as it would greatly reduce the amount of the circulating medium and greatly enhance the value of their bonds on account of the increased amount of property which would be required to make payment.

But we are told that it is necessary to stop the coinage of silver to prevent the exportation of our gold to foreign countries and the importation of a large amount of silver which would form an inferior currency for this country. This note of warning has constantly been given by bankers and bondholders ever since the passage of the act of 1878 remonetizing silver, which act directs the coinage of not less than two millions per month of legal-tender silver dollars; but the prophecy with which we have been constantly haunted has not in a single instance been fulfilled. Take the whole period of the time since the passage of the act of 1878, and the result has been the very reverse of what was so often predicted by Treasury officials and bondholders.

From year to year, almost without exception, we have imported more gold than we have exported and we have exported more silver than we have imported, and all the reasonable probabilities are that we shall continue to do so. And bear in mind that at the end of seven years we have twice as much gold as silver coin in our country. We have a country of unparalleled capacity, of immense proportions, with more virgin soil and more productive capability than any other country on the face of the globe. We have a population of nearly 60,000,000 of people, with more inventive genius, more energetic industry and enterprise, than the people of any other nation. We produce by our factories a very large proportion of the manufactured articles necessary for our use. These advantages enable us to export more and import less of the necessaries and conveniences of life than any other people.

The result is a constant balance of trade in our favor, with a strong probability, with our increasing capacity for production and our increasing population and our constantly increasing independence of other nations, that this balance of trade in our favor will continue to grow instead of being diminished. Already within the last six or seven years it has amounted to over $500,000,000, which other nations have been obliged to pay to the United States as balance due on settlements; and as gold is the medium of exchange which is adopted in settlements between us and European nations, this pours a steady stream of gold into the United States, and while the production of silver from our mines the last year has been greater than the production of gold, still the quantity of gold coin in the United States almost doubles the quantity of silver coin, according to the extract which I have already read from the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. This shows that our country is being enriched by the importation of gold, and that we do not find it necessary to export gold to settle the balance of trade against us, as it does not exist to any extent with European nations. Why, then, should we fear a drain of gold and an influx of silver? All the probabilities are that there will be an increased influx of gold and export of silver.

In a monetary conference held in Paris in 1881 the distinguished financier Mr. Broach, the delegate from Norway, a country that has adopted gold monometallism, made the following important statement during the discussion:

In short, universal bimetallism is not possible, for, in Asia, India and China are silver monometallic, and in Europe two of the chief powers are resolved on remaining gold monometallic.

Again he says:

The United States might put up with the system, because in the capacity of large exporters of merchandise payable in bills on London, they are sure of always keeping large quantities of gold. They could do so also because they would not be exposed to seeing silver flow to them. They are too great producers of silver for Europe to send to them that metal which they furnish on the contrary to Europe. The time is approaching, moreover, when the United States, sufficiently provided with coin, will no longer have to ask Europe for it, and when in payment of their consignments of breadstuffs and raw materials to the old continent they will have to demand an exchange of greater and greater quantity of manufactured articles or of European securities. But on either hypothesis they will be no resource for Europe for the sale of its depreciated silver.

But it is said that we have already more silver dollars coined and laid away in the Treasury than we can get into circulation. As long as the officers of this Government refuse to obey the laws passed by the Congress of the United States and refuse to pay silver coin to the creditors in payment of debts where they have expressly agreed to take silver we may have some surplus silver lying in the Treasury, but let it be paid out in honest satisfaction of our debts where the creditor has agreed to receive it and we will soon be rid of this large surplus. Again, let the law be faithfully carried out, and let silver certificates be issued for the silver lying in the vaults of the Treasury, and let them be put into circulation, and there can be no better currency. The holder of each certificate then has the faith of the Government pledged to him that the silver lies in the vaults of the Treasury to pay the certificate at any moment when it is presented. The business of the country requires more circulation, and every surplus silver dollar and every surplus gold dollar that is lying in the Treasury vaults idle, not part of the necessary reserve, should be put into circulation by a silver or a gold certificate.

We are told that we may carry two hundred and fifteen million of silver dollars, which we have coined and which are now in this country, but that if we continue to coin silver we will soon be overrun by the quantity. The greater danger is, if we encourage the contraction of currency to a point below what is needed by the great business interests we will produce stringency, and even panic, throwing large classes out of employment, and producing general depression and demoralization in the different pursuits of life.

Now, I have no hesitation in saying that if we had $200,000,000 more of silver coin thrown by its representative, the silver certificate, into circulation the business of the country would be immensely improved.

If we stop the coinage of silver we contract the currency at least $28,000,000 per annum. That amount is annually coined into silver dollars and put into circulation. That amount will be withheld from circulation each year while we fail to coin the $28,000,000. In other words, out of the silver of the country $28,000,000 are made each year and thrown into circulation, which would not go into circulation if the coinage were suspended, and to that extent depression of business would follow.

It is said that the national banks are contracting their circulation on account of the redemption of the 3 per cent. bonds upon which they are banking, and that we may look for a contraction of from $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 per annum on that account. If so, and we add to that $28,000,000 annually of silver coin withheld, we shall produce a state of stringency in this country that may be very beneficial to the large creditor class, but very detrimental to the debtor class. But can we manage additional silver dollars in this country as currency with full legal-tender quality without detriment to our business?

We have fifteen to twenty millions more of population than either France or Germany. Our territory is several times as large as the territory of both these governments put together. We outstrip them in enterprise, industry, and production. We need more local circulating medium than both of them together. We are told that both these nations have stopped the coinage of silver, and that is given as a reason why we should do so.

We are told by the Secretary of the Treasury that Germany has four to five hundred millions of silver marks, in thalers, of unlimited legal tender, and that France has six hundred millions of five-franc silver pieces of unlimited legal tender, while we have but two hundred and fifteen millions of legal-tender silver dollars. In other words, France and Germany have three times as much legal-tender silver coin as we have. We certainly have need of as much as they can carry. We hear of no panic in the money market there, no selling of gold at a premium, and no difficulty about legal-tender silver coins answering all the purposes of money. We can then very safely, to meet the demands of our immense business, coin four hundred millions more than we have at present, and we will then have less legal-tender silver coin than they have in France and Germany, and little more than France alone. If they can carry it without difficulty, why may not we do likewise?

The United States is probably the heaviest producer of silver in the world. The United States and Mexico together produce about one-half of all the silver mined in the world. Why, then, should either of these nations array itself on the side of the powers that seek to demonetize silver and destroy its value?

From the earliest ages of civilization silver and gold have been the metals used for the coinage of the money of the world. In all ages they have been mentioned alike as money, and the quantity of each in circulation has been nearly equal. The Secretary of the Treasury informs us in his report that the "statisticians all agree that silver is 54 per cent. of the monetary metals of mankind, while gold is but 46." While we have of gold about 65 per cent. and of silver about 35, then, if we were to strike down silver as money and all other nations were to follow our example, we would destroy more than one-half of all the money in the world, and more than one-third of our own metallic money, and would reduce property to one-half its present nominal value, and it would cost the debtor class twice as much property to pay their debts as it now costs when both the metals are coined and used as money.

Now, while it is admitted that 54 per cent. of the metallic money of the world is silver, it is sought to stop the coinage of that metal because it is said its market value is not at present the equal of our gold unit; in other words, that 412.5 grains of standard silver is not worth in the market a standard gold dollar, which is the unit of the United States. Why is it that silver, which down to the period of the commencement of the war, at 16 for 1, was worth a premium as compared with the gold coin, has since fallen until the metal is not worth more than 80 cents in the dollar? This has resulted not from a superabundance of silver, but from the unfriendly legislation of Great Britain, Germany, and the United States. If the principal commercial nations of the world will discontinue the coinage of gold as money it will decrease in value faster than silver has done, as it is a metal not so well suited for use in the mechanic arts and for various domestic purposes as silver. The superiority in value that it now has over silver is entirely artificial. It is produced by unfriendly legislation against silver and partial legislation in favor of gold. Let the case be reversed, and permit the unlimited coinage of silver and stop the coinage of gold into legal-tender money, as they have done in India, and silver will very soon reassert itself, and 412.5 grains of standard silver will again become worth more money in the market than 25.8 grains of gold.

I have heard it stated that the necessity for suspending the coinage of silver grew out of the fact of the enormous increase of silver from the mines in our own country and Mexico and other parts of the world, making a great disproportion in quantity in favor of silver. In other words, that the metal had become too plentiful to be coined into money without restraint. Now, to show the fallacy of this position, I again refer to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. He says "gold from the mines of all the world has doubled in quantity within thirty-five years, silver about doubling in the last one hundred years," so that in fact the production of gold at the mines has shown an increase much more rapid than that of silver, and if there were cause for alarm on account of the too great increase in the quantity of one of the metals it existed in the case of gold and not of silver. While gold doubles in thirty-five years, silver doubles in about one hundred years. Gold therefore doubles, if the Secretary of the Treasury be right, in about one-third of the time it takes silver to double. If I were to adopt the line of argument of the other side this would be a strong argument in favor of suspending the unlimited coinage of gold, because that metal is becoming too plentiful to be coined without restraint.

But as I stated on a former occasion, overproduction of neither gold nor silver is the difficulty. The world is making rapid strides in developing new enterprises every year. Commerce has received an impetus from the discoveries made in the arts and sciences, in steam and electricity, within the last half century which has no parallel and no approximation to a parallel in all the history of the past. The different nations of the world are being thrown together as near neighbors, space is being annihilated, and the human race is becoming more intimately associated as one people. There has been a rapid advancement in agriculture, in all the mechanic arts, in railroading, ship-building, in transportation on land and sea, in manufactures and commerce, requiring a greatly increased quantity of money for a circulating medium to do the business, and instead of an overproduction of the precious metals, the great increase in the demand and the yearly waste or loss from use taken into the account the present production is not adequate to the real wants of mankind. This is further demonstrated by the extensive use of a paper circulation not predicated upon a solid specie basis, which several of the great powers are compelled to adopt for want of sufficient metallic currency.

The truth is the growing manufactures, agriculture, and the mechanic arts, and other great interests of the world are increasing so rapidly that it requires all the gold and silver that is produced by the mines to keep mankind supplied with such quantity of the precious metals coined into money as is really necessary for the regulation of our business exchanges and for the well-being of society.

We are told that Great Britain many years ago demonetized silver and made gold alone the standard of values, and that while Great Britain continues to pursue that policy other commercial nations are obliged to follow. While Great Britain makes gold the standard, she uses in her island home an immense amount of silver, which is received in a large class of the transactions of life as money. But why was Great Britain prompted to this course? The people of that country had accumulated immense wealth, and the Government had reached the position where it was the representative of the greatest creditor nation on earth.

As almost the whole world was indebted to Great Britain, any line of policy which made a dollar in money the representative of a larger amount of property, and which caused it to take more property of the debtor to satisfy the demand of the creditor than it would have taken before, was beneficial to Great Britain.

By striking down one of the metals—and she selected silver for that purpose—and refusing to receive in payment anything but gold, she increased the purchasing value of the pound sterling, and thereby increased the amount of property necessary to pay the debt of the pound sterling due to her; just as the bondholders, if they can strike down silver in this country, increase the value of their bonds by increasing the amount of property necessary to pay the bonds.

But the fact that Great Britain demonetized silver did not make it necessary for even her nearest neighbors to follow her example. Gold is the legal tender that Great Britain now permits to be coined, but France, her neighbor just across the channel, while she is not now coining silver, carries, say, $600,000,000 in silver coin, which is all full legal tender, and she gets along with her exchanges and purchases and sales as well as Great Britain does with hers. If, then, France under the circumstances can carry $600,000,000, why should we not be able to carry $1,000,000,000 of legal-tender silver coin? There is certainly no good reason why we may not carry a much larger sum than France can carry.

But Great Britain is not very consistent in her course in demonetizing silver and making gold the standard. While she adopts that policy in her home government, she adopts exactly the reverse of it in her immense possessions in India. There gold is demonetized and silver is the legal tender. By this policy Great Britain is enabled to draw the gold into the exchanges of the home government and to put off any quantity of surplus silver that she may have on her possessions in India. And having there 200,000,000 of subjects, she has an immense vent for all the silver that she may be able to control. This is a shrewd piece of financiering. At one end of the line gold is the legal money, at the other end silver alone is the legal money. At one end gold is demonetized, at the other end silver is domonetized. While we have not a country with the immense population of India to absorb and use our silver, we have a country of much greater extent and with a population more productive than the whole of India to use the silver which is annually taken from our mines, even if a much larger proportion of it were converted into coin.

As I have already stated, we are in no danger of having our gold drained out of this country and silver imported to take its place as long as the balance of trade remains in our favor as between us and the principal European nations. As two of the chief powers of Europe coin gold as their legal tender, and as commercial settlements are made in gold, we get the benefit of it, and our stock of gold is constantly increased by a drain from those nations into this country to settle balances in our favor.

But there is another view of this subject in favor of silver to which I wish to refer in this connection. It is a well-known fact that silver is the principal money or medium of exchange used in China, British India, Japan, and in fact all the other Eastern nations. More than two-thirds of the people of the globe prefer it to gold and use it chiefly as their money. South America is a large producer of both gold and silver; so is Mexico. But there the silver dollar is still recognized and used as a circulating medium, as legal money, and there is no discrimination against it.

As we are fast becoming a vast manufacturing power, as well as a great agricultural power, with a large surplus of the products of our different manufacturing establishments for exportation, we look chiefly to China and other Eastern nations and to South America as the markets where we can most successfully compete with England and France and other commercial powers, but especially with the former. There is a very large balance of trade against us in Brazil and the West Indies, principally for sugar and coffee. Both these countries use silver as legal money. In paying that large balance of trade in specie why should we send our gold out of the country if we prefer to keep it when they would as readily accept silver? Why not send them silver in payment of these balances?

The same remark applies to the Hawaiian Islands, where our purchases of sugar turn the balance of trade against us. Why not maintain our silver standard and our silver coins and pay these balances in silver or gold, as it suits our convenience, and why not send our silver to China and other Eastern nations to exchange for their commodities, as there, too, the balance of trade is against us? As the nations which owe us large balances must settle with us in gold and the nations to whom we owe balances are willing to take silver, and as that state of things is likely to continue for many years to come, the successive reports of the Treasury Department which come to Congress annually, predicting great financial trouble by the draining of our gold out of the country and the filling its place with silver, no longer produce uneasiness, as they are found to have no practical significance.

In the report of Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, then Secretary of the Treasury, now the able and honored President pro tempore of the Senate, dated December 2, 1878, very soon after the act was passed remonetizing silver, we find at the conclusion of an argument on this question the following sentence:

> It would therefore seem to be the best policy, for the present, to limit the aggregate issue of our silver dollars, based on the ratio of 16 to 1, to such amount as can clearly be maintained at par with gold, until the price of silver in the market shall assume definite ratio to gold, when that ratio should be adopted and our coins made to conform to it; and the Secretary respectfully recommends that he be authorized to discontinue the coinage of the silver dollar when the amount outstanding shall exceed $50,000,000.

From this it is very clear that the honorable Secretary did not think we could carry at par more than $50,000,000 in silver, and that we should limit the aggregate issue to such sum as could be clearly maintained at par with gold, and the sum of $50,000,000 was fixed as the amount the Secretary thought we could manage. Instead of fifty millions of legal-tender silver dollars we now have two hundred and fifteen millions, according to the report of the present Secretary of the Treasury, and still the silver dollar is maintained at par with the gold dollar. If the suggestion of the Secretary of the Treasury in 1878 had been adopted, we would have withdrawn, or rather withheld, from circulation the $165,000,000 in silver which we now have either in the Treasury ready to go into circulation or in actual circulation. If that amount were now withdrawn from the currency, it would produce stringency and financial pressure of a fearful character.

In the report of the Secretary of the Treasury in 1881, three years later than the report above referred to and four years ago, we find the following admonition:

> A continous monthly addition to our silver coinage will soon leave us no choice but that of exclusive silver coinage, and tend to reduce us to a place in the commercial world among the minor and less civilized nations. It may be assumed that a people as enterprising and progressive as that of the United States, holding a leading position among the nations, will not consent to a total abandonment of the use of gold as one of the metals to be employed as money, and we can not be placed in the awkward position of paying for all that we buy abroad upon a gold standard and selling all we have to sell upon a silver standard. It is therefore recommended that the provision for the coinage of a fixed amount each month be repealed, and the Secretary be authorized to coin only so much as will be necessary to supply the demand.

Since that recommendation we have coined over one hundred million silver dollars, and we now have twice as many gold as silver dollars. Something similar to the above has appeared, I believe, in every annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury since the remonetization of silver. But these doleful forebodings have proved very harmless, as none of the evils predicted have befallen the country. We are carrying two hundred and fifteen millions of silver dollars, and not fifty millions, at par with gold. We still use gold as a currency and have nearly twice as much of it as we have of silver, and we have not been reduced to a place in the commercial world among the minor and less civilized nations, nor have we been placed in the awkward position of paying for all that we buy upon a gold standard and selling all that we have to sell upon a silver standard.

These annual predictions of imminent danger have ceased to alarm any one who is at all familiar with our commerce, our exchanges, and our currency. Bankers and bondholders who are largely interested in striking down silver and maintaining a gold standard only prognosticate great calamity if the coinage of silver be not suspended. But the people, the laboring class, the wealth-producing class, the debt-paying class, and the commercial class, who are not bondholders or bankers, see no difficulty in continuing the present coinage of silver under the law now of force.

But we are told that the legal-tender silver dollar is not intrinsically worth as much as the legal-tender gold dollar, and that the inferior currency is always put into circulation, and where there are two currencies unequal in value the more valuable is always retired and the less valuable goes into circulation; or, as it has been expressed in more historic language, that "bad money drives out good money, but good money can not drive out bad money." "In other words, the relatively cheaper medium of exchange will be retained in circulation and the relatively dearer one will disappear."

Now, Mr. President, you will please bear in mind the fact that we are constantly reminded that the Treasury Department can not get the legal-tender silver dollars into general circulation, though the Treasury Department has the power to pay out the legal-tender silver as long as there is a dollar of it. But we are told from year to year that it is impossible to get it into circulation, and still we are told it is inferior to gold. What then becomes of the rule that "bad money drives out good money, but that good money can not drive out bad money." If the silver dollar is the inferior currency which the advocates of a suspension of coinage tell us it is, why does it not drive out gold from circulation and why does it not fill every avenue of business with its presence?

It must be true either that the silver dollar is not the inferior currency which it is represented to be or that the rule above mentioned is not a sound rule, or else we must conclude that the effort at the Treasury heretofore has been to keep it out of circulation rather than to put it in. To the credit of the present Secretary of the Treasury I beg to remark that, as I understand it, he has greatly increased the circulation of silver since he has been in office, and I entertain so much confidence in his ability, his fidelity to principle, and his patriotism that I have no doubt he will soon be able to put all the surplus he has on hand into circulation without driving out gold. Whether it be a less valuable or more valuable currency, the two can circulate together in large quantities without practical embarrassment, as the results have already shown. Intrinsically there is no substantial difference between the value of 25.8 grains of standard gold and 412.5 grains of standard silver. The apparent difference grows out of unfriendly legislation against silver and unjust and partial legislation in favor of gold. Hence the different Secretaries of the Treasury have been unable, as they report, to put the "Gresham law" in force, and have silver, which they say is bad money, go into circulation and drive out gold, which they claim is good money. The failure grows out of the fact that both are good money, and they circulate together, as they always have done, and neither can drive out the other.

It has been said repeatedly by high officials that the coinage of the silver dollar does great injustice to the laboring class of this country; that the silver dollar is not an honest dollar, and that the laboring class should be paid in gold for their labor. Why, then, is it not done? We probably have gold enough in the Treasury to pay all who labor for the United States, and it is a little remarkable that this argument should be advanced by those who have power to pay, and refuse to pay, a dollar in gold to any one laboring for the United States. Those who labor for this Government receive pay in silver or greenbacks. Not one of them can get an honest claim of a hundred dollars for which he has labored paid in gold at the Treasury. The gold is kept for the bankers and the bondholders, and notwithstanding they have agreed as part of their solemn contract to take payment both of principal and interest of their bonds in gold or silver coin of the present standard value, not a dollar of silver is paid to them, but it is kept for the laboring class, and the gold is securely hoarded and sacredly kept until it can be paid out to the bondholders.

But the laboring class are in fact as well paid for their labor as they have been at any previous period in the history of the country, and a legal-tender silver dollar will buy more of the necessaries of life for the laborer than it would have done at almost any other time. The honorable Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], in his very able speech on this subject a few days since, demonstrated that point very clearly. Before the war the laboring man who received a dollar a day for his labor, and a large proportion of them got less, could buy eight yards of calico for a dollar. Now the laborer can take the dollar which he receives for his day's labor and buy twenty yards of calico. Then he could buy bacon at 14 cents a pound. Now he can buy it at 8. And so with almost all the necessaries of life.

There is nothing, therefore, in the position that the laboring class can be damaged by the coinage of the silver dollar. The laborers are generally glad to get silver. It is popular with the laboring class everywhere, and they would be glad to have a great deal more of it in circulation. The people can not be frightened by the statement that the laborers will suffer when they are paid in legal-tender silver dollars.

When you strike down silver you will depreciate property nearly one-half, and the price of labor will go down in the same proportion, and he who now gets a legal-tender silver dollar for his day's labor will then get but fifty cents in gold. How will the laborer be benefited by the change? But while the laborers will be content to receive silver dollars, they will insist that the bondholders who have contracted for silver dollars shall be required to take their proportion in that currency. This is a case where equality is equity, and all that the laborers desire is that bondholders and laborers be placed upon the same equal platform, that the same equity be done to each class. With this the laborers will be content. To this the bondholders should be compelled by law to submit.

If the national banks, by a system of hoarding gold or otherwise, attempt to practically demonetize silver and to force gold to a premium by refusing to take legal-tender silver dollars or silver certificates in settlement of balances or in any settlements, and if the officers who represent the people in the different Departments of Government at Washington will not take the matter in hand and enact and enforce the necessary laws, then the people at the recurring elections should take the matter in their own hands, and fill all the Departments with men who will apply the proper corrective, by a forfeiture of the charters of such banks as are abusing their privileges, or by the enactment and faithful execution of such other constitutional and just laws as the exigencies of the case and the interest of the people may require.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the discussions in January and February, 1878, of the silver question developed fully and exhaustively the theories of monometallism and bimetallism. The conclusions reached by Congress were unmistakable. A concurrent resolution passed the Senate January 25, 1878, and was returned from the House four days afterward with a message notifying the Senate that the House had agreed to the same. That resolution is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That all the bonds of the United States issued, or authorized to be issued, under the said acts of Congress hereinbefore recited, are payable, principal and interest, at the option of the Government of the United States, in silver dollars, of the coinage of the United States, containing 412½ grains each of standard silver; and that to restore to its coinage such silver coins as a legal tender in payment of said bonds, principal and interest, is not in violation of the public faith, nor in derogation of the rights of the public creditor.

The bonds referred to were fully set out in the preamble. Following this came the act of February 28, 1878, to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character.

This act became a law notwithstanding the President's veto. Nothing could show more conclusively what was then the policy of the United States as developed through the Senate and House.

By the second section of that act the President was directed to invite the governments of the countries comprising the Latin Union, and of such other European nations as he might deem advisable, to join the United States in a conference to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver, for the purpose of establishing internationally the use of bimetallic money and of securing fixity of value between these metals. This invitation to a monetary conference came in by way of amendment to the original bill, and against which amendment I voted, and gave my reasons therefor, which appear in the RECORD of February 15, 1878. I believed that the policy of the United States in this regard should be established by Congress; and while the concurrence of other nations in the bimetallic system, as shown by that act to be the policy of the United States, would greatly strengthen that policy, still any attempt to secure that concurrence would prove abortive, and I added that—

Efforts have been made time and again. You might as well talk about having all nations speak the same language, of having every nation use the same pound weight, the same yardstick, as to talk about regulating nations about their coin. Every nation that has any independence of character about it has its own standard of weights and measures, its own standard of coin, and the Constitution of the United States contemplates that we shall coin money and regulate the value thereof.—Congressional Record, Forty-fifth Congress, first session, part 2, pages 1089, 1090, 1091.

The result was as I anticipated. The international conference invited in pursuance of this act met in Paris in August, 1878. That adjourned without practical results. Another conference was held at the same place in 1881.

Mr. EVARTS, one of the commissioners on behalf the United States at the conference of 1881, in referring in a speech before the conference to that of 1878, says:

What conclusion, what result flowed from it? Germany was not represented at all. England was present in the body, but absent in the spirit. France and its group of nations occupied only an expectant attitude. The United States found to their appreciations to the arguments by which they supported them, to their warnings, to their fears, to their hopes, no response that, by way of action, or by way of assurance of action, they could carry home as a result.

This was precisely what I anticipated, and, so anticipating, voted against the invitation to a conference.

The conference of 1881 was equally as barren of results as that of 1878. Congress, with these failures in memory, will now and hereafter, I trust, rely exclusively upon itself as the representative of the States and people, and not upon foreign nations, and formulate and stand by a system which in its best judgment will promote the welfare of the States and people whom it represents.

While there was in the sessions of these conferences much academic discussion, and hence divergent theories, dogmatically expressed, of little practical use to plain men, still there was much of an eminently practical character, from practical men, skilled in the great financial operations of governments and great financial establishments, with practical knowledge of the workings of monetary systems, and this will aid in the present discussion.

It was in that conference of 1878 conceded, and not questioned by any one, that governments having due regard to the obligation of contracts not only had the right, but that it was their duty, to look out for themselves.

M. Leon Say, of France, the president of the conference, said:

France, placed in the center of this union, finds that she has collected in her hands a great quantity of silver. There are at present about nine hundred millions (francs) in the vaults of the bank, and about fifteen hundred millions outside of the bank; which gives a sum total of twenty-five hundred millions by means of which the circulation of silver may be effected in this country. It certainly would not serve our purposes to withdraw legal-tender power from such a mass of silver, which circulates in France as current money, and to throw it out upon the metal market as mere merchandise. Such an idea is inadmissible. (Page 55.)

Mr. Goschen (delegate from England) said:

We believe that silver is a monetary metal which ought to serve concurrently with gold in the general movement of the exchanges; we see even that it is almost the sole instrument of exchanges in half of the globe, and we shall never believe in the suppression of a money with which a commerce such as that of the Indian Empire and all of the farther East regulates itself. (Pages 56, 57.)

General Walker (delegate from United States) said:

The universal gold monometallism of Europe which has been recommended would in most countries amount simply to this: a scanty coinage of gold, held mainly by the banks for the settlement of international obligations, and a vastly preponderating circulation of debased silver. (Page 76.)

And further on he said:

Suffocation, strangulation, are words hardly too strong to express the agony of the industrial body when embraced in the fatal coils of a contracting money-supply.

At a time when the production of the two historical money metals, jointly, is diminishing, this most unfortunate occasion is taken to throw one of them out of use as money of full value; to remit it to the uses of token-money, and to banish what of the accumulated stock of three thousand years' production can not thus be employed, to be hoarded in the East as treasure or devoted to personal ornament. (Page 78.)

Mr. Horton (delegate from the United States) said:

Mr. Feer-Herzog's sketch of the monetary history of the United Kingdom suggested to Mr. Horton another observation. Mr. Feer-Herzog had said that from 1717 gold had become de facto the sole standard in England, and that in 1816 the law only, as it were, sanctioned what the natural course of things had established a century before. This was, said Mr. Horton, a version of English history which was generally accepted, but the researches which he himself had had occasion to make into the documents relative to the monetary history of that country had enabled him to ascertain that it was not in 1816, as was generally stated, but in 1798, that for the first time, and at a time when the double standard with the right of unlimited mintage existed in England at the legal ratio of 1 to 15.21, the Parliament prohibited the coinage of silver money—a law at first temporary (38 George III, c. 59) and soon rendered perpetual (39 George III, c. 75). It was not, therefore, in 1816, but in 1798, that the single gold standard was sought to be and was actually de facto established in England. And with what success? It was well known that throughout the whole period which followed, from 1798 to 1821, there was a contraction, almost a stoppage, in the metallic circulation, and that the real monetary standard of England was, in fact, the bank note, inconvertible and generally depreciated. Would the notes of the Bank of England have suffered this depreciation if the double standard had been retained? This was the question, and it must be capable of solution in favor of the gold standard if the example of England was to be cited in favor of the demonetization of silver. Now, if it was remembered that silver then everywhere served as money, that all the countries with which England held commercial relations possessed more silver money than gold money, and that gold not only stood higher than the English ratio, but was constantly subject to the peculiar demand created by the state of war on the Continent, there was good ground for believing that the monometallist law of 1798 largely contributed to the monetary confusion from which England suffered at that period. (Pages 86, 87.)

Referring to a remark of Mr. Feer-Herzog, delegate from Switzerland, as to the position of Alexander Hamilton, Mr. Horton said:

He would only, inasmuch as the name of Alexander Hamilton had been mentioned, call the attention of the conference to the doctrines of that financier with reference to the monetary rôle of the two metals. Hamilton deemed it eminently dangerous for the mechanism of circulation that one of the two metals should be reduced to the condition of simple merchandise, and comparing the advantages of an abundant circulation with the evils resulting from an insufficient circulation, he expressly pronounced in favor of the simultaneous employment of the two metals. He regretted that he could not at once place before the conference the very form given by that statesman to his ideas on this subject in his report on the Mint, but he would look for that document and place an extract from it on the table of the conference. (Exhibit E, fourth session.)

At the time Hamilton wrote that report the question of monometallism or bimetallism had not come into being. Nobody had yet expressed the idea of depriving one or the other metal of its character as a means of international payment. The campaign against silver, that campaign which commenced subsequently in 1798 with a first blow struck by England at the bases of obligations, and which was being completed in our time by the German demonetization, had not yet opened. Hamilton, by fixing the relation, a measure which in his eyes had a purely local character, might not have secured his country a metallic currency always composed equally of gold and silver, but his express intention was to preserve for the two metals their rôle of good national and international money; he maintained for both the right of unlimited mintage, and this was in its entirety a work diametrically opposed to the tendencies of the conference of 1867, whose doctrines had been extolled by the delegate from Switzerland. (Page 87.)

Mr. Baralis (delegate from Italy) said:

For a long time the country of Dante and Vico had but a single standard, that of silver, which formerly enjoyed the preference and the suffrages of economists. Only since the beginning of this century had the double standard been introduced, and notwithstanding all the learned works and all the speeches of theorists this system had never ceased to remain in force. (Page 88.)

Mr. Groesbeck (delegate from the United States) said:

I have nothing to say, here and now, about single and double standards of value. If we can keep an equilibrium of value between gold and silver all nations will be substantially upon both metals. Gold will be as valuable as silver everywhere, and silver as valuable as gold. It is idle to theorize that this can not be done. We know it has been done. Throughout the entire past up to 1873 both metals were in equal use as money, and kept together evenly enough. Now and then, at long intervals, the relation between them was slightly changed, but the change was easily made, and without noticeable embarrassment.

The change last made in Europe, fixing the relation at 1 in weight of gold to 15½ in weight of silver, stood the trial of more than three-quarters of a century. In all that time the slight differences in the market value of the metals did not amount to a serious disturbance. At one time one metal may have been at a slight premium; at another time, the other, but their average value was about the same.

It is worthy of notice that throughout the past, and up to the middle of the present century, it was never suggested by any writer or statesman that either of the metals should be generally abandoned because of the difficulty of keeping them sufficiently equalized.

This is the lesson of many centuries, and, theorize as we may, what has been done in the past can be done in the future; and instead of splitting hairs about the single or the double standard let us rather walk in the light of the experience of thousands of years. (Pages 109, 110.)

And on page 112 he said:

When the Latin Union shut the doors of their mints against silver, the situation was about as follows:

I. Nearly every one of the important silver nations had stopped using it, and were upon inconvertible paper money. Let me name some of them: Russia, Austria, Italy, Spain, France, and the United States. It was an extraordinary happening, which, it is to be hoped, may never occur again.

II. Another great nation, the German Empire, was moving from the single standard of silver, of which she had a large stock, to the single standard of gold.

III. The demand of the East for silver, which had always been steady, constant, large, and even insatiable, was suddenly checked. That was another extraordinary happening, which I venture to say had never occurred before and may not occur again for a century.

IV. The increased production of silver and wild stories of its probable future production.

Referring to the movement of Germany, Mr. Groesbeck said:

2. How is it as to Germany? She is still on her journey from silver to gold. She started in 1871, and is not through in 1878. It has been a long, toilsome, and costly journey. She began it under the most favorable circumstances. Her debt was very small, and she had in her hand a large extra fund for experiments. Her preparations were ample. The undertaking seemed easy; it is not yet a success. Instead of being an example to be followed, we should rather regard the case of Germany as a warning and an admonition. (Page 113.)

And I may add that Germany has not yet enacted the single gold standard, to which the people of Germany are hostile. As to the demand for silver in the East Mr. Groesback said:

3. How about the demand of the East for silver? It is about restored. Let me say, if there is any one factor of the problem we are considering which may be relied upon, it is the regular and constant demand of the East for silver. I can imagine a glut of gold, for gold has no insatiable Asia. I can not imagine a permanent glut of silver. As the rivers run into the sea, and yet the sea is not over full, so it will be with the flow of silver to the vast, populous, thrifty, and industrious East for at least another century. This adverse condition is also changed. (Page 113.)

Referring to the influx of gold from California, &c., in 1850, he said (pages 114–15):

You all remember the great outpouring of gold from Russia, Australia, and California. It began about 1850 and came in a great flood. Almost the entire world was then upon silver. England with her colonies of Australia and Canada, and two or three insignificant nations, were the only places upon gold alone. Portugal was yet upon silver. This flood of gold poured upon the world about $900,000,000 in the short space of six years, and the ordinary production of silver went on concurrently, and the nations seemed to be adequately supplied and in no need of this excessive production. Gold had no Asia to take it, and had to find a place in Europe. There was great alarm. A distinguished writer recommended its demonetization. A few nations fled to silver for refuge; others were braver and wiser, and conspicuously France with her bimetallic system. She let her then precious silver flow away to Asia, and filled her reservoirs with gold. The flood subsided and what came as a danger remained as a blessing.

What if the coinage of gold had been limited or suspended at that time? It would have been a great error, resulting in consequences very like to those now upon us. Silver would have been uppermost, and gold, excluded from the mints, would for a time have been only merchandise, for which there would have been but a small demand. Nine hundred millions of gold in six years!—a production that has had no parallel in all the past. It was welcomed, rather than rejected, and we put upon it the stamp of law, and made it money, and so it was saved from depreciation. Seventy-five millions of silver!—can we not welcome this also, and put upon it the stamp of law, and make it money, and so save it and our own silver from the possible danger of further depreciation?

Mr. President and gentlemen, if there are any causes local to yourselves why you can not do this now, I shall be sorry. It is not a very great or a very difficult work to restore silver to its former rank and power, and it seems to me we can not do it too soon for the general good. Accept it as a certainty that the world will not consent to narrow the basis of credit; the tendency is to widen it. How many money schemes are being constantly devised to take the place of gold and silver. They are in part an expression of discontent and unrest, growing out of the present derangement, and they have to me the appearance of a warning against the discontinuance of the use of either metal. Gold and silver, neither alone but both equally, have endured a trial of thousands of years, and through all the past it was never suggested that they were too abundant.

The first suggestion of such a kind occurred quite recently, when it was recommended that gold should be demonetized because of excessive production. Alas! if it had been done. The second is now to demonetize silver. Alas! if it shall be done. It would almost as soon occur to me to strike into barrenness a part of our wheat fields, because now and then their harvests seemed too plentiful, or to desolate some of our mines of coal, iron, and other minerals, because now and then their yield seemed excessive, as to desolate any of the mines of gold and silver because now and then their yield happened to be abundant. The more reasonable apprehension is that they may at some time fail. On the other hand, population, labor, trade, commerce, and the endless activity of life will never fail but ever increase, and their demand for these metals will always utilize their utmost production.

Mr. Feer-Herzog, of Switzerland, was not only a pronounced monometallist, but acknowledged himself a partisan of that theory and was its special champion in the conference.

It is true that Switzerland had the single silver standard till 1860.

Switzerland since the law of 1860, which gave legal-tender to gold and placed it in the first rank in circulation, has never struck gold coins.

And I presume it will make but little difference if she never does. It is said:

Her citizens prefer, in spite of a special law on the coinage of gold coins (December 22, 1870), to make use of the monetary establishments of Paris and Brussels, which are better situated geographically than the mint at Berne. (Page 191.)

It is, however, a matter of but little practical importance what may be the action of Switzerland, since its people control but little money of any kind. The Swiss delegate, while announcing himself a partisan of the single gold standard, clearly and unequivocally enunciated the principle that states in their monetary laws are controlled by their interest.

Referring to the Latin Union and its course, he said:

In such a case every state or group of states had only to consult its own convenience; its interest alone determined its right. (Fifth session, page 116.)

We should be controlled alone by what is the interest of the United States, having due regard always to the obligation of contracts. The expression of General Walker, that "it has been admitted that a doctrinaire legislation, rashly augmenting the demand for gold and diminishing that of silver, has caused and continues to cause a most pernicious perturbation in the metals," is painfully true.

Legislative tinkering with monetary and financial affairs has been the bane of the world during the last quarter of a century. Undoubtedly all business men feel that it is no violation of honor to pay according to contract, although in the case of an option the exercise of the option may greatly favor the debtor.

In the report of the Committee on the Currency, made to the House of Representatives February 2, 1821, I find this:

The Bank of the United States entered into a contract with Messrs. Baring & Co., of London, for the supply of $2,000,000 in specie in equal parts, as near as might be practicable, of gold and silver at the American standard. The amount was accordingly furnished, but not a dollar of it in gold, although gold is a currency of Great Britain and silver is admissible there as a tender in but very small sums.—International Monetary Report, 1878, page 536.

The Barings have always stood as fair as any bankers or capitalists, and yet they did not hesitate to avail themselves of the clause "as near as might be practicable," and delivered wholly the cheaper money because it was to their interest; and there is not a banker or capitalist in the United States who would not avail himself of the advantage of an option in a contract; still they denounce those who believe the Government should pursue that course in payment of bonds. And in my judgment, if the Secretary of the Treasury would pay off the bonds as they fall due in coin in proportion to the gold and silver coin in the Treasury, the effect would be to lessen the gap between gold and silver, and the same capitalists who now denounce silver payment would be its strongest advocates, and would denounce any man as an ignoramus who differed with them, precisely as they first declared any man stupid who thought it was possible to place bonds at 3 per cent. interest, and afterward became the strongest advocates of that measure—after it had proven a success in spite of them, and when it was to their interest to have such a measure.

There is no sentimentality about debt. It is a matter of contract, and what we need most now is a strong, unyielding, vigorous enforcement of the contract, complying rigidly with its terms and lightening in the payment as far as the contract justifies the burden of the taxpayer. Every coin bond of the Government is payable by its terms in coin of the present standard, and the Government has the undoubted right to pay either gold or silver coin, or partly in one and partly in the other, just as may be its interest.

States, counties, cities, corporations, individuals are largely indebted. These obligations will be made more onerous by suspension of silver coinage, and this Government should not lend a helping hand to oppression, but rather protect the citizen in his property, as well as in his life and liberty.

Do not by demonetizing silver make the contract by force of law more burdensome than it was when it was entered into. Do not take more of a debtor's property than would have been necessary to pay his debts had the law let money alone as it was when he made his contracts.

The fear that the passage of the bill remonetizing silver, so freely expressed, would impair the credit of the Government has proven an idle fancy. The credit of the Government strengthened upon its passage, and the Government has been able to refund at the lowest rate of interest since its passage, and without difficulty. Indeed, $150,000,000 in bonds were sold by the Government not long after the passage of the silver bill at 4 per cent. per annum in a single day, the lowest rate ever up to that time obtained by our Government, and the largest single transaction in the annals of governments, and this with a full knowledge on the part of capitalists of the resolution of January, 1878, which I have incorporated with these remarks, and with a full knowledge of the act remonetizing silver and it should not be forgotton that since the bond sale referred to, the Government has easily placed its bonds at 3 per cent.

It was claimed during the debate on the silver bill in 1878 that its passage would drive gold out of the country, and that the discarded silver of Europe would replace it. The balance of trade in our favor effectually checked the efflux of gold, and vast amounts of it have been shipped here since the passage of that act, more indeed than ever before.

Facts like these outweigh the theories of doctrinaires, academicians, visionaries, speculators, and stock-gamblers. It is now claimed that those dire results would have happened had not the bill limited the coinage of silver. The argument is entirely short. Foreign nations and all capitalists readily saw that the limit was put on simply because the United States believed it at the time to be her interest, and that the limit would be removed whenever this Government concluded it was to her interest to resume unrestricted coinage.

It was argued during the discussion of the silver bill that as the United States had coined but eight million silver dollars prior to demonetization capitalists had the right to conclude, and did conclude, that because silver dollars of full tender had ceased to be coined debts since contracted were therefore to be paid in gold. This argument is without force. That it was considered by the leading nations of the earth without merit is manifested by the arguments of their delegates in the monetary conference of 1878, heretofore quoted.

In the international monetary conference of 1867 the same argument in substance was advanced by Mr. Samuel B. Ruggles, commissioner on behalf of the United States, and was most effectually exploded.

At the fourth session of that conference, M. Parieu presiding, this occurred:

Mr. RUGGLES. * * * The United States would not consent to accept any fixed relation between gold and silver. The double standard is abolished when the relation no longer exists.

The President (M. Parieu, delegate from France) reminded Mr. Ruggles that the double standard still exists in the United States, and of course the relation between silver and gold, which is 1 to 16.

Mr. Ruggles answered that though the double standard still exists legislatively in the United States, it is virtually abolished in practice, and hence the United States has the gold standard alone.

To which M. Parien replied:

Reasoning in that way, as France coins a less number of 5-franc pieces than America does dollars, we might say, like Mr. Ruggles, that France has the gold standard alone, and that is what nobody would assert.

M. Jacobi, delegate from Russia, remarked that the United States can not be considered as having the single gold standard any more than France, unless a new law is passed to prohibit the coinage of silver dollars.—Appendix International Monetary Conference, 1878, page 841.

It is perfectly clear that capitalists knew that the Government had the right to pay in silver. It is the law creating the double standard—not the practice of the Government in respect to coinage—that controls and enters into contracts.

It has been said that investors were assured by high Treasury authority that the bonds would be paid in gold coin. No authority of that Department, high or low, could change the law or contracts under the law, or in law or in equity and good morals bind the Government. Indeed, such assurances, if ever made, which is doubtful, were quite gratuitous, to say the least.

The argument that but eight million silver dollars had been coined at the time the great debt of the United States was contracted, and therefore it could not have been expected that the debt would be paid in silver, is inconsequential.

The total gold coinage of the United States from 1793 to and including the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, was $845,836,591; the debt of the United States at that time was:

Interest-bearing	$2,332,331,207
Non-interest-bearing	439,969,874
Total indebtedness	2,772,301,081

So that if the United States had owned on that day every dollar in gold it ever coined, it would not have had one-third enough to pay the public debt.

But the weakness of the position may be further shown in another way. The entire coinage of both gold and silver from 1793 to 1877 inclusive in our mints was:

Gold	$1,035,958,675 00
Silver	237,163,116 90
Total	1,273,121,791 90

Less than one-half the public debt, June 30, 1866. But still more. The total coinage, including minor coins, up to and including the year 1877 was $1,286,037,189.45; so that every cent, gold, silver, subsidiary, nickel, and copper, coined by the Government from 1793 to 1877 inclusive was not enough to pay one-half the public debt owing in 1866, and if an argument is to be drawn from lack of silver coinage that the debt was not to be paid in silver, a stronger argument after that style, which is not a good one, could be made that we did not intend to pay the debt at all; for there was not half enough coin in the hands of both Government and people to pay it.

The position is absurd. The only sound position is that the Government has the right to pay according to the contract in the coin, gold or silver, of the standard weight and fineness fixed by law, it sees proper to select.

Has not the Government always pursued this course? Why were gold payments made by this and all other governments after the influx of gold from California and Australia? Simply because gold was the cheaper money and it was less onerous on the tax-payer to pay in gold. Silver was at a premium as to gold. Now that the positions are reversed is it not equally as honorable, equally as just, and equally sound policy to creditor and tax-payer alike to use the option which the Government has in the word "coin," and pay the debt in silver because it is less onerous on the tax-payer?

Much has been said about the honest dollar. There is but one honest dollar, white or yellow; that is the dollar of the contract. A less dollar is dishonest to the creditor, a larger dollar is dishonest to the tax-payer. If the debtor promises to pay a gold or silver dollar, whichever he chooses, he has the moral and legal right to pay either, just as he prefers.

Can the people of the United States absorb in legitimate business, foreign and domestic, the gold and silver which may be coined at our mints? I have no doubt of it. It is idle to compare the United States with European countries in the needs for money. Indeed, our surroundings are essentially different from theirs. Great Britian in 1801 had a population of 16,237,300; in 1871, 31,857,388. The United States in 1800 had a population of 5,308,483—less than one-third that of Great Britian. In 1870 the United States and Territories had 37,558,371; in 1880, 50,000,000, and now about 65,000,000. In other words, the United States in 1870 had not only caught up with Great Britain, notwithstanding her immense advantages in the start, but passed her in the race, with a majority of 6,700,983—a majority greater than the entire population of the United States in 1800. So of improvements of every kind, character, and description. The countries of the Old World are at a standstill. We are progressive, and need more money than any other people, and will continue to need more until our magnificent country is fully developed.

During the fatal period of forced, unnatural contraction, which paralyzed every industry and every step of whose pathway was marked by blasted hopes and ruined fortunes, the people were well-nigh suffocated for want of money supply. Well might Commissioner Walker, in his address before the conference, say:

Suffocation, strangulation are words hardly too strong to express the agony of the industrial body when embraced in the fatal coils of a contracting money supply.

The indomitable energy of the people, their determination to save more and spend less, blessed with bountiful crops, averted general and widespread disaster. As it was, many were brought to the verge of ruin, and still others were hopelessly wrecked. Factories closed, forges grew cold, and the land was filled with tramps. All this resulted mainly from (1) wild inflation, (2) sudden and too stringent contraction, (3) from a vicious tariff system which extorted by force of law from every buyer of protected articles toll to the protected. At last through tribulation the people reached the bed-rock of sound finance—gold and silver coin and paper convertible into coin on demand. Now the question presents itself, Can the United States use profitably all the money coined under existing laws? Shall the law making the silver dollar a legal tender and requiring it to be coined at a rate not less than $2,000,000 nor more than $4,000,000 per month be suspended? Is it sound policy to suspend that law? Shall we recant the well considered policy?

My own judgment has been deliberately formed after long and patient investigation, and I can not yield it, it matters not who may take the opposite ground. The facts upon which a judgment is to be formed are as open to one man as another, and I prefer my own judgment to that of any man who has not carefully examined the question. Our population is now about 65,000,000, is rapidly increasing, and will so continue for an indefinite period. In its development vast sums are needed, a large part of which goes to daily labor. We need more money than any other country on earth, because we are developing more rapidly.

That very large amounts of silver or certificates representing silver can be used in all the branches of domestic inland trade and commerce, in railroad building, the opening of farms, in farm labor, in running railroads, in building, and the many industries that might be named, every business man knows. No complaint has come from the people that there is too much money in circulation. No complaint against silver comes from them. The production of the precious metals is on the decrease. It does not keep pace with increase of population and wealth, and the constantly increasing comforts which the inventive genius of our people are blessing the people with. Every year more money is needed than the year before. We know that the vast influx of the precious metals which poured into Europe from Mexico and South America about the middle of the sixteenth century was not a curse, but a blessing; that it gave vitality to trade and commerce and trebled the price of products. We know that the $900,000,000 of gold dug from the mines of California and Australia between 1849 and 1858 was a blessing and not a curse, although we know also that alarmists wanted, because of this vast and rapid influx, to demonetize gold. We know that the dissemination of the coined metals among the people is a strong guard against the money-power when the days of contraction come. We know that the great body of the people are not rich, and that silver answers all the purposes of far the greater part of the inland trade and business of this country. We know that a dearth of money enhances the purchasing power of the dollar in the hands of the man fortunate enough to have it, and decreases correspondingly the price of the people's products and labor. All these things we know, and knowing them protest against discarding silver as a money metal.

The weight of silver, which is such a bugbear with some, has no terrors for the great body of the people

In the South we are not grievously weighted with silver or any other sort of money, and if by chance any one there should become overweighted he can easily unburden himself by exchanging his coin for silver certificates.

In my judgment a vast amount of silver may be profitably used in every part of the United States. Certainly in the great agricultural West and South there will be no complaint of redundancy, and I assume that the transactions of the East and North are not all of colossal proportions. I presume that farmers, lawyers, doctors, merchants, mechanics, and laborers of all kinds are limited in resources there as elsewhere, and that their transactions can very easily and conveniently be carried on with silver.

I suppose that a large amount of silver could be absorbed in the North and East as well as in the South and West, and the production of the precious metals does well if it keeps pace with the demand.

The example of Germany in demonetizing silver is not one fit to be followed. There never has been a steady financial system there. There is no sound reason for copying England. The British Government demonetized silver about 1798, by law extended from time to time to 1816 and then permanently, and it was not a success, if the bankruptcy of her people during the process of settling down on the present system is evidence; but, aside from that, England is not a producer of silver but a very large consumer by reason chiefly of transactions with East India, China, and other silver-consuming countries. She has managed to make London the great silver market. Being always a heavy purchaser, her policy is to buy silver as cheaply as she can. On our side the United States are producers more largely than any other country of both the precious metals; they are industries which add to the common wealth like wheat, corn, cotton, &c. Their production gives employment to many laborers and many other industries. The farmer, mechanic, manufacturer, common carrier, all find the mines a profitable customer. So far, therefore, from discouraging the production of gold and silver the true policy of our Government is to give them a helping hand. This raid upon silver is of comparatively recent origin. It is unwise, and if successful in reducing it to a mere article of merchandise would be an evil immeasurable in calamity.

The ratio of 1 to 15.98, or as is commonly and with sufficient accuracy expressed, 1 to 16, should undoubtedly not be changed. There would have been far more reason to give way to the alarmists who wanted gold demonetized because in six years $900,000,000 gold were added to the circulation of the world. The scare that developed itself in the international monetary conference of 1878 about Germany's $75,000,000 was without just foundation. It would not produce a permanent appreciable effect if it were all turned loose. There are private individuals in the United States able to buy every dollar of it, and should a syndicate in New York see a fair chance to make anything by it they would buy every dollar of it in a month. Gold and silver have been the world's money without question as to either down to a recent period, and while some nations have thought it to their interest to have the single gold standard and others the single silver standard, and still others the double standard, all have recognized both as good money until lately, until the craze of reducing silver to token money—pocket change—seized a few dreamers, and they have unfortunately found followers in every country, and especially among the common barrators of business, who are a curse in every land.

Silver is suited to every-day transactions, and the aggregate of these will foot up as heavily as the large transactions of the favored few who want only gold.

I make no war on either gold or silver—want both, and believe the law should place them upon equal footing, and that the Constitution intended that they should be so placed; and nothing in the history of this country, political or financial, intimates or hints at any difference until this new school of political economists sprang up a few years ago.

I regard an irredeemable paper currency as a curse to any people, and a fluctuating currency as utterly inconsistent with healthy trade. With such currency no man can make any reasonable calculations for the future. But a sound, stable currency, based on the precious metals, and convertible into coin on demand, is a blessing. Such currency is demanded by the needs of trade and the convenience of the people, and when the people have full confidence in its convertibility it is preferred as a circulating medium to gold or silver. No currency not convertible can ever command the confidence of the people. Convertible into gold or silver coin on demand, it is impossible to keep a redundancy in circulation, for whenever more of it is in circulation than is needed the excess will be converted into coin. The only true basis for currency is coin, and coin is its only regulator. Any attempt to regulate the issue of currency other than by coin will always prove abortive. It always has so proven and always will.

It is impossible to regulate the amount of currency issued on the will of the Government and not convertible into coin, for the reasons tersely and unanswerably stated by Mr. Clay, namely:

First, that it is impracticable to ascertain, à priori, what amount can be issued without depreciation; and second, that there is no adequate security, and in the nature of things none can exist, against excessive issues.

Gold and silver furnish the only adequate security against excessive issues, and both are needed. The supply of precious metals, like wheat or cotton, is obtained by labor. Whenever by reason of oversupply, should such a thing ever occur, their production ceases to be remunerative, then the labor devoted to mining would be diverted to other pursuits until an equilibrium between demand and supply is brought about; so that as these metals can only be produced by labor, their production is in a large degree regulatad by the universal law of trade, demand, and supply. And thus convertible currency rests on a sure foundation. Should it happen that more currency is in circulation than is needed then the excess would be turned in and coin drawn out, and this coin would be sent to those parts of the world having commodities more needed by coin holders than the coin. At last, therefore, gold and silver money, which is the money of the world, as it certainly is of our Constitution, finds its level as surely as water.

Whether that currency should be issued through the instrumentality of banks or by the Government is a question not necessarily involved in this discussion. My own judgment is that the best conceivable currency is gold and silver coin, and Treasury notes convertible into coin on demand of the holder. Should the Government issue Treasury notes only upon a deposit of a like amount in coin, or in extinguishment of outstanding bonds whose holders desired to convert them into notes, and stop national-bank notes as rapidly as the bank charters expired, we should have a complete and happy solution of the financial problem with which the people would be perfectly content, having a currency possessing every element of an absolutely sound, stable, convertible currency, and the war upon silver, as unreasoning as destructive, would be brought to a close happily both to Government and people.

The people of the West and South are, in my judgment, overwhelmingly in favor of both gold and silver. This has been attributed by some in the gold interest—at money centers—to a fraudulent desire to pay their debts at the rate of 80 cents to the dollar. A fouler libel was never uttered against a brave, honest, and industrious people. They propose to abide by their contracts, and if perturbations have been brought about in the marketable value of silver, until now it is worth in gold but 80 cents on the dollar, they know full well that this fall is the legitimate result of the efforts of combined capital to destroy silver as a money metal, and these gamblers but reap the fruits of their own folly. They know that the suspension of silver coinage means and is intended to mean, disguised as it may be, that silver shall never again be a medium of exchange and measure of values. They know that such legislation would enhance the purchasing power of what money is left—gold and paper convertible into gold—and of necessity that the prices of products would correspondingly fall.

The cotton planter knows that he can get from $90 to $100 for 2 bales of cotton of 500 pounds each, and that if silver is demonetized it will take 3 bales to buy the same $90 or $100 that 2 bales will buy now, and he knows that the money bought with the 2 bales will go just as far in the payment of debts and taxes as the same money bought with 3 bales. Again, a new departure has been taken by the single gold-standard men with a view of capturing the day laborer. They try to teach him that his day's labor is paid at the rate of 80 cents on the dollar. Does the laborer not know that he can buy just as much of the necessaries of life with a silver dollar as with a gold dollar or a greenback dollar? Again, the day laborer knows perfectly well that if the product of his labor is reduced in price, his labor which produces it is necessarily and correspondingly reduced in price.

The wheat planter knows as well as anybody that there has been in the last few years an amazing increase in the production of wheat in the British India possessions. He knows that that vast and populous country of the cheapest labor in the world has been penetrated by means of British capital from the shore to the interior with railways, and as a consequence wheat exportation has run up from a mere trifle to about 40,000,000 bushels per annum, competing in the Liverpool market with our Western wheat, and he knows that the two hundred and fifty million people of India are silver-using people, that silver is their sole standard of value, and that the more silver they can get for their wheat the greater the stimulus to produce wheat.

The same is true of low-grade cotton. Hence it is not strange that England, which controls this great business, should seek to make silver cheap, but it is passing strange that an American should in his blind folly play into the hand of England. It is passing strange that the same men who profess such love for the laborer who manufactures should turn the deaf ear to the laborer who delves in the silver mines and to the farmer who produces the two leading exports of this country, wheat and cotton.

It is well enough to understand that the American people demand both gold and silver, and that the great producing classes—whether agricultural, mining, or manufacturing—are not capitalists, and that it is not to their interest to have their products lessened in price by a contraction of the circulating medium. They have no fear of too much gold or too much silver. There may be an extraordinary production of either for a time, as of gold between 1849 and 1858, when more than $900,000,000 gold was added to the world's volume, giving life and impulse to every enterprise. They fear as little the present production of silver as compared with gold.

Sooner or later they will adjust themselves to about the fixed ratio, as they always have done. They are the world's money, designed and intended by an all-wise Providence for that purpose. They have been a medium of exchange and a measure of values since men began to form society. Leave them alone to perform their just functions. The people will say amen, and the only discontented class will be the money-changers, who seek to prostitute the great powers of Government to an unholy purpose, by laying an unjust burden on an overtaxed people, wresting from them by force of law in the payment of debts more than is required by the contract, and which in justice, equity, and good conscience they ought not to be required to pay.

JUDICIAL SALARIES.

Mr. HOAR. I now call up the unfinished business, and I desire to ask the Senate to spend the ten or fifteen minutes which it may take to deal with that bill in passing it.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. MORGAN to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 3. That the first section of this act shall only apply to judges who are hereafter appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let the first section of the bill be read.

Mr. HOAR. It is not necessary to read it. This is merely an amendment providing that the increase of salary shall not apply to any existing judge, but only to future judges.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is that it?

Mr. HOAR. That is the proposition of the Senator from Alabama. I do not think the Senator who moved it expects it to be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to strike out, in section 2, line 10, all after the word "member" down to the end of the section, and when the Secretary reports it I will state my reasons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 2, after the word "member," in line 10, it is proposed to strike out the words:

And no person heretofore so appointed or employed, being so related to such justice or judge, shall continue in said office or employment after the expiration of six months from the passage of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am satisfied on reflection, and I believe a majority of the committee are satisfied, though we have had no formal action about it, that this would be doing a great injustice to a large number of gentlemen who without reproach have taken up these positions and held them for a great many years as clerks, &c.—almost entirely clerks; entirely, so far as I know—whom the effect of this bill would be to turn out of office by an edict of Congress, if Congress should be understood to have the power to do that thing; and although it might rectify some occasional case where there has been an abuse which could be rectified in the ordinary course of justice, the balance of unkindness and injustice and unfairness to a large number of worthy persons would be so great, that I think we ought to strike out that clause and make the bill simply, as all bills ordinarily ought to be, prospective in its operation, and not touch any existing clerks of these courts who may happen to be related within the fourth degree to the judge.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, I hope the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will not prevail. If there are a large number of clerks related to the judges, holding office under them, it renders a provision of that character the more necessary.

I hold that a judge is not an impartial arbiter between his own kinsmen and the suitors in his court in adjusting fees and costs, as they frequently have to do, and that there is no species of nepotism so hurtful to the public interests as that which occurs in the Federal courts.

I offered originally the clause which the amendment proposes to strike out, and I gave some instances of nepotism in Texas. Just as I was leaving home I saw published in a newspaper (and I have no doubt of its truth and correctness) that a Federal judge, and he is a most estimable man and an able and acceptable judge, in whose court a railroad had been in litigation—the road had been in the hands of a receiver—in fixing the fees of attorneys and officers of the court fixed the fee of his son, who was a commissioner or master in chancery, at $10,000. I do not mean to say that the allowance was an improper one or that it had not been earned, but that the relationship existing between the judge and the officer is such as ought to disqualify him for sitting in judgment in such a case. I give that as an illustration of the working of the present system under which Federal courts are filled with the relatives of the judges. When a question comes up between one of these related officials and a suitor in the court I do not believe that the suitor has a fair chance for justice.

I do not believe that an abuse of this sort should be permitted to exist. I believe that above all things the fountains of justice should be held above the suspicion of contamination, and as long as judges can fill the offices of their courts with their own relatives it is calculated to give the general public a poor idea of the purity of judicial administration, especially when they see the favoritism that prevails in the rulings of courts, particularly upon questions of costs where their relatives are concerned.

Now, sir, I will vote for this bill with that clause in it. I will vote for the bill in order to get that clause. Without it I, for one, will oppose the bill. I believe it is much more important to have that clause than it is to pass that portion of the bill raising the salaries of the judges. If I can not get that clause I do not want the bill, and I hope that the Senate will vote down the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am happy, or sorry as the case may be, to say that I have no relative, so far as I know, within any degree of consanguinity or affinity, who is either a judge, or the son of a judge, or the nephew of a judge, or the cousin of a judge, or in any way related to a judge.

I suppose there have been abuses in the administration of justice in the granting of too large compensation to commissioners who have been sons of judges. I suppose there have been equal abuses in the administration of justice in granting too large compensations to commissioners who have not been the sons of judges or in any otherwise related to judges. It is an evil which will creep into every administration. I believe in keeping the administration of justice above suspicion. I believe in keeping the administration of the executive branches of the Government and the legislative branches of the Government above suspicion; and I believe anybody who will look at the Congressional Directories from the time when they began, fifty years ago down to now, will see that in every department of the Government, the Senate included, the sons of high Government officials, Presidents, Secretaries of State, Secretaries of the Treasury, and so on and so on, and the sons and kinsmen of Senators have been employed by these officials in the service of the Government in some subordinate capacity; and even this reform Administration, a picture of purity and grace and everything that is lovely, has sent to the Senate—I can state it as a public fact—the nomination of a father and son to go to the same place to offices one under the other in one instance that I remember. I think there are one or two others, but I only speak of what I remember; and that was not an appointment to turn out any father and any son who were already in office on account of the fact that they were related and were in positions of subordination and superiority to each other, but for the future prospectively.

Now, this bill, if you agree to my amendment, will forbid anything of that kind in the future in the courts. If you do not agree to it, taking the courts out of all the other category of what is called nepotism, then in order to correct what my friend seems to suppose is an abuse—but that would depend on the case and how much would have been properly allowed to anybody else in awarding a commissioner in Texas, the son or the nephew of the judge, what he suggests may have been too large a fee—you are by an edict of Congress, supposing it to be constitutional, which I will not discuss, to say that persons now holding judicial positions with honor and without reproach, who have devoted their life-work to that special kind of information and knowledge which is valuable as the clerks of courts, are to be dismissed because in some one instance or more that can be named it has been found that the son or the nephew of a judge has been guilty of some impropriety, if he has been. It does not prove that somebody in the same place with such a judge would not have been guilty of the same impropriety if he had not been the son or the nephew of the judge.

So it seems to me to be right and fair, and I repeat that I believe such is the opinion of the committee, to leave this bill prospective and to bear whatever evil there may be, if there be any, in the existing order of things rather than to do a gross injustice to a number of people who without reproach and to the universal acceptation of the bar and the community discharge these functions, though they happen to be within this degree of relationship to the judge.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator if the principle of the bill is right why ought it not to apply to existing cases just as well as to the future?

Mr. EDMUNDS. For the same reason that applies to all legislation. We pass acts correcting maladministration of the Treasury Department; we do not pass edicts providing for what has already happened and has been done; we make the bill therefore perfectly prospective, which is the true theory of legislation, of law as distinguished from the mere force of will of a person or a body or a governor that has the power, or at any rate claims to exercise it, of passing an edict declaring that A B, who holds office, shall not hold it any longer.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I should like to know from the Senator from Vermont why the Judiciary Committee reported as an amendment to the original bill the proposition to take away this right from the judges unless it was because of the abuse that exists. Is not that the cause of it?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; I think the Committee on the Judiciary were misled by the potent and just force in general of the wishes of the Senator from Texas, who is a member of it. He mentioned this case of abuse, and without taking much time for reflection and consideration as to how it would operate upon innocent men, we agreed to do that thing. Upon reflection we find that it would do great injustice, do more harm than good, and therefore we have thought it better to leave the matter to be entirely prospective.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a very plausible answer to the query, but unfortunately the printed record does not sustain it. I find that Senator HOAR, of Massachusetts, introduced this bill, and in the original draught the provision exists which is now being criticised.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me? This bill passed the Senate last year, the bill to raise the salaries. In the Senate, and against my resistance, the clause which was attached to the bill as I reported it this year was annexed. I resisted it, not as thinking the clause wrong in principle, but because it related to another subject, and I did not think it belonged properly or fairly upon this bill; but the Senate were of a different opinion. Then in introducing the bill at this session I introduced it in deference to the opinion of a majority of the Senate as it passed last year. Then it was only prospective in its operation. So the judgment of the Senate is in accordance with the present judgment of the honorable Senator from Vermont, as expressed last year.

In the Judiciary Committee, however, this retrospective clause was added for the reason which the honorable Senator from Vermont states. There have come to the knowledge of the committee and of Senators outside of the committee several instances of persons who are not now receiving any emolument the amount of which is measured by the discretion or decree of the judge at all. It depends on a fixed law. One of them, at least, whose case has been brought to my knowledge, which is that of the clerk of the Court of Claims in this city, was appointed by a court of which his brother-in-law was one of the four or five members. I have forgotten the number of members of the court; the Senator will know.

Mr. COCKRELL. Five.

Mr. HOAR. He was appointed absolutely on his merits. I have no doubt he would have been appointed if his brother-in-law had not been there. He is a man who is a very accomplished person and knows more about the history of the claims against the Government and the whole practice of that court probably than anybody else in the country, unless you except one or two of the judges, and he is a man who has a difficulty with his voice and tongue, so that he can not easily devote himself to the ordinary practice of the law.

Now I think my friend from Missouri and my friend from Texas will agree that, while even in the matter of selecting a clerk to do purely clerical duty for a salary and nothing else, never to have any function committed to him which is to be compensated by a scale determined by the court, it is not wise as a future permanent policy to allow the question of selection between him and other competitors or applicants for the office to be determined by a near relative or to be determined by a tribunal of which a near relative is one; yet when that has been done under the permission of the existing law, and the act has taken effect, the man has given his life to a faithful and honest service profitable to the public and the country in an office to which he was so appointed, it is very hard indeed for Congress now to swoop down and by a retroactive act turn that man out of his office.

We had a case in Massachusetts which probably nearly all the New England Senators will recognize. The very model and beau ideal of all clerks of courts was Mr. Clark Wilde, of Suffolk County, in Massachusetts. He was appointed when his father, who was a model and venerable judge on our supreme bench more than thirty years, was a member of the court; but he was appointed as absolutely on his merits as any man was ever appointed to an office in this world. He would have been appointed if his father had not been there, as the fittest man the court could find. Perhaps it would have been better to have had an ordinary general rule which would have prohibited the appointment of even so good a man as Mr. Wilde on that occasion, but it certainly would have been a reproach if after he had been in his seat fifteen or twenty years the Massachusetts Legislature should have turned him out of office because his father happened to be one of the judges of the court that appointed him.

Mr. COCKRELL. How long would he be satisfied to hold one office in Massachusetts?

Mr. HOAR. I think everybody agrees in Massachusetts and everywhere else that where an able lawyer leaves his practice and becomes clerk of a court he should be kept there as long as he performs his duties faithfully.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to vindicate my good friend from Texas [Mr. COKE] from the charge of overawing and overriding the will of the Committee on the Judiciary, with the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] at its head. It seems that this provision has crept into this bill by reason of the exertions of the Senator from Texas, one of the newest members of that committee. I will read for the edification of my good friend from Massachusetts the bill just as he presented it at this session, and I understand that he presented it just as it passed the Senate at the last session:

SEC. 2. That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall be appointed to or employed in any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member; and no person heretofore so appointed or employed shall continue in said office or employment after the expiration of six months from the passage of this act.

Mr. HOAR. I did not, I think.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the bill shows that exactly, unless the committee has made a false report to the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Why, Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. The words in Italics are the amendments. I have not read them.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri is right, I believe.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly I am.

Mr. HOAR. The bill as I originally introduced it went further than my memory supposed, but still the substance of my statement is correct.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then the Senator from Texas did not overawe the committee.

Mr. HOAR. The second section was put in in the Senate last winter against my remonstrance, and the bill was introduced at this session as it passed the Senate last year. That is the fact.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was sure of that, because there could be no mistake about it. It shows on its face.

I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will not be agreed to. The evil exists. The Senator says that it is necessary to cut down any opportunity for the growth of that evil in the future. Now let us eradicate what exists, and then it will be exactly right.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. President, I concur heartily in the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, for I doubt the policy of ever legislating any office-holder out of office. I think that when an officer goes in under a law and discharges his duty he should never be legislated out of office. It is true there are some clerks perhaps who are not discharging their duties with exceeding propriety and who are favored by relatives presiding over the courts; but we should not because of a few cases of incompetent officers of that kind legislate good men out of office, for it can not be denied that there are competent clerks faithfully discharging their duties who have been appointed by relatives. Now let us make the law prospective and not retrospective, as it was originally reported. I concur in the amendment, and think it is the wisest policy and the best course to pursue.

Mr. COKE. If there is anything retrospective in this amendment, I can not see it. Has the officer any vested right in his office? He is subject to be removed at any time by the judge; he holds the office at the will and pleasure of the judge. Has he an estate in it which is being divested if the bill as reported be passed? It seems to me that he has not. It is not a proper case for the application of the principle respecting retrospective laws.

Now, sir, if it is proper to adopt an amendment at all upon this subject, it is because of abuses which in the past, in the absence of a law forbidding them, have obtained; it is because the forbidden privilege has been abused by the district judges. If this be true, and if it is proposed to make a prospective law on this subject, why not go further and remove existing abuses?

This bill as reported to the Senate passed the Senate at the last session with this amendment upon it. It was offered by myself in open session of the Senate. It has been approved by the Senate, but since that time personal importunities and personal entreaties and personal influences, creditable to the kindness of heart of the Senators who have been operated upon, but in my judgment not in accord with the public interest, have been brought to bear to raise an opposition to this amendment now that did not exist then. An abuse of any sort can not be attacked without being beset by this same character of influence if they have time enough to rally. Here is an admitted abuse, one that the Senate deems sufficient cause to enact a law against to prevent in the future. The cause of the enactment of that law is the existence of an abuse which the Senate can remedy. I can see no reason for failing to remove the existing cause that would not apply equally well to the prospective law.

Mr. President, I admit that hardships may follow, but personal interests ought to give way to public good. I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be voted down.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Texas that whenever a public body undertakes to attack an abuse, if there is time enough allowed, the people who are interested in that abuse will do everything they can to prevent that attack being successful. I also agree to what I presume he would agree to, that whenever the Congress of the United States proposes to do an injustice, and an injury to the public service combined with it, the people who are the victims of that injustice have a right to complain and to be heard. They are the people for whom I am speaking and of whom I am speaking.

I beg to remind my friend from Texas, which I think ought to satisfy the matter he has in view, that if my amendment be agreed to all that will be left of the powers of these people who are left in office, which they have taken under a law that allowed it, will be the powers that the law imputes to them, and that if there be a clerk in a court whose father or uncle is judge, that father or uncle as judge can not designate that clerk either to be a master for any special occasion, or a commissioner for any special occasion, or a receiver or any other thing except what the law imputes to him. The judge can do no new act which confers any new power or authority upon his relative. So it really leaves these innocent people, the most of whom are perfectly innocent and desired by the whole bodies of the bar, to perform simply the functions of their proper office. I remember the Pennsylvania bar sent a representation to me about a gentleman there, and the whole body of the bar on all sides say that it would not only be an injustice to this gentleman, but it would be a great injury to the public service to legislate him out of his office of clerk of that court, and yet that kinsman of his, if the bill passes with my amendment, can not have imputed to him by his uncle any new powers or other powers than those that the law now fixes and regulates. That ought to satisfy my friend from Texas and attain the object that he has in view referring to the case he has stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRYE in the chair). The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. COKE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (after having voted in the negative). I voted under a misapprehension. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BECK. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is necessarily absent.

Mr. CAMDEN (after having voted in the negative). I voted under a misapprehension. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. My colleague [Mr. VEST] was called away from the Senate Chamber by important business a few minutes ago. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. My colleague would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL], and as I do not know how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired generally with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. Not knowing how he would vote, I decline to vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from South Carolina may vote. We have paired the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. GEORGE. I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE] on party questions. I have not regarded this as a party question; but so many have recognized pairs on it that I suppose it is better for me to withdraw my vote. I want to place it on record, though, that I am against the amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Allison,	Evarts,	Jackson,	Plumb,
Bowen,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sabin,
Chace,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Gray,	Miller of N. Y.	Spooner,
Cullom,	Hampton,	Morrill,	Teller,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—14.

Berry,	Coke,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Colquitt,	Morgan,	Walthall.
Brown,	Harris,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Maxey,	Van Wyck,

ABSENT—34.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Kenna,	Ransom,
Beck,	George,	Logan,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Saulsbury,
Butler,	Hale,	Manderson,	Sewell,

Cameron,	Jones of Arkansas,	Palmer,	Vest.
Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,
Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Pugh,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I move to add to the bill the following additional section:

SEC. —. That the actual traveling and other expenses of judges of the circuit court while holding court or traveling to and from court shall be paid to them. That no judge who has become disabled from performing the duties of the office from the habit of using intoxicating liquors, or from any other cause, shall have a right to the additional pay provided for in this act; and that on reasonable evidence of such fact being furnished the Attorney-General of the United States he shall bring a proceeding by quo warranto before some judge of the circuit court to try and decide whether such judge has forfeited his right to such office by failing to perform the conditions-subsequent on which he received the same; and if the said court shall decide on such proceeding that such judge is so disabled, the President shall retire him on the salary now provided by law, unless the said judge shall be removed by impeachment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. In section 1, line 4, I move to strike out "five" and insert "four;" so as to read:

That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States shall hereafter be at the rate of $4,000 per annum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit some remarks upon that feature of the bill. I have not heard of any great public clamor or outcry among the people of this country for the increase of the salaries of district judges of the United States. I am sure that in my State such a proposition would meet with public condemnation, and I could not vote what I esteem to be and what I am satisfied is the will of the people of Alabama if I were to vote to give this great increase from $3,500 to $5,000 in the salaries of the district judges who are in Alabama and in that vicinity.

This proposed increase of salary seems to be suggested by the idea that the men who are on the district bench of the United States, being competent lawyers, are entitled to more compensation than they are getting for their services. The proposition to increase the allowance from $3,500 to $5,000 comes only from the bar. I do not remember to have seen any petition, to have heard any suggestion, from the great body of the tax-paying people of this country to the effect that the district judges of the United States are being very badly underpaid, and so I shall treat this question as one that comes from the bar.

It does credit to the bar of the United States that they should desire to see their brethren in the profession amply paid for their services. I believe that I have as much of the esprit de corps as perhaps any other lawyer. At the same time I have some regard for the people who have to pay the money for these salaries; and looking back over the history of our country and finding that the salary was very much lower in many instances in the beginning of the Government than it is now, and that it has been increased from time to time until it has got to be generally $3,500, I do not remember a single case—perhaps there are some; it has escaped my attention, however—where a district judge of the United States has resigned his office in consequence of the parsimony of the salary.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I will state that the district judge in New York, a model of judicial ability, Judge Choate, a distinguished lawyer of a distinguished race of lawyers, was appointed to the bench three or four years ago to the general satisfaction of all persons, with the understanding that the salary would probably be raised very soon, and for the failure of the bill to raise his salary he resigned. That gentleman was the judge of a court which, if there should be a war between this country and any European power, would represent the jurisprudence of the United States in prize causes, and in the matter of the law of nations would have property to the amount of hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, of dollars before him for adjudication. He left the bench, because of the inadequacy of the salary, within two years, I think—within three years, at any rate—of his appointment.

Mr. MORGAN. We have had one name suggested. Can any other Senator name another? The argument then on that side stands on the ground that Mr. Choate——

Mr. HOAR. I am not prepared to affirm that Judge Lowell, of the Boston court, one of the most eminent jurists in this country, who resigned his seat three or four years ago, did it for that cause.

Mr. PLATT. He left the circuit court.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; he left the circuit court, not the district court.

Mr. MORGAN. He left a five-thousand-dollar salary.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; he left the circuit court.

Mr. MORGAN. Judge Dillon did that, and went into the railroad business.

Mr. HOAR. Several circuit judges have resigned on account of the inadequacy of the salary.

Mr. MORGAN. Judge Dillon did that.

Mr. TELLER. Judge McCrary did it.

Mr. MORGAN. Judge McCrary first resigned from the War Department to get on the bench, and then he resigned from the bench to get into better employment. It seems that the indorsement which the Senate gives to a lawyer by putting him on the circuit bench of the United States is a great recommendation to his clients, and the judges are not wanting in temptations to leave the bench, I am sorry to say, even leaving a five-thousand-dollar salary, with some other emoluments which are given to them, I believe, in certain cases.

Now, we have one district judge in the United States, who has been named, a gentleman who went upon the bench with the expectation that he would get $5,000 salary, but being disappointed in that he concluded that he would not stay there. Then we have fifty-six judges—I believe that is the number—on the bench in the United States, and we have had a great retinue of them since the Government was ordained, and I repeat the remark, that I have not been informed of any case where a judge has resigned because of the smallness of the salary which has been given to him except the one mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. PLATT. I think Judge William D. Shipman, of the district of Connecticut, resigned on that account.

Mr. MORGAN. If one resigned in the district of Connecticut, that makes two. Looking at the evil that we are trying to remedy, and adapting our legislation to a supposed evil, we find that there are two judges out of perhaps two hundred and fifty who have held this office and drawn this salary, who have resigned.

Is there a public necessity, I inquire again, for raising the salary from $3,500 to $5,000 in order to keep good talent on the bench or in order to keep men of integrity on the bench? I think I have not known a case where there was less excuse or less reason, so far as the public sentiment and the public service are concerned, for increasing the stipend of officers than this one.

I know that the style of living among men is more extravagant than it was perhaps when the law was first enacted, but at the same time the cost of living is not everywhere more expensive. But I do not understand that it is the business of the Congress of the United States to put this judicial office up as a prize and temptation for easy living and for money making. It is a very high, and distinguished, and dignified office, and there is no judge of a district court in the United States presiding in a circuit court who has not after all frequently very much more important duties to perform than the judge in Massachusetts cited by the Senator from that State, who in case of war would have a large number of prize causes to determine and a vast amount of property to dispose of. Every one of these district judges when sitting in a circuit court at some time or other has to dispose of the question of human life, and a proper decision on a trial for a capital offense in a circuit court of the United States by a competent man is, after all, a very much higher reach of judicial power and a very much more important thing to attend to than the distribution of money in prize causes. So I think the argument on that side is not at all enhanced in value by the fact that in case we should have a war there might be one district in the United States, or several indeed, where the prize causes would bring very important questions and very large amounts of money before the courts for adjudication.

It must be remembered that these officers hold their places for life. It is an important thing, particularly with our laws in regard to the retirement of judges after they become superannuated, that a man should have a stipend secured to him for life, of which there is to be no abatement during his continuance in office, whether upon the bench or after he has been put into retirement. A salary of $3,500 for life is worth far more to a man and his family as a stated income, a secured income, than the salary of $5,000 which is paid to Senators who hold their offices for the term of six years, and it is a very much more important matter than the allowance to the Cabinet officers of the country. It is a very much more secure living than is given to any other class of persons in the United States, unless it may be Army officers.

When we come to consider the distinction between Army officers and judges of the courts, there is a matter of importance to which I desire to call the attention of the Senate which I think should affect our votes upon this question. A judge is placed upon the bench, confirmed by the Senate, and it is found afterward that he is a man in ill-health. He drags along his weary way at the expense of the docket, and of clients, and of justice; and that feature of the fundamental law which says that justice shall be administered without sale, denial, or delay is virtually abrogated by the fact that the judge is himself physically unable to perform the full measure of his duties. Yet you can not get rid of him. He stays there. He is there for life. If you fixed the salary at $3,500 when he went on the bench you can not reduce it; the Constitution prohibits you. If you raise it to $5,000 you can never reduce it; the Constitution prohibits you. When you enact this law to give him $5,000, it remains there beyond the power of Congress to revoke it. Another judge is shown to be incompetent. A fair trial before the bar and before the country proves that the man is not qualified for the place in respect of his legal attainments or perhaps in respect of his moral character. He may commit no crime against the Government, no high misdemeanor in office for which you could impeach him, and the only means ordained in the Constitution of removing that man from office by impeachment virtually falls. Another man comes in and he is corrupt; it is obvious that he is corrupt. He abuses the powers of his office, the high trust in him, and you go to the House of Representatives to get articles of impeachment voted against him. That body of three hundred and twenty-five men have so much to do, so many various cares on their minds, that they will not take up the subject; they will not vote the impeachment. It is the easiest matter in the world to defer and to delay the inauguration of an impeachment in the other House as long as the defendant chooses; and when you get it into the Senate we have scarcely time to sit here and try impeachments. The result is that the responsibility of the judiciary of this country to public sentiment, the responsibility to the law, is a dead letter on the statute-book.

How then is it with the Army officers? If an officer of the Army, who is in for life and who is paid, I will admit, a high salary, commits some breach of military law or is guilty of some outrage against public justice, he is tried by a court-martial of his peers in the Army, and we find frequently that these men are brought to task in those tribunals and they are broken of their offices.

There are two classes of persons in the United States who hold office for life, the Army, which the Constitution and Rules and Articles of War provide shall have a speedy method of getting rid of bad material, and the judiciary, who when they are once fastened upon the country are fastened upon it for good and all.

I think in view of these facts we ought to be chary about increasing the stipend of the judges, and I think particularly when we do come to increase their salaries by as much as $1,500 to each judge per annum we should say to them and to the country, "This act is not to take effect in your favor until you are willing to bring your claim before the Senate of the United States for an investigation into your conduct; and if the President of the United States shall appoint you and the Senate shall confirm you to this office, after a full investigation into your judicial career, then well done, good and faithful servant, we will give you your reward; we will give you the $1,500 a year in addition." As we are moving in a new direction and as we are taking a tremendous step to the front in favor of all the judges in the United States, when we are giving to some judges $1,500 a year additional salary who do not do throughout the year thirty days' work upon the bench, it is well enough for us to say in behalf of the people of this country that those judges shall receive it who are willing to take it at the expense of the resignation of their commissions, trusting to the reputation which they have earned and the confidence which they have gained while they have been employed in their high offices for an appointment by the President and a confirmation by the Senate.

If I were making this argument for the first time during the Presidency of a Democrat in the White House, perhaps I might be suspected of a desire to draw within the appointing power the judges in the United States; but this same question came up under Mr. Arthur's administration, when I supposed, as the world supposed, that the chances were about even as to whether there would be a Democratic or a Republican administration hereafter, and I wanted to give this power to a Republican President in order that the Senate of the United States might have some chance, when conferring benefits and favors in a large degree upon the judges, to say whether they were worthy of them in the estimation of the country.

Now, when we reflect that after this proposed law goes on the statute-book it is to stay there and that we can not afterward reduce the salary, when it is to be a law that will be irrevocable as long as this country continues, for that will be the effect of it, an irrepealable law, I say that we ought to take advantage of this opportunity to have a re-examination into the character and the conduct of the judges who are on the district bench of the United States, and we should say to them, "You shall not take this increase of pay unless you resign and are reappointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

I argue the two propositions together, although the one is not presented in the amendment that I am at present offering to the Senate, for the reason that they stand united in principle, and it is not right that we should give this additional salary to the judges without giving to the people some opportunity to have the bench purged of bad and inefficient material. Can every Senator on this floor rise and say in his place that the judge who presides in the district court of his district or of his State is a man who is worthy and well qualified? I could not.

Without the slightest reference to the political phase that has been injected into the district court of the United States and all the other courts by the fact of the long dominance of the Republican party in this country, it has turned out in practice that during the period of agitation after the war as well as during the war some men have found places upon the bench of the United States who are not worthy. They are men who I believe would not be willing to resign their offices for the purpose or with the expectation of being reappointed by the President and reconfirmed by the Senate. If they are men of that kind let them remain under a salary of $3,500. If they are not, if they have earned a larger sum, in the estimation of the Senate of the United States, by a worthy course in office and they resign, whether they are Democrats or whether they are Republicans, they will find every man in the Senate voting for their confirmation and glad to do it.

Mr. President, the people of Alabama have their part of the taxation to pay for the judge in my district. We are not exempt from taxation because we are poor. Under the burden of tariff regulations and laws, being large consumers and manufacturing but little, we pay large amounts of money into the Treasury of the United States out of that three hundred millions of cotton crop that we produce annually besides other things which we produce there. So we are tax-payers and we are very much interested in it. It makes no difference to the Alabama farmer or planter whether he has to pay the money out of his pocket to the tax-gatherer of the State or whether he pays it through a tariff into the Treasury. It is the question of the amount, whether he is able to bear it or not, that affects him. And our people understand perfectly well that they are tax-payers, and that when you raise the salary of the district judge in Alabama from $3,500 to $5,000 a year they have to pay their aliquot part of this taxation.

Now, sir, let me give you a little of the history of that State with a view to justify the vote that I feel compelled to give on this floor upon this bill. After the war and reconstruction had terminated and the people of that State for the first time got their government into their own hands, they adopted a constitution in which they fixed low salaries for all their officers, the judiciary, the executive officers, all the officers. The expenses of the State government of Alabama, exclusive of the school fund to which we appropriate liberally, do not exceed a million and a quarter of dollars a year, and that pays the interest on every dollar of money that we owe. A million and a quarter a year! Yet our people feel in that State that the burden of that taxation is pretty heavy. They would be very glad indeed to see it lightened, in view of the fact that their industries are not all very profitable, not certainly very money-making. They fixed the salary of the chief-justice of the supreme court of the State at $3,500; they fixed the salary of the associate justices at $3,000; they fixed the salary of the circuit judges and of the chancellors at $2,000; and there is not a man on the circuit or chancery bench or supreme court bench of Alabama to-day who is not a superior lawyer to the district judge of the United States in that State, who gets $3,500—not one.

Now is it to be expected of me that I shall vote to tax those people to raise that man's salary from $3,500 a year to $5,000 when my own State in her earnest desire to build up her prosperity—more than that, sir, to write her glory upon the escutcheon which as yet has never had a tarnish—is it expected of me that I shall under these circumstances vote to give to the district judge of the United States $5,000 a year out of the pockets of those people as a salary when her constitution forbids that her governor and her chief-justice of the supreme court shall have more than $3,500 unless it is voted by a two-thirds majority of both branches of the General Assembly?

I am willing to meet the Senators on a fair standard. As there are some cases in the United States where doubtless the salary ought to be increased, I am willing to go $500 on the present salary all around, make it $4,000; and then you have got, as I remember, but two judges in the United States who get any more. A judge in California gets $5,000, and I believe that one of the judges in New York gets $4,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. One in Louisiana gets $4,500.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, and one in California gets $5,000; but the highest salary now paid a New York district United States judge is $4,500, and so as to the other judges in the large cities; but an allowance is made by statute for judges who preside in certain cities.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; who go out of their districts.

Mr. MORGAN. We can very easily provide for those cases. If we can provide for judges who go out of their districts so as to meet the contingencies which were not expected when those gentlemen were placed upon the bench, we can very easily add to their salaries such a daily stipend as we may vote when they are presiding in court in such cities as New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Saint Louis, Chicago, Cincinnati, and so on—expensive places. But is there any reason why we should go among the judges who have very little to do, who have no admiralty jurisdiction, but exercise almost a nominal discharge of duty upon the bench—is there any reason why we should go among them and give them all $5,000 a year? I am willing to equalize them all up to $4,000 a year, and that is as far as I am willing to go, and I should very much prefer that in doing that the Senate would also adopt the proposition, which I expect to offer next, that this shall have a prospective operation.

Sir, we have introduced a prospective feature into this bill, and the Senate came very near voting it into a retrospective feature. If we make the bill prospective as to those officers who may be hereafter appointed by their kinspeople, why not make it prospective also in regard to the judges who shall have the benefit of this law? It is no discredit to a judge to say to him, "You can not get this salary while you hold the office that you took when it was paid only $3,500." It is no discredit to a judge to say to him, "If you want to get the increased compensation you must resign and take the chances of a reappointment and a reconfirmation." It might be unpleasant to him if we should pass a law of this kind and he should refuse to resign, but that would be his own matter.

Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi who sits on my left [Mr. GEORGE], when a bill just like this, when this bill in fact, was before the Senate in 1884, with his accustomed industry and carefulness, brought up the history of these appropriations, I think from the foundation of the Government, and spread it upon the record of the Senate. I desire to have the Secretary read what the Senator from Mississippi said on that occasion in order that it may go into the RECORD again to refresh the minds of Senators upon this question. I could add nothing to it by comments upon it, and I certainly can not improve it by trying to state any additional facts.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Alabama says that he does not object to a motion to adjourn in order that he may conclude his remarks at the next sitting of the Senate. Therefore, if agreeable, I make the motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I hope we may finish this bill. I understood the Senator from Alabama that when the extract was read he would have finished his speech.

Mr. MORGAN. Very nearly.

Mr. HOAR. I made the same request of him, intending to make a motion to adjourn if he desired.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Alabama has an amendment to offer, and I confess I should like to see that amendment. I have not as yet seen it.

Mr. HOAR. I am afraid that what the Senator from South Carolina desires to see is not the amendment, but his dinner. [Laughter.] I recognize the force of the suggestion.

Mr. BUTLER. I admit very frankly that I am very anxious to see my dinner, and at the same time very anxious to see the amendment. I do not know which has the preponderance, but it is now after 5 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. With the leave of the Senator I will consent to an adjournment. Indeed, I make the motion myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 14, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ESTIMATES FOR COLLECTING THE REVENUE, 1887.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates for collecting the revenue for the year 1887; also a statement of expenses and of collections in the several customs districts for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER also, under the rule, laid before the House Senate bills; which were severally read twice, and referred as follows, namely:

A bill (S. 671) making an appropriation for the purchase of the late Produce Exchange building and the site, bounded by Whitehall, Pearl, Moore, and Water streets, New York city, for army purposes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 16) for the relief of J. A. Wilson, administrator of the estate of Gregory Jarrett, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

PEOPLE'S NATIONAL BANK, LAWRENCEBURG, IND.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill No. 128, to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank, of Lawrenceburg, Ind., and put it upon its passage now, instead of referring it to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

This bill is manifestly a proper one and should be passed promptly. It comes from the Ways and Means Committee and the members of that committee regard it as a proper one to pass. It has been greatly delayed and should be acted upon promptly. At the last session of Congress it passed both Houses, but at a very late hour in the session, and failed to reach the President for his signature.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. This bill was fully considered by the Committee on Ways and Means and was passed by them at the last session. There is no question but that the bill ought to pass without delay.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Indiana for unanimous consent to consider the bill now, instead of referring it to the Committee on Banking and Currency. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

It is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue and cause to be issued to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind., a duplicate certificate of deposit numbered E 35988, for the sum of $10,000, issued by the assistant treasurer of the United States at Cincinnati to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind., upon such evidence of loss, and upon execution of such bonds of indemnity to the United States, and under such regulations in regard to issue and payment as he shall prescribe.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. BOYLE to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the matter of the claim of S. Dillinger & Son without leaving copies.

THE FISHERIES.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to present a privileged report from the Select Committee on Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests. I am directed by the committee to report back the resolution which was lately referred to them and recommend its passage.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Select Committee on Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests be and hereby is directed to inquire what, if any, legislation will promote the interests of the American marine employed in the fisheries, and report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. DINGLEY. The committee recommend the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. REAGAN. While I shall raise no objection at this time, I am unable to understand what connection the Committee on Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests have with the subject of this resolution.

The SPEAKER. This is a resolution which has been already referred to that committee, and is by them reported back to the House.

Mr. REAGAN. The reference was not a proper one in the first instance.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is subject, of course, to amendment, and the House may direct any other committee of the House to consider the subject-matter embodied in it.

Mr. REAGAN. I am not disposed to offer an amendment; but, as I have said, I do not think it was a proper reference in the first instance. I am opposed to this reference of matters to committees not properly having jurisdiction. There are committees of the House which have power to consider such subjects, and to them all such subjects should be referred.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution reported by the gentleman from Maine.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate, No. 602, to legalize the election of the Territorial Legislative Assembly of Wyoming.

It also announced the passage of bills and a joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested, namely:

A bill (S. 85) for the relief of B. Jennings;

A bill (S. 87) for the relief of Thomas B. Miller, of Washington Territory;

A bill (S. 163) releasing the estate of the late Frank Soulé, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of the State of California, and his sureties on his official bond;

A bill (S. 178) for the relief of Ida A. Richardson, Caroline A. Urquhart, and Cora A. Slocomb as heirs at law of Cora A. Slocomb, deceased, Ida A. Richardson, and Caroline Augusta Urquhart;

A bill (S. 193) for the relief of John Hollins McBlair;

A bill (S. 214) for the relief of Oscar Eastmond and James W. Atwill;

A bill (S. 216) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certificates of discharge to certain members of the Missouri Home Guard;

A bill (S. 218) to confirm the title to certain lands in Platt County, Missouri, and authorize patents to issue therefor to Kinsey B. Cecil;

A bill (S. 221) for the relief of Alex. Smiley;

A bill (S. 296) for the relief of the legal representative of John Hatfield, deceased;

A bill (S. 377) granting a pension to Mathias Leckner;

A bill (S 389) for the relief of the heirs and legal representative of Robert J. Baugness, deceased;

A bill (S. 424) giving a military record to Alex. Francesco, deceased;

A bill (S. 506) for the relief of Emerson Etheridge and William B. Stokes;

A bill (S. 556) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co.;

A bill (S. 767) for the relief of John Leathers; and Joint resolution (S. R. 19) directing copies of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina to be furnished to said State.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. WELLBORN, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That all committees having jurisdiction of general appropriation bills be authorized to have printed and bound for their use such documents as they may deem necessary in connection with subjects referred to them during the present Congress.

LUTHER F. WORDER.

Mr. HOWARD, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 82) for the relief of Luther F. Worder; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Accounts, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now proceed, under the rule, to call standing and select committees for reports.

ALEXANDER P. STEWART.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 1318 for the relief of Alexander P. Stewart, a bill (H. R. 3846) to remove the disabilities of Alexander P. Stewart, of La Fayette County, Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill (H. R. 1318) was laid upon the table.

VICTOR BEAUBOUCHER.

Mr. PHELPS, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1008) for the relief of Victor Beauboucher; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The call of the select and standing committees and of the commissions and committees authorized by statute to report to the House was continued and concluded, no further reports being presented.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now call the committees, under clause 5, Rule XXIV, for the consideration of such bills as may be indicated by them. The call will be for one hour, beginning at twenty-three minutes after 12 o'clock m.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The Committee on Ways and Means was called.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, my object being to reach the resolution for the distribution of the President's annual message.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the resolution distributing the President's annual message. The resolution will be reported.

The resolution was read.

[It has been already printed in the RECORD in the proceedings of the 12th instant.]

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the resolution be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which was referred a resolution distributing the President's message to the appropriate committees, had had the same under consideration, and had instructed him to report it back to the House with the recommendation that it be adopted.

Mr. MORRISON. The resolution has just been read in Committee of the Whole. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of it at this time be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRISON. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTEREST ON JUDGMENTS OF COURT OF CLAIMS.

The Committee on the Judiciary was called.

Mr. HAMMOND. I call up from the House Calendar for consideration the bill (H. R. 3253) to amend section 1090 of the Revised Statutes, relating to interest on judgments rendered by the Court of Claims.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1090 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1090. In cases where the judgment appealed from is in favor of the claimant, or the same is affirmed by the Supreme Court, interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. shall be allowed from the date of its presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment as aforesaid; but no interest shall be allowed subsequent to the affirmance unless presented for payment to the Secretary of the Treasury as aforesaid."

Mr. HAMMOND. I call for the reading of the report.

The report made by Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, was read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3253) relating to payment of interest in the Court of Claims, submitted the following report:

The bill under consideration is in the words of a bill unanimously reported for passage by the Judiciary Committee of the House in the Forty-seventh Congress, on the 14th of February, 1882, except that in this bill the rate of interest to be borne by final judgments against the United States was in that bill 6 per cent. and in this it is 3 per cent. That bill passed the House unanimously on the 24th of February, 1883. It was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary in the Senate, but no report was made thereon.

As some objection might now be raised to paying on judgments a higher rate of interest than that paid by the United States, your committee have put the rate at 3 per cent. only to avoid such objections.

The committee adopt the language of the report of Mr. N. J. HAMMOND, of the Committee on the Judiciary, aforementioned, as to necessity for this legislation (see Report 353, first session Forty-seventh Congress, to accompany bill H. R. 701). It is as follows:

"The act of March 3, 1863, ch. 92, sec. 7 (12 U. S. Stat., 776), provided as follows:

"'In all cases of final judgments by said court, or on appeal by the said Supreme Court, where the same shall be affirmed in favor of the claimant, the sum due thereby shall be paid out of any general appropriation made by law for the payment and satisfaction of private claims on presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury of a copy of said judgment, certified by the clerk of said Court of Claims, and signed by the chief-justice, or, in his absence, by the presiding judge of said court.

"'And in cases where the judgment appealed from is in favor of said claimant, or the same is affirmed by the said Supreme Court, interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. shall be allowed from the date of its presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment as aforesaid; but no interest shall be allowed subsequent to the affirmance, unless presented for payment to the Secretary of the Treasury as aforesaid.'

"Section 1090 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is as follows:

"'In cases where the judgment appealed from is in favor of the claimant, and the same is affirmed by the Supreme Court, interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. shall be allowed from the date of its presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment as aforesaid; but no interest shall be allowed subsequent to the affirmance, unless presented for payment to the Secretary of the Treasury as aforesaid.'

"The first sentence of the act of 1863, quoted above, provides for payment of judgments against the United States, whenever final, either in the Court of Claims (of which that statute was the basis), or, if appealed from by the United States, made final by affirmance in the Supreme Court of the United States, and makes the mode of payment simple and prompt.

"The second sentence of the act of 1863, above quoted, provided for payment of interest upon and after notice of either of those facts duly served upon the Secretary of the Treasury. In transferring the quoted law into the Revised Statutes of the United States it was made sections 1089 and 1090. But in section 1090 the 'or' after 'claimant' was changed to 'and.' This changed the law, in the letter, so that no interest can be collected on a final judgment against the United States in said court unless, if it be appealed from, it is also affirmed by the Supreme Court. At least this is the construction of the Treasury Department. Under that construction the United States may simply appeal in every case, with or without meritorious ground for appeal, put the claimant to the delay and expense of having the cause docketed and dismissed by the claimant under rule of the Supreme Court, or, worse, wait till the cause is about to be heard and withdraw the appeal, and save interest ad interim. For there is no concurrence of final judgment below and affirmance by the Supreme Court, as there is no judgment of the Supreme Court affirming the judgment below. Such a construction manifestly does violence to the intention of the law and to justice between the Government and claimants who obtain judgments against it on its contracts. After any final judgment by its own Court of Claims, and notice thereof served upon the Secretary of the Treasury, it is right for the Government to pay interest, unless it shows that judgment below to be wrong. It may be perfectly right for the disbursing officers to stick thus to the letter, for they should pay out no money without plain statutory authority.

"We suppose that the revisers did not intend to produce such an absurdity, but meant to say, 'In cases where the judgment appealed from is in favor of the claimant, and in cases where the same is affirmed by the Supreme Court, interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. shall be allowed,' &c.; that is, on the original judgment.

"And accordingly we report a bill changing section 1090 to read as it did in the act of 1863."

The bill so reported passed the House on the 17th of May, 1884, but we believe was not acted upon in the Senate.

We recommend the passage of this bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. The report explains fully the reason for this bill. Under the law as it was originally passed in 1863 final judgment against the United States bore 5 per cent. interest. It is thought proper, inasmuch as there is but 3 per cent. interest on other matters, to have this bill amended by striking out "5" and inserting "3."

I suppose it is useless to make any remarks in addition to what is contained in the report in favor of the passage of this bill. It was passed unanimously in the Forty-seventh Congress and was passed unanimously in the Forty-eighth Congress upon like reports. It failed to become a law because it was not reached in the Senate. This is simply changing the word "and" back to the word "or," and making the law in the Revised Statutes what it was by the act of 1863. In some way, for some reason, in the codification the word "or" was dropped and the word "and" substituted, and the Departments have held that before any final judgments against the United States on its own contract obtained in its own court can bear interest there must be a union of the two things—a judgment below plus an affirmance above. That certainly was not the intention of the law. Unless some gentlemen are desirous of speaking on the subject pro or con I will consume no further time.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, there was a portion of the statement just made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] which I did not distinctly hear, the portion relating to the effect of the substitution of the word "and" for the word "or" in the bill, and I will ask him to repeat it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, the effect is this: Under the law of 1863 it is provided that any final judgment, either in the Supreme Court or the Court of Claims, after certified copy thereof delivered to the Secretary of the Treasury, shall bear 5 per cent. interest.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understand that.

Mr. HAMMOND. But in codifying the law the word "or" was in some way changed to the word "and," so that it now reads: "A judgment final in the court below and affirmed in the court above;" and the Department has held that until the two things concur the creditor can get no interest, which is manifestly unjust.

Mr. Speaker, I now move the amendment reported by the committee, to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "three," so as to make the interest 3 per cent. instead of 5 per cent.; and I call the previous question upon the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMMOND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ASCERTAINMENT OF FACTS IN PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to call up the resolution reported by me from the Committee on Claims, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of passing general laws for the ascertainment of the facts in all private measures by some judicial tribunal before action by Congress; and also the propriety of prohibiting the adjudication of private claims or relief measures by Congress, with power to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that the report also be read.

The report (by Mr. SPRINGER) was read, as follows:

The Commitee on Claims, to whom was referred the following resolution, namely:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of passing general laws for the ascertainment of the facts in all private measures by some judicial tribunal before action by Congress; and also the propriety of prohibiting the adjudication of private claims or relief measures by Congress, with power to report by bill or otherwise," having had the same under consideration, report as follows:

Under the new rules adopted at this session the number of bills referred to the Committee on Claims is much greater than heretofore, and the committee find it utterly impossible, with the limited time at the disposal of the respective members, to properly consider each case referred to them upon its merits, and are also fully aware of the fact that it is equally impossible for the House to dispose of the cases should they be reported for consideration. Therefore the committee have thought it advisable to proceed first to consider some general plan for disposing of a great portion of the business now referred to them and which will, in the course of the session, be referred to them. With this object in view, the committee report the resolution back, with the recommendation that it be adopted.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be read again.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to cut the gentleman off if he wishes to make any remark upon this resolution.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to offer an amendment to the resolution. I move to strike out the word "claims" where the resolution provides that the Committee on Claims shall be instructed to inquire into this matter, and to insert the word "judiciary," so as to provide that the inquiry shall be made by the Committee on the Judiciary. Not only was this question before the Committee on the Judiciary at the last session, but it seems to me that that is the proper committee, under the rules, to consider a measure like this and to devise means by which these private claims shall be adjudicated prior to being passed upon by Congress. That is a matter clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary; and, as a number of bills have been referred to that committee having this general object in view, and as the question was before that committee in the last Congress, I hope that the amendment I have proposed will be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] moves to amend the resolution by striking out the word "claims" and inserting the word "judiciary," the effect of which will be to direct the Committee on the Judiciary to make the proposed inquiry.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I hope that motion will not prevail. I desire simply that this matter should be referred to some committee that will take it up and perfect a measure upon the subject at the earliest time practicable. I know of no committee of the House that is so likely to do that work promptly as the Committee on Claims, upon which, under the rules, now devolves the duty of considering the vast number of private claims already introduced and that will be introduced before this Congress adjourns.

In order to show the magnitude of the business coming before the House, and the necessity for prompt action on this subject, I call attention to the number of bills that have been introduced in the two Houses during the last five Congresses. In the Forty-fourth Congress there were introduced and referred in the Senate and the House together bills and joint resolutions to the number of 6,157; in the Forty-fifth Congress, 8,804; in the Forty-sixth, 10,095; in the Forty-seventh, 10,704; and in the Forty-eighth, 11,443; making in the five Congresses last past a total of 47,205 bills and joint resolutions.

During the last session of Congress there were referred to the Committee on Claims for their consideration more than a thousand bills; and under the new rules, basing our estimate upon the number already referred, there will be perhaps twelve hundred or fifteen hundred referred to that committee during this Congress. It is absolutely impossible for any committee of this House, with so large an amount of business imposed upon it, to do justice to the claimants and to the Government. In view of this the Committee on Claims desired at an early day to perfect and bring to the attention of the House some measures for the purpose of adjudicating private claims in other tribunals than Congress.

The present occupant of the chair, when as Speaker of the last House he made an address upon declaring the House adjourned sine die, used the language which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Very few, even among those who are best acquainted with our legislative history, have an adequate conception of the increased labors and responsibilities devolved upon Congress by the events of the last quarter of a century; and none, I am sure, who have not had actual experience can fully appreciate the difficulties attending the transaction of business in a body so large as this.

In the First Congress the House of Representatives consisted of only sixty-seven members—less than the present membership of the Senate. Now there are three hundred and twenty-five, besides the Delegates from the Territories. From the organization of the Government to the close of the Twenty-fifth Congress, a period of fifty years, there were introduced into the House, as shown by its records, 8,777 bills and joint resolutions; while during the two sessions of the present Congress 8,630 bills and joint resolutions have been introduced—almost as many as during that half century. At present each one of our principal general appropriation bills embraces as much money as the whole amount of the net ordinary expenditures of the Government during the first nine or ten years of its exisience; and the specific objects to be investigated and provided for in those bills have so increased in number that it has become a very considerable task even to enumerate them.

Although this House has passed a larger number of bills than any of its predecessors, except perhaps one or two which sat for a longer time, it is not at all strange, gentlemen, in view of the facts just mentioned, that it should be compelled to leave unfinished a very large percentage of the measures presented. It is evident that unless some constitutional or legislative provision can be adopted which will relieve Congress from the consideration of all, or at least a large part, of the local and private measures which now occupy the time of the committees and fill the calendars of the two Houses, the percentage of business left undisposed of at each adjournment must continue to increase from year to year. It is not reasonable to suppose that an alteration of the Constitution can be effected, but it is worthy of serious consideration whether a general law might not be enacted which would authorize the several Executive Departments and the courts of justice to hear and determine these matters under such rules and regulations as would amply protect the interests of the Government and at the same time secure to the citizen a more expeditious and appropriate remedy than is now afforded. If this shall be done, time and opportunity will be afforded here for the deliberate consideration of those great public questions which the Constitution has committed to the legislative department, and something might be done to promote the welfare of the whole people without neglecting the special interests of any.

Mr. SPRINGER. Under the rules, the Committee on Claims has now jurisdiction of all proposed legislation relating to private and domestic claims; but under the resolution which is proposed the committee would have the right to report a bill covering war claims as well as other private claims. It was for the purpose of having a uniform system on this subject that our committee desired to have jurisdiction of the whole matter. There is no disposition to take away from the Committee on the Judiciary a subject which they might also consider; and if that committee will go to work and bring in a bill for this purpose I shall be delighted when it comes before the House to assist them in securing its passage. Our purpose is not to interfere in any manner whatever with the jurisdiction of that committee, but only to insure that such a measure as this resolution contemplates shall at an early day come before this House for consideration. If the two committees should simultaneously direct their attention to this subject and the Judiciary Committee should come in first with its bill, I shall take great pleasure, as I have already intimated, in assisting the honorable chairman of that committee [Mr. TUCKER] and other gentlemen in perfecting that legislation.

I hope that instead of spending our time now in contending about questions of jurisdiction we shall go to work and perfect measures which will relieve Congress of this great and unnecessary burden of private legislation. That is my sole object; and the committee, which is threatened with a deluge of bills of this description, and every member of which would have his time consumed in a very unsatisfactory investigation of measures of this class during the whole Congress if we should enter upon such an undertaking, can certainly be relied upon to bring speedily into this House some general measure on this subject. I hope, therefore, the gentleman from Virginia will withdraw his amendment and allow this resolution to pass.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN].

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] will see the propriety of withdrawing his amendment to this resolution reported by the Committee on Claims. The object sought by the resolution is simply the preparation and formulation of legislation looking to the establishment of a judicial tribunal to which all these private claims may be transferred for judicial investigation and determination. If any committee of this House is interested in the draughting and adoption of such legislation it is certainly the Committee on Claims. The only object it has in view, I repeat, is the preparation for presentation to the House of a bill seeking this end, which bill, subsequently to its presentation, might properly be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. There is no intention on the part of the Committee on Claims to usurp the rights and powers properly lodged with the Judiciary Committee. Our only purpose is to facilitate the adoption of such legislation as will take from Congress the adjudication of private claims and transfer them to some judicial tribunal for settlement.

Mr. SPRINGER. Unless the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] desires to speak I will call the previous question; and if he does wish to submit any remarks, I will ask unanimous consent that this matter go over until to-morrow, in order that a measure of greater importance may come now before the House.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let us not "make two bites of a cherry."

The SPEAKER. To-morrow is set apart by the rules for the consideration of private bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. I merely desired that the bill in regard to the Presidential succession might come up at this time; and for that purpose I will now withdraw the report, as I have a right to do, I believe.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is now pending and under consideration before the House.

Mr. TUCKER. The jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary is over all matters relating to judicial procedure; the jurisdiction of the Committee on Claims, to legislation in reference to private claims. I suppose it never was intended, and no such construction can be given to the rules, to give to the Committee on Claims the regulation of judicial procedure. Now, sir, this matter the gentleman from Illinois says the Committee on Claims are very much interested in. Until some act passes regulating the procedure in reference to these claims the Committee on Claims ought to busy itself with the adjudication of claims that are before it. They have abandoned that duty for the purpose of maturing a bill for a plan of procedure in reference to these claims. The result will be that private claims referred to that committee will be neglected, and they will be maturing a bill which will come in and pass probably at the close of this Congress. In the mean time the private claims before that committee will be entirely neglected.

A MEMBER. As they have been.

Mr. TUCKER. I have no particular desire to claim for my committee any more than the rules require, but I do think it is just to this House it should consider this committee has charge of the judicial procedure in all the courts of the United States. But the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is that some scheme should be devised by which these private claims should be adjudicated in a judicial procedure before they shall come before Congress at all. Well, if that does not belong to the Judiciary Committee I am at loss to know what does. Therefore I insist on my amendment and hope it will be passed to substitute the word "judiciary" for the word "claims" wherever it occurs in the resolution.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will state to the gentleman from Virginia that the Bowman act in reference to the adjudication of claims was reported from the Committee on Claims in the Forty-eighth Congress when it was passed, and that at the last Congress a similar bill was considered by the Committee on Claims in this House.

Mr. TUCKER. I will say to the gentleman in reference to the Bowman bill that it has been a dead letter ever since and has been of no practical use, because a committee other than the one the House constituted for the purpose of devising judicial procedure, had the consideration of it. I thank the gentleman from Illinois for his suggestion.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will now move the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia if this matter has not been already referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. TUCKER. I stated in my remarks when first up that a number of bills have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary on this very subject, and gentlemen around me who were on the committee last year will remember we were maturing a plan at the last session of Congress to submit all these claims to adjudication before they ever came to Congress.

Mr. LANHAM. Was that materialized?

Mr. TUCKER. No, it was not; but the gentleman knows very well that here in Congress—

The best laid schemes o' mice and men
Gang aft a-gley.

Mr. SPRINGER. The same bill was referred to the Committee on Claims at the last session of Congress. It has been referred to the Committee on Claims at this session. The Committee on Claims certainly has jurisdiction over the claims which have been referred to it.

Mr. TUCKER. I think it is very desirable the House should settle this, as there are two committees attending to the same business to which the matter properly belongs. I do not think there is enough time for any one of the committees to attend to more than properly belongs to it. The House, therefore, should determine the matter whether the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Claims should regulate the procedure in reference to these judicial matters.

Mr. SPRINGER. One word in reference to the gentleman's remark. The gentleman's committee has had measures of this kind before it ever since I have been here, and he has been chairman of it for the second time——

Mr. TUCKER. The gentleman anticipates the honor for me, as I have only been chairman of it for one Congress.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will say he would have improved the committee if he had been there all the time.

Mr. TUCKER. I am much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. My object was to have this matter brought before the House as soon as possible, and when it gets here I will expect the attention and co-operation of the members of the Judiciary Committee as well as of the other members of the House in maturing and passing this most necessary legislation. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think it is proper and just to say that while the Judiciary Committee may have had the matter before it they never had until this session any real power of action.

Mr. SPRINGER. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The question first recurred on Mr. TUCKER'S amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 100, noes not counted.

Mr. SPRINGER. As it is important to get through with this matter in the hour I will waive any further count.

The resolution as amended was then adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

Mr. CALDWELL (when the Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President was called). Mr. Speaker, I now call up the bill reported from the Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President, Senate bill 471, to provide for the performance of the duties of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President.

I desire, if I can, before proceeding with the consideration of this bill, to arrange with gentlemen who may be opposed to its passage in reference to the extent of time that will be required for the discussion. I understand we go on under the rule now for one hour.

The SPEAKER. Not for a full hour, but to complete the hour this morning, a part of which has been already consumed in the call of other committees. If the matter is not disposed of at the end of the hour the committee will be entitled to one hour's further consideration on the next morning when public business is in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Not to-day?

The SPEAKER. Not to-day.

Mr. CALDWELL. I wanted to say my opinion is that this question has been already discussed, not perhaps on the floor of the House, but it has had exhaustive discussion elsewhere at the hands of the people and throughout the newspapers of the United States. In that view, I am inclined to think a lengthy discussion of it would simply be to thrash over the old straw; and I would indicate now, because I want to be perfectly candid, that I believe it to be my duty under the instructions of the committee at the proper time to call the previous question upon the passage of the bill with a view to limiting debate.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman from Tennessee indicate what he regards as a proper time?

Mr. CALDWELL. I am perfectly free to hear suggestions from other gentlemen, and shall endeavor as far as I can to conform my action to their views.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that it seems to me he is mistaken in supposing that this bill has been already much discussed. It has been discussed elsewhere, it is true, to some extent, but the bill which received discussion at the hands of the public was a bill differing very essentially from this. There is an important omission that needs to be supplied in this bill before it is enacted into law.

Mr. CALDWELL. Then I will be compelled to take such course as I think proper in reference to the discussion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Very well.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will ask the gentleman who introduced the minority report if he will be kind enough to indicate what time would satisfy him?

Mr. COOPER. I am satisfied, as far as I am concerned, with the time allowed under the rule; but I am informed by a number of gentlemen around me that they desire to discuss the bill, and I prefer that they shall have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Allow me to say to the gentleman from Tennessee that after the morning hour expires to-day there is no other business properly in order, and there may be, by consent, an arrangement made that this matter can continue during the day beyond the morning hour.

Mr. CALDWELL. If that can be done, and that is what I had in mind, I will interpose no objection, and I think it likely that between now and the hour the House will feel like adjourning ample time will be afforded for the discussion. If that will be satisfactory to gentlemen, I will make that request.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not wish to be understood as suggesting that that should be the limit to the discussion. I only suggest to the gentleman that he allow the debate to go on to-day, and probably on Saturday, when the question comes up, we can arrange some limit to the discussion. For myself, I have no desire to indulge in any opposition to the passage of the bill, if the House desires its passage, after a suitable discussion.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me ask, Mr. Speaker, if, after the morning hour is disposed of to-day, it would not be in order to ask unanimous consent to consider this bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that if the consideration of the bill is not concluded before the expiration of the hour to-day it will go over and be called up in the next morning hour when public business is in order, when it will be in order for consideration for one hour. If not then completed it will become unfinished business, and may be taken up for consideration at any time, if no other business having precedence of it shall be in the way.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it not be in order now to place it on the Calendar as unfinished business and ask the House to proceed with its consideration?

Mr. CALDWELL. I prefer another course. I desire to say that if the debate shall go on by unanimous consent this evening I will endeavor to act with reasonable fairness and extend the time as far as I think it is necessary to do so; but I do not wish to be understood as promising not to call the previous question whenever in my judgment it is proper to call it.

A MEMBER. Not to-day?

Mr. CALDWELL. To-day or any other day when I may see proper.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentlemen of course has the right to do so, and there can be no objection to his exercising the right.

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Speaker, let me make a parliamentary inquiry. If the course suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee be adopted, and the debate go on this evening by consent, and the bill is not disposed of, would we still have an hour on the next day when this committee is called?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the suggestion in regard to unanimous consent is made upon the supposition that this bill will be considered to-day as if it was still in the morning hour; and it would be therefore entitled to this privilege of an hour on the next day when the committee is called for such business. Does the gentleman from Tennessee now ask unanimous consent to proceed in that manner?

Mr. CALDWELL. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that the consideration of the bill shall go on to-day as if it were being considered in the morning hour. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CALDWELL. Since the death of the Vice-President many efforts have been notably directed toward the solution of the difficulties presented in the succession to the Presidential office, and to the honor of both parties be it said that the scurvy politician has notably kept aloof from this field. The reason doubtless is that it is above his habitat, and that it is in a rarer and purer air than he can breathe, being above the snow-line, where patriotism, and not partisanism, alone can dwell.

The many measures, joint resolutions, contemplating constitutional amendments referred to the Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President have not been disregarded or disallowed. All are eminently worthy of consideration, and all, I think I may say, have been dictated by an honest and non-partisan desire to solve the problem.

The fathers of the Constitution thought that they had made adequate provision in the Constitution of 1787, as well as in the act following it, in the act of 1792. They may have done so, but whether they have or not is the subject of grave doubts, and a doubt as to the succession to a high office, whether of king, president, or of subordinate, is a serious matter. At one age of the world such a doubt distracted states, divided allegiance, and overthrew the peace of governments. I have an abiding faith in the patriotism and conservatism of the American people, trained as they are by a hundred years of self-government, that they would prove themselves equal to any test that could be imposed. But the province of the lawmaker is to refrain from subjecting any system of government or any grade of intelligence or patriotism to unnecessary tests, and to provide as far as may be for the peaceable and orderly succession in office.

I want to assure all who have given their efforts to the solution of this problem that the committee have not dealt with them or their proposed measures with indifference or disrespect. There may have been measures proposed that will better meet all possible or imaginable exigencies than the one now before the House. But they all, or nearly all, require constitutional amendments before they can possibly become law; and the passing of a constitutional amendment involves delay which ill-accords with the reasonable anxiety that is felt by the great body of the people of both political parties. Their expectation being a reasonable one that we would bridge the present difficulty, it is our duty to satisfy it.

There are many imaginable exigencies that this measure does not remedy, but the present exigency it completely answers. As has been suggested in the views of the minority, there is no provision in this law for a vacancy in the Presidential office after election by the people but before inauguration. It does not fill the gap where a President may be elected and a vacancy occurs before he has taken upon himself the duties and functions of his office. There is no provision for that; but that is not a present case to be provided for.

This bill does not provide for another contingency, which, to my mind, it ought to provide for. It is this, that after the inauguration of the President and Vice-President the bill before us designates the Cabinet officer who shall succeed in the event of failure, and who shall have not only been nominated, but shall have been confirmed by the Senate; and the vacancy may occur before the confirmation of the Cabinet officers whom the bill puts in the line of succession. That is another gap, but it is not now before us.

The case before us is where, the Vice-President having died, the President of the Senate of the United States, under the law as it exists, is in the line of succession. The effect of the passage of this bill will be that in case of the death or removal or resignation or inability of the President now in the White House the office shall devolve on the Secretary of State, and, failing him, on the different Cabinet officers in the order named in the bill, and that that succession shall be for the unexpired residue of his term. There will be no reversal of the popular will recently declared by ballot, no jar to social or political order, and no shock to the business of the country. This is the temporary bridge thrown across a possible chasm to meet the popular demand and to be followed in due time by a substantial and enduring structure over which a long line of Republican and Democratic Presidents may march in unbroken succession. All measures looking toward the solution of every imaginable difficulty will be duly considered, and some law it is confidently hoped may be evolved from the concurrent effort of both parties to put forever at rest all questions vexing the succession.

I will state also that nearly every solitary contingency set forth in the views of the minority not only had consideration in committee, but, if I am warranted in saying what occurred in another body, they had full and due consideration there; and the reason that amendments were not offered was simply because in every solitary instance that my mind has been called to it would have involved the delay incident to passing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States—and how long that might be no man can reasonably calculate—involving the action of the several State Legislatures, the delay consequent upon which is familiar to the gentlemen hearing me and by them as easy calculable.

For instance, I have stated one or two of the contingencies. But this minority report says this bill suggests a constitutional question of importance. Stated broadly it is this: Can Congress pass a constitutional law under any circumstances for the appointment of a President to serve during a full term? If it can not, I would like to ask gentlemen who are in the habit of construing laws what the word "declaring" means as it is used in the section of the Constitution quoted. That section provides that in the case of a failure in both the Presidential and the Vice-Presidential offices Congress shall declare what officer of the Government shall act as President, and so on. I take it that there is found full constitutional warrant for what is proposed by this bill. It is hardly a possible case that an officer so "declared" could ever hold the office for a full term. He might hold for part of a term, or he might hold for almost an entire term, I admit; but that the power is vested in Congress to designate an officer of the Government to act in such a case does seem to me very clear. I think that power is fully given by the use of the word "declare" in the section of the Constitution quoted.

But it is said that it is presumptuous now, after the lapse of ninety-odd years, to challenge the provisions of the act of 1792, which provided for a special election. In my opinion, the reason the act of 1792 has never so far caused trouble is, that there has never been any occasion for its practical application. That any man can look at the Constitution and say that the word "officer," as there used, does not mean an officer of the United States Government, I really can not understand; and that there are grave doubts in some of the best legal minds of both parties in this country as to whether either the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House is such an officer, in the constitutional meaning of the word, as could succeed to the Presidential or Vice-Presidential office, is a fact that can not be questioned. In the report which the majority of the committee have made there is no dogmatism, no assertion of infallibility with reference to what the law is or is not. We state the fact, though, and I think it is incontrovertible that, however the question may be ultimately determined, there is grave doubt in the minds of the statesmen of both parties in all sections of the country as to the succession provided for in the present law.

Now, that being the case, I submit to the House whether prudence, conservatism, and abundant caution do not dictate that we should pursue the course recommended by the Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President?

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. PERKINS. I wish to ask the gentleman this question. Under existing conditions, if the President of the United States should die or be removed, who, under this bill, would succeed to the office?

Mr. CALDWELL. Under existing conditions?

Mr. PERKINS. Yes.

Mr. CALDWELL. The Secretary of State.

Mr. PERKINS. Then if in 1888 the result of the election of last year should be reversed and the electoral college should meet and should designate the President and Vice-President elect, as provided for by law, and, before their inauguration, those two officers of the Government should die or should be assassinated, who, under this bill, would be President of the United States for four years thereafter?

Mr. CALDWELL. The present Secretary of State.

Mr. PERKINS. And then if in 1892 the same should occur again, who would be President for the ensuing four years?

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman's questions are based on the assumption that in 1888 the gap would not have been filled by other and better legislation.

Mr. PERKINS. One more question, if the gentleman will permit. Do you believe that it is good legislation to give to any officer power to perpetuate himself indefinitely in the Chief Executive office of this Government?

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not, and I do not understand that this bill admits of any such construction; because if you read it you will find that at the time of such contingency arising it is provided that the Congress of the United States shall assemble, and if the Congress of the United States in session has the power to provide for special elections, as was thought in 1792 and is still thought by a great many gentlemen, they can exercise that power then. They are there for the purpose of meeting every possible exigency. You can go on and imagine contingencies until your brain reels, but the point is that this bill does not take you into an unexplored territory. We simply take you by the hand and carry you up to the side of the ditch that is across the field now.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. CALDWELL. I can not yield further.

Mr. PERKINS. If the subject is one of such importance and urgency, why not yield now?

Mr. CALDWELL. I must decline to yield further at present. The gentleman will undoubtedly have an opportunity to be heard hereafter. I simply wish to say that what specially recommends this bill to me now is the fact that it deals with the present emergency. No member of the committee is bound, because we have reported this measure, to say or to believe that it is perfect; but I do say that, so far as meeting the present emergency is concerned, this bill does it fully, and I say further that the only way to meet the objections that can be raised and that have been raised by the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. PERKINS] is to amend the Constitution. In my opinion it can not be done by Congressional legislation. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the balance of my time, and yield the floor to any gentleman who desires to take it.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, wholly inexperienced as I am in this House, it is with the greatest hesitation that I undertake to state very briefly, as a minority of the committee, the reasons why I have been unable to agree with the residue of the committee in recommending the passage of this bill. I am somewhat relieved from embarrassment in submitting these objections by the admission in the very carefully prepared speech of the gentleman who has charge of this bill [Mr. CALDWELL] that the measure is manifestly in very many parts defective; these defects he proposes to cure after a while. In other words, we are now asked to pass a very important measure which, as he has publicly announced, he will commence repairing as soon as the work is over.

Allow me to say in behalf of the existing law that it is almost coeval with the Constitution. The Constitution and this enactment were to a very large extent the work of eminent men who were members both of the constitutional convention and of the Congress immediately succeeding the establishment of our present Government. So that this enactment comes to us along with the Constitution, sanctioned by public acquiescence during almost the entire period of our national existence; and as a further indorsement of the present law I may state that thirty years ago (and we are often reminded that "there were giants in those days") the Committee on the Judiciary in the Senate, in response to a resolution introduced by Senator Crittenden, carefully examined the existing law, and after a thorough investigation made an exhaustive report upon it, the conclusion of which I will read very briefly in their own language:

It is apparent from these suggestions that the committee believes the act of 1792 to be constitutional in all respects.

That committee embraced among its members some of the foremost lawyers of the Republic, including, if I remember correctly, such eminent jurists as Senator Butler, of South Carolina, who made the report; Senator Crittenden of Kentucky, Senator Benjamin of Louisiana, and other men whose names stand and have a right to stand in the highest professional rank.

It has been suggested that there are doubts as to the constitutionality of the existing law. I grant you there was a time when it was questioned whether one of the features of this law was constitutional. The question was raised by Mr. Madison whether the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House were "officers" of the Government. But if Mr. Madison had doubts, they were so shadowy that he himself thrust them aside and assented to the law. If I am right in my resollection he was himself a member of the committee of conference upon the differences between the Senate and the House from which committee emanated the present law.

Yet I am not so much attached to the existing law that I would not favor any amendment which would reasonably promise manifest improvement, but I regret to say that I can not find such promise in the pending bill. In the first place, I am opposed to the general idea of this bill. I am opposed to vesting in the person who may occupy the Presidential chair the power to perpetuate in the naming of one of his Secretaries the succession of his party. Such a provision, to my mind, savors somewhat at least of those ancient days when dying kings had the power by their last will and testament to name the man who should rule over the people when the testator should be in his grave; and although there may be some reasons why a Cabinet officer would properly fill this position, there are, on the other hand, grave and potent reasons why he should never be permitted to do so. In support of this view, I call attention to the very high authority to which I have already referred, the report of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. Speaking upon this subject, the authors of this report, after recognizing some considerations seeming to favor the filling of vacancies by a member of the Cabinet, add this language:

There are other circumstances, however, which would make the Cabinet officers unfit to occupy the place of President. In case of his impeachment for high political offenses the Cabinet might be implicated as participes criminis, and ought not to be in position of allies. To allow any of the Cabinet to become President, therefore, might be to arm them with powers of great mischief.

I call attention to a further suggestion which this eminent committee make through their eminent chairman:

Another question also might arise—whether they could be regarded as officers after the official functions of their principal had terminated or were suspended. It might become the duty of the substitute of the President to have new advisers by removing obnoxious ones from their offending position.

In other words, we who are now asked to destroy the existing law because there are doubts as to its constitutionality, are invited to do so by supplying its place with an enactment the constitutionality of which has been already questioned thirty years ago by this very high authority. But I might and could forego my objection to the appointment of a Cabinet officer to fill this position if this were to be that which our fathers beyond all question contemplated it should be, a mere temporary arrangement. But if this be the object, there are in this bill defects which I think should be corrected. As has been admitted here, this committee is doubtful whether the provisions of the bill apply to a possible vacancy occurring by the death or disability of the President and Vice-President elect before inauguration. I know it has been claimed—I believe our fathers so understood, and perhaps the weight of authority is in that direction—that the words "President and Vice-President" apply as well to the President and Vice-President elect as after they have been inaugurated into these offices. But there is at least high authority for doubting this. It was held by the supreme court of one of the States that a man, though elected to an office, is not an officer until he has been installed; that he can not before entering upon his duties resign the office (although he has been elected) because he is not yet an officer. And Judge Story, in his work on the Constitution, expresses grave doubt as to whether the old law, which originally stood in the same phrase as the pending bill, would apply to a President and Vice-President elect. And Mr. Curtis, in his History of the Constitution, has given it as his unqualified opinion that the words apply to the President and Vice-President in office and do not apply to the President and Vice-President elect.

These doubts may not be well grounded; but I submit whether it is wise for us to pass an enactment which shall be clouded with doubt. All the great commentators upon our system agree that the weak spot in our frame of government, that from which is to be anticipated the great peril of the Republic, is in our Presidential succession, which we, who are now repairing or bolstering the law on the subject, propose to strengthen by an enactment which is clouded with doubt as to its constitutional character. Is this wise?

But if there be no reasonable doubt that the provisions of this bill would apply as well to a President and Vice-President elect as to a President and Vice-President who have been inaugurated, then I suggest most serious objections which have occurred to me. First, I am profoundly doubtful of the constitutionality of a provision which would vest, as this bill, in one contingency, would vest, the Presidency for a full term of four years in an officer appointed by an outgoing administration. Sir, I believe this to be in violation not only of the letter and spirit of the Constitution, but of the spirit out of which the Constitution arose. The letter of the Constitution is that the President shall be "elected;" not that a man who may hold office under the President shall act as President, but that the President shall be elected; and it goes on to provide how he shall be elected.

It was wise in the fathers to provide that the incumbent of this high office for any length of time should ever know and ever be reminded that he owed his position to the people; that he was under obligation to the people for it, and responsible to the people for the proper discharge of his duties; and any legislation which tends to widen the space between the President and the people is, I submit, unwise legislation. And this bill, which provides for the holding of the office of President for a full Presidential term by a man who had not been elected and may only be a member of an administration which may have been defeated, repudiated, and dead, is in express violation of the Constitution, and this was the opinion of the Senate Judiciary Committee of 1856.

Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of this bill it is conceded, should President-elect Cleveland and Vice-President-elect Hendricks have become, by death or otherwise, disabled for the discharge of the duties of their offices, the Secretary of the outgoing Republican administration would have been President for four years following March 3, 1885.

Mr. GOFF. Let me ask the gentleman from Ohio a question, whether under the provisions of this bill, if they had been inaugurated and had died previous to the appointment of the Cabinet—would not under those circumstances the old Secretary of State be President to-day?

Mr. COOPER. I so understand it, although I confess in this respect and in many others this bill is to me blind and doubtful. Therefore it should be corrected in many particulars which I will suggest; for instance, in the contingency suggested by the gentleman from West Virginia, and in the contingency suggested and admitted by the distinguished gentleman having charge of this bill, that in case of the demise of the outgoing President before the inauguration of the President and Vice-President elect, even if they should be ready to qualify at the time, still in case of the death of the then incumbent the then Secretary of State would by this bill become President of this Republic for four years to come—not, as is alleged in favor of this bill, to perpetuate the party and policy indorsed by the people, but perhaps probably in direct antagonism to the party and the policy which the people have indorsed.

I submit there might be cases in which the continuance of a policy which had been by the people rebuked would be so intolerable, so odious as to be provocative of revolution itself. I inquire if it is wise for us under these circumstances now to pass an enactment which may test to the utmost our system in its weakest spot?

The remedy for this is the remedy provided by the fathers in such cases, to remit to the people the right and power to select the person to fill the vacancy created by the death or disability of those whom they have already selected. The people, so far as I have heard, have never complained of being permitted to select their own rulers. On the contrary, we have been in the habit everywhere of hearing and understanding that that privilege is one of the dearest guaranteed to us by our system, and one of the most precious jewels of our Constitution.

But it is alleged there is doubt as to the constitutional power of Congress to provide for an intervening election. Allow me to say, Mr. Speaker, that doubt is a new discovery. There was no such doubt in the minds of the fathers. It is worthy of note that during the exhaustive and somewhat acrimonious debate leading to the passage of the law of 1792 there is no record that any one suggested or even intimated there was any doubt as to the constitutionality of this feature of the existing law.

Allow me to call the attention of the House to a significant circumstance, which it seems to me ought to settle the question as to the constitutional power of Congress to provide for an intervening election. It is a fact, as appears in Elliott's Debates and as appears in the Madison Papers, that the clause of the Constitution which provides for the filling of vacancies in the offices of President and Vice-President was reported by Governor Randolph, and when reported it was in the following language:

> And said officers shall act accordingly until the time of electing a President shall arrive.

What followed? No other than James Madison himself rose in his place and moved an amendment as follows: to erase the words "until the time of electing a President shall arrive" and substitute therefor the words "until said disability be removed or a President shall be elected." That there might be no doubt as to what the purpose of this substitution was, Mr. Madison, at the time he made this motion, remarked in the convention that the phraseology of Governor Randolph would prevent a supply of the vacancy by an immediate election, and he moved the amendment for the purpose of vesting in Congress the power to provide for an intermediate election.

That motion was seconded by Gouverneur Morris, of New Jersey, and was adopted by that convention. And yet we must believe, under the doctrine proclaimed here, that these eminent statesmen and jurists who undertook the express work of investing Congress with the power of providing for just such an emergency as this bill contemplates did not know what they were doing, and that after the work was done they did not understand its effect, although they did what they undertook to do. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that all doubts as to the power of Congress to provide for an intermediate election to fill such a vacancy are too shadowy to have any weight with this House.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit a question?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIBBLE. Under Article II, section 1, of the Constitution it is provided, as the gentleman knows, that the President shall hold his office during a term of four years. The gentleman from Ohio doubtless will recollect that in his own State, in the celebrated case of the State of Ohio against Salmon P. Chase, the governor (that eminent lawyer and jurist who was afterward Chief-Justice of the United States), it was determined in the case of such a constitutional provision fixing the term of office of a public officer that when he was elected by the usual mode, although in case of a vacancy, he would hold for the full term. Does the gentleman mean to say that when a President of the United States is elected by a special election to fill a vacancy that he will hold for the full term of four years in obedience to this mandate of the Constitution? This is the doctrine expounded in the State of Ohio against Chase, which has been followed in other leading cases in this country, and as far as I am aware there is no decision to the contrary elsewhere.

Mr. COOPER. I so understand it. I understand that in every case of an election of President he will hold for the full term.

Mr. DIBBLE. Whether he be elected at a special election or not?

Mr. COOPER. No matter how he is elected. There is no provision for a less term than four years in the Constitution.

But, Mr. Speaker, if there is any doubt as to the power of Congress to provide for an intermediate election, it seems to me that is removed by the broad, sweeping provision of paragraph 18 of section 8 of Article I of the Constitution, which I will not stop here to read.

But, sir, there are other objections to the bill. It fails to point out or make provision whether the Secretary of State, who is the acting President, shall be President or Secretary of State, or what shall be his title or rank, or what his compensation. Shall he perform the duties of both offices? Shall he be known as the President of the United States or the Secretary of State?

Shall he receive as his compensation the $50,000 salary of the President, or shall he receive the compensation fixed by law to the Secretary of State? Shall he have the right, or shall the people have the right, to say that he is to have the benefit of the advice or counsel of another Secretary of State, or is he to fill that position himself to the exclusion of others, occupying at the same time the position of President?

If he has the right to a new Secretary of State, will not the new Secretary of State be able to cloud the title of the acting President by saying, "Sir, you are not President; you were only acting as President because you were Secretary of State. You are no longer the Secretary of State; I am the Secretary of State; therefore you step down and out, as I propose to act as President." All of this, I say, sir, tends to cloud the title of the incumbent under this law; and while we are here for the purpose of removing doubts and removing clouds and straightening, so far as we can, this weak spot in our system, is it wise to pass an enactment like this in its present defective shape?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Is it not true that under the present system an election is to be held to fill such a vacancy?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then the objection you make applies as well to the present law as to the proposed bill?

Mr. COOPER. No, sir; not to the present law. It applies to the proposed bill. I will show the gentleman the difference in a moment.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I understood the gentleman to say, in response to the question of a gentleman upon the other side, that there could not be an election for a less period than four years?

Mr. COOPER. Well.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Under the present law when a vacancy occurs must we not have a special election?

Mr. COOPER. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then the objection you make to the pending bill would apply to the present law.

Mr. COOPER. Not at all. That provides for an intermediate election. But I suggest an amendment to the pending bill for restoring the provision of the pending law to meet the defect.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. But I understood the gentleman to admit the point that under the present system the Presidential office is elective for a period of four years, whether it be a special or a general election. Now, why do you antagonize this present bill when the same objection applies to the law under which we are operating?

Mr. COOPER. I do not understand the present law is in accordance with what I understand to be the position of the gentleman from Iowa. I understand that under the present law, an election being held, the President elected would hold the office for the whole term.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit another question?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I understand the gentleman to raise the question in respect to this bill as to whether the Secretary of State, if discharging the duties of President, would be both President and Secretary of State. Does the gentleman see any similar difficulty under the present law in a case where the President pro tempore of the Senate or the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be called on to discharge the duties of President? Is there not the same ground of objection and will not the same difficulties arise under the present system? Are there no difficulties under the present system?

Mr. COOPER. It is sufficient response to that to say if there be defects in the present law correct them; but do not correct them by an enactment which is more odious in those particulars than the present law.

Mr. PERKINS. And only temporary in character under the existing law.

Mr. COOPER. Yes; and only temporary in their character. I for one am willing to support any change in the present law which shall benefit and improve the existing state of affairs.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me a question?

Mr. COOPER. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Suppose the Secretary of the Treasury should succeed to the office of President and then appoint a Secretary of State, assuming that a vacancy existed, who would be President under this bill? Would the Secretary of State, appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, acting as President, after confirmation by the Senate, become President, or would the Secretary of the Treasury, acting as President, hold the office for the unexpired term and after the Secretary of State qualified?

Mr. COOPER. That is a conundrum which I give up. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAKER. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me, I will say to the gentleman from New York that he will find a sufficient answer to that question by reading the second section of the bill.

Mr. COOPER. I do not desire to weary the House longer with my views on the pending bill. That it is defective is, it seems to me, manifest; nay, indeed it is conceded. And I suggest that if the present law is defective and requires amendment for its improvement, let us make those amendments and let us take time to do so. That which it is worth while for the American Congress to do is worth doing well. There is no exigency I know of now existing which requires this red-hot haste in passing this enactment.

The statement that there is but one life between the Presidency and the vacancy to be filled under the present law is only the statement that we are now in the same condition of affairs that we have been in six times before in the history of our country—precisely the same condition as to this particular that the country was in under the administration of President Jackson after the resignation of Vice-President Calhoun; precisely in the same condition as the country was in for nearly four years under the administration of President Tyler; as it was for years under the administration of President Pierce after the death of Vice-President King; as it was during the years of the administration of Johnson; as it was during the administration of President Grant after the death of Vice-President Wilson, and as it was during the years of the administration which terminated last year.

There is no special exigency now existing. I believe, and I thank God I have reason to believe, there are before President Cleveland many long years of life, and I pray they may be happy ones. I do not think the passage of this bill will improve his chances of life. We are now all of us uniting in prayer for his long life. I would be glad to believe if this bill becomes a law there would be no diminution, no discontinuance of that prayer on the part of any one.

Before I resume my seat I desire to explain the amendments which I propose to offer.

I propose, after line 4 of section 1, to insert the words "or whenever the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States become vacant." Those who have the bill before them will see the amendment provides for the contingency I have named of a vacancy occurring by the death or disability of the President and the Vice-President elect. In other words, it provides for a vacancy occurring in any manner. This provision is copied from the existing law, and I think that amendment should prevail.

I shall also move to strike out from section 3 the enumeration of sections of the Revised Statutes following section 146, so as to permit section 146 to be repealed, but not to repeal the sections enumerated in the residue of the section. In other words, I would still permit to remain that portion of the present law which provides for immediate election. Then I shall desire to correct it so as to provide that in case of the death of both the President-elect and the Vice President-elect, or in case of their death after inauguration and before the appointment of Cabinet officers, the statute providing for election shall be fully operative, but otherwise it shall be of no force or effect.

These amendments I shall offer at the proper time. I am not so familiar with the rules of the House as to know precisely when it is the proper time to move them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HAMMOND). The gentleman can offer his amendments now.

Mr. COOPER. Then I move to amend the bill in the particulars I have named. I will put the amendments in form and send them to the desk hereafter.

I reserve for the present the balance of the time I am entitled to.

Mr. EDEN. The gentleman who has taken his seat [Mr. COOPER], in presenting the views of the minority of the committee, has made a point which it would probably be very difficult to meet by an act of Congress. The gentleman referred to the difficulty which would occur in the succession to the Presidency in case the President and Vice-President elect should both die before being inducted into office. This bill leaves that question where the Constitution leaves it, and where, according to the opinion of Judge Story, from whom the gentleman quoted, the present statute leaves it. I think, however, that the twelfth amendment to the Constitution obviates the objection made, that the Vice-President would not succeed to the Presidency in case of the death of the President-elect before his inauguration.

Mr. Speaker, the duty of Congress is imperative to provide by law a remedy for the defects in existing laws relating to the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President. The Senate bill now under consideration by this House is intended to remedy those defects. It is admitted on all hands that the present laws upon that subject do not furnish a full and complete remedy in every case where those duties may necessarily devolve upon some person other than the President or Vice-President.

Upon the adjournment of Congress on the 4th of March every second year a period of nine months intervenes when there can be no Speaker of the House unless there should be a called session of Congress. At the same time there may be a vacancy in the office of the President of the Senate. In case the Vice-President should fail to vacate the chair it has been held that the Senate can not elect a President pro tempore. Upon two occasions in the recent history of the country the contingency has occurred of an interval from the 4th of March until the first Monday of the next December when the Senate had no President and the House had no Speaker.

Upon one of these occasions, when we had neither President of the Senate nor Speaker of the House, the President was assassinated. Upon the other of these occasions the Vice-President died. Upon the death of President Garfield, had the Vice-President upon whom the office of President devolved died before the meeting of Congress the law did not designate any other officer to act as President. Upon the death of Vice-President Hendricks the country was in a similar situation until the meeting of the present Congress, there being no officer designated by law to act in case of the death of the President.

If upon either of the occasions referred to both the President and Vice-President had died, there was no constitutional mode by which the powers and duties of President could have been performed prior to the meeting of Congress.

Congress has no power in the premises except to provide by law for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected. The President is a necessary part of the legislative power under the Constitution. Without a President to co-operate with Congress in the making of laws the legislative as well as the executive authority of the Government would become paralyzed. Hence, if we should unfortunately lose, by death or otherwise, both the President and Vice-President when the Senate is without a President and this House without a Speaker, the whole machinery of Government would stand still until a President or some officer authorized to discharge the powers and duties of said office could be selected under the Constitution and laws, unless the power should be applied by an unauthorized hand.

We are apt to console ourselves with the cheerful assurance that our people are sufficiently intelligent and patriotic to meet and overcome a difficulty even so grave as the one I have supposed. In such an emergency, from necessity some irregular mode would probably be adopted, under which the Government would go on until the executive power could be lodged in lawful hands; but it is the part of wisdom to provide by law against any probable contingency involving so much danger.

There are other objections, having great weight, to the present law devolving the powers and duties of the office of President upon the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House in case of the death both of the President and Vice-President. A question has been raised as to whether either the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House is an officer of the United States. It seems that Mr. Madison and others who took a prominent part in the formation of the Federal Constitution were of the opinion that the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House were not officers of the United States, and upon that and other grounds they opposed their selection to the Presidential succession when the bill which passed and became a law in 1792 was being discussed in the House of Representatives. I do not propose to discuss that question.

If it be doubtful whether the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House are officers who may be lawfully designated to fill a possible vacancy in the Presidency, we ought to confer the power upon others whose qualifications are unquestioned. The law should leave no room for controversy as to the constitutional qualifications of the officer selected by law upon whom the powers and duties of the office of President shall devolve in case of a vacancy to be filled in that way.

The bill under consideration provides that the members of the Cabinet, beginning with the Secretary of State, and in case of vacancy or disability, going through the entire list, shall, in the order named, succeed to the powers and duties of the office of President, in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President of the United States. This line of succession secures, beyond all question, officers within the meaning of the Constitution upon whom, when the contingency arises, the duties of the office of President may lawfully devolve. No dispute or question can possibly arise as to the right of one of the Cabinet officers, under the circumstances named, to act as President.

The public mind, now disturbed on account of recent events, under the apprehension that the question of the Presidential succession will remain in doubt and uncertainty until the country may be overtaken by a still greater calamity, will be composed and set at rest by the passage of this bill. Every reasonable precaution has been taken to provide by this bill for a lawful execution of the powers and duties of the office of President under all emergencies likely to arise.

I know an objection has been made that too much power is to be given to the President—that he can, in a certain contingency, name his successor. This objection is subject to the qualification that the person named by the President, who may become his successor, must be confirmed by the Senate. The members of this House may make the further objection that this bill leaves the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to select the person who may become President. The answer to this is that this fault, if it be one, is the fault of the Constitution.

In making a law providing for the Presidential succession we can only select an officer. I presume it will be conceded that the officer to be selected must be an officer of the United States. I suppose we can not find an officer of the proper standing and qualifications to discharge the duties of the Presidency who does not owe his official position to the appointment of the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It was the manifest purpose of the framers of the Constitution that the officer to be designated by law to fill a possible vacancy in the Presidency should owe his appointment to the President. The same Constitution that provides for the selection of an officer to fill a possible vacancy in the Presidency authorizes the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint all officers of a grade from which Congress would be likely to make the selection.

But let us inquire further and see what force there is in this objection. There is a contingency in case no person voted for as President receives a majority of all the votes cast where the House alone, without the concurrence of the Senate, voting by States, elects a President from the three candidates receiving the highest number of votes. In the same contingency, in case the House fails to elect a President by the 4th of March, and no person received a majority of all the votes cast for Vice-President, the Senate from the two highest on the list chooses a Vice-President and he becomes President. So it will be seen that under the Constitution, in one state of case, the House elects a President without the concurrence of the Senate, and in another state of case the Senate elects a Vice-President without the concurrence of the House who becomes President; and in both cases the choice may be made without reference to the vote of the people.

But the present law relative to the Presidential succession is even more objectionable upon the point under consideration than the bill before us. The Senate elects the President pro tempore without any agency whatever on the part of the President or the House, and he is first in the succession. Under the bill before us all the persons in the succession have the indorsement of both the President and the Senate. If the vacancy provided for in the present law relative to the succession occurs when there is no President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, who was elected by the House without the agency of the Senate or the President, becomes the acting President. So that the objection to the mode of the selection of the officers upon whom the succession to the Presidency is devolved under this bill applies with equal or greater force to the mode of selection under existing law.

That part of the bill most distasteful to me and liable to receive the severest criticism remains to be considered. I refer to the repeal of those sections of the Revised Statutes which provide for the election of a President and Vice-President in case of vacancy in the office of both. I believe the people ought to be consulted whenever practicable on a matter so important as the selection of President and Vice-President. The people are the safe depositaries of power in a republic. I have already referred to several instances when under the provisions of the Constitution the people have no voice in the election of the two highest offices in the Government.

When the President is elected by the House, or upon the failure of the House to elect under given circumstances the Senate elects a Vice-President, who succeeds to the office of President. The President so chosen holds the office the full term of four years. In case of the succession of a Cabinet officer to the Presidency under the provisions of this bill he holds the office for the residue of the term, be the time long or short. There is no greater departure from the principles of republican government in the one case than the other. In 1792, when the Constitution was being put in force by appropriate legislation, the laws were passed providing for a special election of President and Vice-President, which this bill proposes to repeal. It may be asked why repeal these laws now after they have been in force nearly one hundred years and no injury has resulted from their operation. The answer is that no occasion has arisen to put these laws in force, and their value and efficiency have not been tested by actual experience.

It seems to be conceded that if a President and Vice-President were elected at a special election they would hold, not for the unexpired term, but for a full term of four years. This would be a source of great inconvenience and confusion, by causing the Presidential term to commence at a time different from the one now fixed, to which the terms of members of Congress and other public officers have been adjusted. The circumstances attending the removal of the President and Vice-President from office, or the causes inducing or producing the death or resignation of one or both, might be such as to make it desirable that the public mind should have a season of repose before being aroused to action by the exciting incidents of a Presidential election.

Recent discussion has made manifest a wide difference of opinion among statesmen whose views upon the question are entitled to consideration as to whether Congress has the power to provide by law for an election for President and Vice-President at a time prior to the expiration of the term of four years for which these officers were elected. The strongest argument in favor of the power is the fact that directly after the adoption of the Constitution an attempt was made, participated in by a number of the men who assisted in making the Constitution, to execute the power, by the passage of the sections of the Revised Statutes proposed to be repealed by the Senate bill. The contention in Congress pending the passage of the law of 1792 was over the selection of the officer to exercise the powers and duties of the office of President in the given case, and the then bitter political controversy between the friends of Mr. Jefferson and the friends of Mr. Hamilton prevented harmonious action upon the subject. Conflicting views had to be compromised before any law could be passed, and the result was the adoption of the present law, making the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, in the order named, successors to the Presidency in case of the disability both of the President and the Vice-President. There does not appear to have been any serious controversy about other provisions of the bill.

Referring to the text of the Constitution, and looking to that alone, it would be difficult to find a grant of power to Congress to provide for the election of President and Vice-President in any case. The Constitution declares the mode of election of President and Vice-President. "Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress." No power whatever is here given to Congress. It all devolves on the States. Next, provision is made that "Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes, which day shall be the same throughout the United States." This grant of power is specific, and so limited as to be incapable of enlargement by construction. A preceding clause of the Constitution provides that the President "shall hold his office for four years," &c. The twelfth amendment to the Constitution prescribes the powers and duties of the electors in voting for President and Vice-President, and the mode of electing the President and Vice-President in case no one receives a majority of all the votes cast. No legislative power is granted to Congress by that amendment to the Constitution.

A President and Vice-President, under the provisions of the Constitution, are elected without the intervention of Congress, except to fix the time of choosing the electors and the day on which they shall give their votes. The term for which they hold their offices are prescribed by the Constitution, and Congress is powerless to change the same. Under these circumstances it became necessary to provide for filling vacancies that may occur at any time. As long as there is a living Vice-President he is heir apparent to the Presidency, and in case of a vacancy will be inducted into office without the aid of Congress. No provision is made when the office devolves on the Vice-President for a special election to fill the unexpired term. The Vice-President fills out the term without question, though the Constitution is silent upon the subject of his term of service.

At this point the Constitution grants power to Congress upon the question of the Presidential succession. "And Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President." How may Congress provide for the case of removals, &c.? By calling a special election to supply the unexpired term? No; but by "declaring what officer shall then act as President." Can you construe this clause of the Constitution to mean more than it says? Is it necessary that anything shall be implied to enable Congress to execute the plain and unambiguous power of designating what officer shall then act as President? It is true "Congress may by law provide for the case of removal," &c., but we are plainly told just how far we can go, and we must stop there. We may designate what officer shall act as President, and there the power is exhausted.

The question then arises, How long shall this officer act as President? He shall act until "the disability be removed or a President shall be elected." When is a President to be elected and how is that election to be provided for? This clause gives Congress no power to provide for an election. The Constitution provides for an election once in four years. Say one year of that time has expired when the Presidency is devolved on an officer designated by law to act as President, when a vacancy occurs by removal, &c. At the end of three years the period will have passed when under the Constitution another election is to be held, and when a President is again elected under the provisions of the Constitution the functions of the acting President will cease. The difficulty of calling a special election for President, &c., upon his being removed from office lies in the fact that the Constitution makes no provision for such election and does not expressly confer any power upon Congress to order an election; and a sure and certain mode is provided by the Constitution to fill such vacancy without any election.

But suppose this is merely a doubtful question. Is it safe to resort to the expedient of an election and risk a controversy between the acting President and the President-elect when there is no question but without an election the acting President could lawfully fill out the unexpired term?

I do not claim that this bill is perfect. But I do claim that it provides a safe and sure remedy for the glaring defects of the present law relative to the Presidential succession, and that its passage will meet the approval of the people irrespective of party, and relieve the public mind of a great anxiety on account of the danger of anarchy in case of a misfortune that we all hope may not occur, but against which it would be prudent to provide.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I rise at this moment, Mr. Speaker, not to debate the bill under consideration but to advise the House of a substitute which I shall offer at the proper time. My substitute preserves the law of 1792 with a single addition to section 146, which I ask to have read from the Clerk's desk, and I ask that the entire substitute be printed in the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, In case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President of the United States, the President of the Senate, or, if there is none, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the time being, shall act as President until the disability is removed or a President elected. And for the purpose of having a Speaker of the House of Representatives in office continuously, the Congress shall convene at 12 o'clock m. on the 4th day of March next succeeding the election of Representatives in Congress; and whenever a vacancy exists either in the office of the President pro tempore of the Senate or Speaker of the House, the President shall convene the House in which the vacancy exists for the purpose of electing a presiding officer.

SEC. 2. Whenever the offices of President and Vice-President both become vacant, the Secretary of State shall forthwith cause a notification thereof to be made to the executive of every State, and shall also cause the same to be published in at least one of the newspapers printed in each State.

SEC. 3. The notification shall specify that electors of a President and Vice-President of the United States shall be appointed or chosen in the several States, as follows:

First. If there shall be the space of two months yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing, such notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding such first Wednesday in December.

Second. If there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and such first Wednesday in December, and if the term for which the President and Vice-President last in office were elected will not expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing, the notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December in the year next ensuing. But if there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing, and if the term for which the President and Vice-President last in office were elected will expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing, the notification shall not specify that electors are to be appointed or chosen.

SEC. 4. Electors appointed or chosen upon the notification prescribed by the preceding section shall meet and give their votes upon the first Wednesday of December specified in the notification.

SEC. 5. The provisions of this title, relating to the quadrennial election of President and Vice-President, shall apply with respect to any election to fill vacancies in the offices of President and Vice-President, held upon a notification given when both offices become vacant.

SEC. 6. The only evidence of a refusal to accept, or of a resignation of the office of President or Vice-President, shall be an instrument in writing, declaring the same, and subscribed by the person refusing to accept or resign, as the case may be, and delivered into the office of the Secretary of State.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I shall further move to strike out all of the bill after the enacting clause and substitute what has just been read.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. EDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. PETERS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. EDEN. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to reserve the balance of my hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks the gentleman is too late, another speech having intervened.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is unconstitutional, inexpedient, and impolitic. But for the want of these requisites it might be a very good bill. [Laughter.] It assumes that Congress has the power to declare what officer shall act as President duringthe remainder of a Presidential term in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability of both President and Vice-President. To use the language of James Madison, "It prevents the supply of a vacancy by an intermediate election of the President." It does this by repealing the section of the law of 1792 providing for a special election. In its letter the bill complies with the Constitution. It designates certain officers, and declares, almost in the very language of the Constitution, that they under certain circumstances "shall act as President until the disability of the President or Vice-President is removed or a President elected."

This would all be very well if the bill ended with this section, but it repeals the law providing for a special election by the people, and in this respect at least it is unconstitutional. The law of 1792 was based on clause 5 of article 2 of the Constitution. It does not appear to be a difficult task to arrive at the meaning of the framers of the Constitution from the words used.

The declaratory part of the clause only delegates power to Congress to declare what officer shall act as President. It does not confer power to elect a President. It further limits the power by declaring that "such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected." There is an entire absence of power to declare that an officer shall act as President during the remainder of the term. The obvious intent was to provide for a temporary vacancy, an unfortunate contingency that might occur, so that the machinery of the Government might be kept in motion until the people, the source of power, the masters of Congress, the masters of the President and Vice-President, the masters of us all, could elect a successor.

In addition to the language used we are not without very positive proof as to the intention upon this subject of the framers of the Constitution.

The meager minutes of the proceedings of the convention and the Madison Papers show that this very subject of providing for a succession during the remainder of the term was fully and fairly presented and as fully negatived. Mr. Randolph proposed to do just what is proposed by this bill under consideration. He moved in the convention to amend the report of the committee on detail by inserting—now mark the language—

The Legislature may declare by law what officer of the United States shall act as President, in case of the death, resignation, or disability of the President and Vice-President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the time for electing a President shall arrive.

This was the plain proposition to delegate power to Congress to fill the office during the remainder of the term. Mr. Madison objected, basing his objection upon the ground that the language used by Mr. Randolph in his proposed amendment "would prevent a supply of the vacancy by an intermediate election of the President." Can there be any doubt as to his meaning? Mr. Madison then moved as a substitute the closing words, as we find them in the fifth clause of article 2, to wit:

Until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.

Now notice carefully the difference between the proposition of Mr. Randolph and that of Mr. Madison. The proposition of Mr. Randolph provided for permanently filling the office during the remainder of the term. If a disability of the President and Vice-President took place, his proposition was to fill the place, not until the disability was removed, but for the remainder of the Presidential term, "until the time for the election of a President shall arrive." The disability might be only temporary; but even in such a case Congress should have power to declare what officer should act as President for the remainder of the term, and should the disability afterward be removed, the once-disabled President, even though relieved from the disability, could not resume the duties of his office.

Let me quote again the proposition of Mr. Randolph:

The Legislature may declare by law what officer of the United States shall act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the time of electing a President shall arrive.

The power to be granted was not to fill the office temporarily but permanently during the remainder of the time. The substitute of Mr. Madison introduced the idea of filling the office temporarily "until the disability be removed," providing in plain terms that if the disability of the President or Vice-President be removed he could resume the office, and in case the disability should not be removed, then until "a President shall be elected," and not until the time for the election of President shall arrive. It was, in its substance, distinctly antagonistic to the proposition of Mr. Randolph; and hence Mr. Madison offered it, not as an amendment, but as a substitute for that proposition. This substitute was adopted, and became a part of the Constitution submitted to the States; submitted in the light given by the motion of Randolph and the objection and substitute of Madison. The people, therefore, when they delegated power to Congress to make a certain declaration, did so with the fact plainly presented by the record and proceedings of the convention that this declaration was to be only temporary in its effect and force. They did not delegate the power to Congress to declare that a certain officer should act until the time for the election of a President shall arrive. This power was understandingly withheld, and is vested in the people to-day, not in Congress.

Additional evidence of the intent of the framers of the Constitution can be found not only in the proceedings connected with the passage of the act of 1792, but also in the fact that in that law, passed in the Second Congress, was placed a provision for a special election. Why provide for a special election if the power to declare what officer should fill out the remainder of the term had been delegated to Congress?

Five persons, at least, were members of the House in the Second Congress who had been members of the constitutional convention. These were Messrs. Dayton, Fitzsimmons, Baldwin, Gilman, and Madison. While these men were divided in their votes as to what officers should be declared to be in the line of succession, they were united in supporting that provision of the bill which provided for a special election. They were comparatively fresh from the convention hall. The intention of the framers was known to them. Mr. Madison had tested the intention of the convention by the substitute proposed by him for the amendment of Mr. Randolph.

Who was it that signed and approved this bill? Who was it that gave it a final examination? It was George Washington, the first President of the United States and the presiding officer of the constitutional convention. He knew the intent of the framers of our Constitution with as much or more certainty than any other man. If the act of 1792 had ignored the plain intent of the framers of the Constitution his veto would have killed the bill. He gave it the stamp of his approval. He signed it, and it became a law. Ninety-four years of service have aged its provisions; the parchment evidence may be faded or destroyed, but the intent of the fathers clings to it still. [Applause.]

I assert, then, that Congress has no power to enact a law violative of the intent of the constitutional provision under consideration. It has no power to enact a valid law, which in effect declares that a certain appointive officer, an officer in the appointment of whom the people have had no voice, shall act as President "until the time for the election of a President shall arrive."

Pass this bill, and it will be a flagrant usurpation of the power vested in and retained by the people. I turn to the ninth article of the amendments to the Constitution, and I read:

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

Statesmen, with some ghostly apparition of impending danger, have become panicky, and in their haste virtually declare that because the people delegated power to Congress to confer Presidential robes upon a certain person until disability disappears or a President be elected, therefore Congress can fill out the entire term. They construe the grant of power in the Constitution so that it denies the right reserved to the people to "supply a vacancy by an intermediate election of a President."

I turn to the tenth article of the amendments to the Constitution, and I read:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

The power to provide for a succession for the remainder of the term, or for a definite period, was not delegated to Congress or to the United States. If the power was not delegated, the tenth article of the amendments says it is reserved to the people, and there it remains to-day.

The present bill is inexpedient. What is the purpose, the object of this bill? It is to make certain, as is claimed, that which is alleged to be uncertain. It is to provide for a line of succession concerning which there can be no uncertainty. Does the bill accomplish this object? If not, it is inexpedient. The line of succession, as established by this bill is, first, the Secretary of State; then the Secretary of the Treasury; then the Secretary of War; then the Attorney-General; then the Postmaster-General; then the Secretary of the Navy; and lastly, the Secretary of the Interior. Suppose the Secretary of State is declared to be the officer to act as President, does he continue to be Secretary of State? Does his first assistant act as Secretary of State, or can the acting President appoint a new Secretary of State? Suppose he can appoint a new Secretary of State, and that appointment is confirmed by the Senate, is this new appointee then in the line of succession? If so, then the acting President, under this law, has the absolute and kingly power to name his successor. "Shades of our fathers!" the republican government you so wisely framed has been, by a species of legislative legerdemain, transformed into a limited monarchy!

But suppose the Assistant Secretary becomes the acting Secretary, and the acting President has no power to appoint a Secretary? Then, in case of the death of the acting President, the Secretary of the Treasury becomes acting President, and his assistant becomes acting Secretary of the Treasury. Suppose then the acting President should die, the Secretary of War then becomes acting President. In that event who becomes acting Secretary of War? The Secretary of War has no assistant, and, as I understand the law to be, can only designate a person to perform the duties of that office for a period not to exceed ten days.

Suppose the Secretary of the Interior should finally be reached in the line of succession and should become acting President, what officers would compose his Cabinet?

The War and Navy Departments, neither of which have assistants, would be unrepresented in the Cabinet, and the rest of the Departments would be represented by assistants. I might multiply these questions almost indefinitely, and each query would present a case within the realm of possible realization. I want no such confusion; I want no such uncertainty. Rather bear the "ills we have, than fly to others that we know not of."

The bill is impolitic. It is unwise. It would be injurious to the interests of this republican government. The omnipresent idea in the very warp and woof of our governmental structure is that the people shall have a voice in the selection of their rulers. Whatever tends to silence this voice weakens the structure our fathers have builded. Innovations upon the prerogatives of the people increase in the human mind the thirst for power. The safety of the Republic is in the individual instinct of self-preservation of person and property. The weapon with which this is guarded is the ballot. Disarmed of this weapon resort is had to force, and this means revolution. The ballot has no potency in the selection of Cabinet officers. The advisers of the President are not responsible to the people. The people have no power to appoint or remove them. They hold their positions subject to the will of but one mind.

When the people, through their State Legislatures, elect a United States Senator, they do so with the full knowledge that he may be elected President pro tempore, and upon the happening of certain events may become acting President of the United States. They know that every six years he must come back to them and answer to them for his actions. When the people by their votes elect a member of the House of Representatives, they do so with the full knowledge that he may be elected Speaker, and on the happening of certain events may become acting President of the United States. They know also that every two years he must come back to them and answer for his actions. The Cabinet minister answers to no one but his chief. He goes from among the people without their bidding, and is in no sense their representative or agent. To make it possible for such a person to become the acting President is to place over the people a ruler who has become such without their assent, either express or implied.

The position of President of the United States is the most honorable position in the world. The people of the United States have made it so. The humblest native-born citizen has the right to aspire to it. It is impolitic and unwise to relegate this proud position to the domain of chance and exclude the people from having part or lot in it. In the absence of any law or the power to make a better, resort might be had to this one as a last expedient. I have heard that the proposed law is better than none. I very much question the correctness of the proposition. I think the Constitution itself, without any law declaring a further succession, better than a law that is unconstitutional and mischievous.

But we have a law. The law of 1792, crowned with years, needs but slight additions by the legislative and executive pen to make it complete and forceful under all reasonable circumstances.

The legality of this law is questioned because the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House are not officers of the United States, and hence can not be declared to be in the line of succession. I have noticed acres of assumption, but not a pin's point of argument in favor of this proposition. [Laughter.]

It has been gravely asserted that in the Blount impeachment the question has been decided. Articles of impeachment were presented in the Senate of the United States in 1798 against William Blount, a Senator from the State of Tennessee. That dignitary presented the point by demurrer that a Senator of the United States was not an officer within the meaning of section 4 of Article II of the Constitution.

That section reads as follows:

The President and Vice-President, and all civil officers of the United States, shall be removed from office on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors.

The Senate sustained his demurrer, and so virtually decided that a Senator was not an officer of the United States.

I do not have the most exalted reverence for a judicial decision by any legislative body, even though it may be sitting as a high court of impeachment. When a legislative body puts on the judicial gown the garment seldom fits well. While it may hide political vices and prejudice, or cover up friendships and legislative sympathy, it does not silence or destroy their influence. Legislative experience is not conducive to growth in the knowledge of the law. A man may be a great statesman but a very poor lawyer. He may have a correct knowledge of legislative necessities but a very infirm knowledge of legal principles. I am therefore skeptical as to the infallibility of the decision in the Blount case. It may be good law, but I should wish to have it affirmed by some other judicial tribunal before I should vote to repeal a statute that had done good service for ninety-four years.

In this connection, all those who are curious to see a very plain decision on this question I refer to the case ex parte Yarborough (110 U. S. Reports), where it seems to me the Supreme Court, through Justice Miller, emphatically declares, that these men are not officers of States. I submit, however, that the decision in the Blount case is not in point. A Senator or a Representative may not be an officer of the United States, but a President pro tempore of the Senate is something more than a Senator of the United States. A Speaker of the House of Representatives is something more than a member of the House. These positions are created by the Constitution.

The Senate of the United States is a constitutional body, and it is this constitutional body that elects a President pro tempore.

The House of Representatives is a constitutional body, and this constitutional body elects a Speaker of the House of Representatives. The Constitution says: "The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers." It does not declare that the Representatives (the members of the House) shall elect a Speaker of the House.

The Constitution does not declare that the members of the Senate of the United States shall elect a President pro tempore; but the Constitution of the United States does declare that the House of Representatives, a constitutional body, shall elect its Speaker, and that the Senate of the United States, a constitutional body, shall elect a President pro tempore.

What is required to constitute an officer of the United States?

First. The office itself must be created by the Constitution, or by some United States statute in harmony with the Constitution.

Second. The person to fill the office must be elected or appointed by some body or person deriving the power of selection from the Constitution.

Third. The person selected for the office must be eligible.

These are requisites that are necessary to constitute an officer of the United States. If all of these requisites converge in a person, he is an officer of the United States.

Test the Speaker of the House of Representatives by these requirements and requisites.

First. The office of Speaker is provided for by the Constitution.

Second. He is chosen by the House of Representatives under and by authority of the Constitution: "The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker."

Third. The person selected is eligible.

Is anything more required in the case of the President and Vice-President of the United States?

It has been urged that Senators and Members of the House of Representatives are officers of the States from which they come.

Admit it for the present argument; but is the Speaker of this House the Speaker of the State of Kentucky? Is the present President pro tempore of the Senate the President pro tempore of the State of Ohio?

Nowhere in the laws or constitution of any State are these offices provided for.

The people of the State of Ohio through its Legislature elected Mr.

SHERMAN a United States Senator, and, by that election and his act in taking the oath of office, as such he was rendered eligible to the position of President pro tempore of the United States Senate. Neither the people of the State of Ohio nor its Legislature had the power to elect him to his present position. That power alone exists in the Senate of the United States.

The voters of the sixth Congressional district of Kentucky elected Mr. CARLISLE as a membor of the House of Representatives for the Forty-ninth Congress, and thereby rendered him eligible to the office of Speaker. He took the oath as a member of the Forty-ninth Congress and rendered his eligibility complete; but it was the House of Representatives that elected him Speaker of the Forty-ninth Congress and not the State of Kentucky. He, as Speaker, has charge of the Hall of the House and control of unappropriated rooms in this wing of the Capitol. He has a large number of duties by law and by rule which he is required to discharge. He shall sign all acts, bills, joint resolutions, &c., as prescribed by the law, and must perform a number of specified duties, not for the State of Kentucky, not for the sixth Congressional district of Kentucky, but he shall do these acts for the House of Representatives of the United States of America. He is the presiding officer of a national legislative body—a body created by the Constitution, a part of the law-making power of the nation, entirely exempt from State control. It is the exclusive judge of the election and qualification of its own members. The State law can not control it in any particular. The State has no power over it. Can it be said, then, that the presiding officer of such a body is not an officer of the United States?

It is urged further that under this law the succession might bring about a change of politics during the lifetime of one administration.

This objection is seriously urged by believers in the Democratic faith. The belief in this objection has become very much stronger on the Democratic side of this House since the 4th of March last. [Laughter on the Republican side.] There was a very perceptible lack of enthusiasm in this measure on the Democratic side during the last Congress. The bill as then framed permitted the law providing for a special election to remain in force, and was in consequence less objectionable than it is now.

When I exercised the one-man power in this House before the holiday recess and prevented the consideration of this bill, a look of holy horror seemed to steal over the faces of my Democratic friends. Now you ought to thank me for my action. Your party is in power here with 41 majority, and I was simply a temporary and self-appointed guardian to prevent you from enacting hasty and unwise legislation. Your party has one less sin to answer for, and I take credit to myself for having prevented the increase of its ponderous load. [Laughter.]

Mr. EDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PETERS. As soon as I have finished this subject on which I have entered.

Mr. EDEN. My question relates to this very subject.

Mr. PETERS. All right.

Mr. EDEN. My question is this: Had the Senate when it sent the bill over to the House a political object to accomplish?

Mr. PETERS. As soon as the Senate pass a bill, regardless of what its subject or substance may be, they immediately transmit it to the House.

But, seriously, the Democratic party has been in power in this House since 1875, with the exception of two years. You had a Democratic Speaker of this House during all that time, who was in the line of succession. My party was in power at the other end of the Avenue, and bore up under the Democratic load at this end very well. [Laughter.]

Now your party is in power at the other end of the Avenue. My party took chances on a change of administration during two Presidential terms. Can not your party stand it until 1888? We will relieve you then by placing a Republican in the White House.

The distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] is coming to your relief with a measure to continue the office of elector during the Presidential term. The distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] is coming to your relief by a measure providing for a second Vice-President. Either of these remedies is better than the present bill, but better than all would be the re-enactment of the law of 1867, providing for the meeting of Congress each alternate year on the 4th of March. The line of succession would then always be well provided for, and the organization of the House would then be perfected and ready for work when it would return to begin the long session in December. With this additional safeguard the law of 1792 should stand. It has done good service for nearly a century. Our Government has passed the experimental period and is firmly established.

The crucial test of internecine war has been made, and while some of the dross yet remains, the pure gold has been separated from it, and the virtue, patriotism, and intelligence of our people will burnish it until the halo of its influence encircles the earth.

This law of 1792 is one of our landmarks, honored and useful; as potent to-day as it was when adopted. Let us not cast it aside for an untried, inexpedient, and impolitic substitution.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has sixteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. SENEY. Mr. Speaker, the existing law, declaring who shall perform the duties of President of the United States in case the offices of President and Vice-President become vacant, is nearly as old as the Government. It was made in 1792, and in no particular has it ever been changed. It provides that in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President, the President of the Senate, or, if there be none, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall act as President until the disability is removed or a President elected. In the same law provision is made for the election of a President and Vice-President when both these offices are vacant. In enacting this law it was intended, no doubt, to give effect to that part of the Constitution of the United States which provides that in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President, the Congress shall declare what officer shall then act as President until the disability be removed or a President elected.

Fortunately there has been no occasion to use this law. It is, and has been since its enactment, a sleeping statute. Of course this is no reason why it should be altered or repealed. If the law gave proper effect to the constitutional provision upon which it rests it ought not to be disturbed. It does not, and for this reason it ought to give place to a wiser and better enactment. The subject is one which deeply concerns the country. Legislation upon it ought not to be delayed a single day.

Four times since the organization of the Government has the office of President of the United States been vacant. During the same period the office of Vice-President has been vacant six times. Both of these offices have never been vacant at one and the same time. Such an event it is to be hoped will never occur. But it may. Should it occur while the existing law is in force there is a possibility that for a time the Government may be without an authorized ruler. Such an event ought not to be possible. It can be made impossible by enacting a law different from the one we now have.

The Presidential succession under existing law is at best doubtful and uncertain. First in the line of succession stands the President pro tempore of the Senate. He is chosen from the Senate, and by the Senate, to preside for the time being over its deliberations, and holds his place during the pleasure of that body. If he is an officer within the meaning of that clause of the Constitution which fixes the power of Congress to fill a vacancy in the office of President, then in this respect he is legally qualified for that position. This clause, it will be remembered, is that Congress may declare what officer shall act as President when the offices of President and Vice-President become vacant. The words "what officer" in this clause deserve particular notice. Whether the officer meant is one having authority under the laws of a State or of the United States is by no means certain. We are to presume that the officer intended is one exercising authority under the laws enacted by the Congress of the United States. In this construction it is believed acquiescence is general.

But is the President of the Senate an officer of the United States? Upon this question there is a wide difference of opinion. Men profoundly learned in our laws say that he is not, and therefore can not act as President. Others, standing equally as high in the legal profession, claim that the President of the Senate is an officer of the United States, and may act as President if Congress so declares.

This question, it is said, was authoritatively settled as early as 1798. It was, if the judgment of the Senate in what is known as Senator Blount's case is to be considered final and binding. In that case the Senate refused to impeach Mr. Blount, against whom articles of impeachment had been preferred by the House. Senator Blount, it must be borne in mind, was not the President of the Senate. He was a Senator from the State of Tennessee. The Senate determined that a Senator in Congress was not liable to impeachment because he was not a civil officer of the United States.

Upon this point the case is an authority; upon the point before us it is not. That the office of Senator in Congress is not a civil office within the meaning of the impeachment clause of the Constitution may be true.

Another clause in the Constitution, it will be remembered, declares that no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either the House or the Senate during his continuance in office. When a Senator presides temporarily over the Senate he may be, while so acting, an officer of the Senate only, and in no sense an officer of the United States. Or it may be that he can not constitutionally act as President and as a Senator at the same time.

It is not my purpose to discuss these questions upon precedent or principle. Until they are settled by binding authority there is room for contention and, possibly, for bitter partisan strife. To change either or both of these clauses in our organic law would be difficult, if not impossible. The two questions to which they give rise can not, in the absence of a case presenting them, be authoritatively determined.

The only way out of the apparent difficulty is to conform to the Constitution and enact a law placing an officer of the United States, instead of a temporary officer of the Senate or House, in the line of the Presidential succession.

But there are other difficulties in the way of making an acting President out of the Senate's temporary presiding officer. Let it be supposed that the President of the Senate was born in any country other than our own, would he in such case be legally qualified to act as President of the United States? The Constitution declares that no person except a natural-born citizen of the United States, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, shall be eligible to the office of President.

Again, suppose the President of the Senate to be above the minimum age prescribed for a Senator, twenty-five years, and below the age prescribed for the President, thirty-five years, could he become an acting President of the United States? The Constitution declares all persons ineligible to the office of President of the United States who shall not have attained to the age of thirty-five years.

Suppose again that the Senate's President has been a resident of the United States less than fourteen years. Would he, in such case, have the legal qualifications for an acting President? The Constitution declares that no person shall be eligible to the office of President who has not been a resident within the United States for fourteen years.

If in the cases mentioned constitutional difficulties are in the way of the President of the Senate becoming the acting President, upon whom would the succession fall? Certainly not upon the Speaker of the House, for he can not fill the place unless there is no President of the Senate. The President of the Senate may have every legal qualification required to fill that position in the Senate, and yet be disqualified by the Constitution from filling the office of President of the United States. In either of these cases it is plain that the Government would be without a legal head.

If the President of the Senate was to assume the duties of President and subsequently be impeached, if liable as an acting President to impeachment, who then would be entitled to the succession? The impeachment of an acting President, if he be also a Senator and President of the Senate, it is believed, would not in any wise affect his right to hold his seat in the Senate or his place as its presiding officer. The judgment of impeachment, probably, could have no other effect than to remove the impeached President from office and disqualify him to hold any office under the United States in the future. Still he would be a Senator, and as long as he continued to be President of the Senate the Speaker of the House could not take the Presidential office, and in the case supposed there would be no one legally authorized to administer the Government.

Suppose that the President of the Senate while acting as President of the United States should die, what officer of the Government, under existing law, is appointed to execute the office of President? The Speaker of the House? But there may be no Speaker when the death occurs. The President of the Senate, while acting as President, may resign his seat in the Senate, or his term as Senator may expire. Who, in either case, would become the acting President? Such a case might produce serious trouble. For cause, and for no cause, the Senate can remove its presiding officer, and this removal might operate to again vacate the Presidential office, and possibly give rise to a serious contention as to who should succeed to the vacated place. More critical, if possible, might the situation become if the political complexion of the Senate was to change.

The matter before us suggests that another difficulty might arise in case the President of the Senate should take upon himself the duties of an acting President. The clause of the Constitution, stated in another connection, declares that no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of the Senate or House during his continuance in office. To give to this clause its full meaning and effect it is not without pretense to say that no Senator shall hold any office under the United States. If this is the correct interpretation of this clause the question might arise whether or not a Senator could act as President. Or the clause might suggest the question as to its effect on the right of the President of the Senate to retain his seat as a Senator, or his place as the Senate's presiding officer.

In the face of these difficulties, real or apparent, and of others of more or less moment, the question may well be asked, Why continue the President of the Senate in the line of succession to the Presidential office?

But this part of the argument need not be further pursued. Enough has been said to show that a proper regard for the people, and for the Government under which they live, requires that in one respect, at least, the Presidential succession be changed.

Second and last in the line of succession is the Speaker of the House of Representatives. He is to take the Presidency when it and the Vice-Presidency are vacant, and there be no President of the Senate. Considering this subject in the light of to-day it is to be wondered why this law was ever put upon the statute-book, or why it has been allowed to remain undisturbed for nearly a century. Those who made this law, or some of them, assisted in framing the Constitution of the United States. Some of them took an active and leading part in organizing the Government, and subsequently, for years, in directing its affairs. Why these wise and great men thought it best to fix the succession to the office of President in the legislative department of the Government it is difficult to understand. There seems to be no sufficient or controlling reason for taking the acting President from the Senate or from the House. He must, as we have seen, be an officer of the United States. But if the place is to be filled by an officer of the Senate or an officer of the House, there is an obvious propriety in the selection of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House.

Putting the Speaker of the House in the line of succession adds to the uncertainties and doubts of the situation. Congress is not in session when the President and Vice-President elect are inaugurated. It does not convene until nine months thereafter. During this long period the office of Speaker of the House is vacant. Should vacancies occur in the offices of President and Vice-President within these nine months the office of President could not be filled by the Speaker of the House; and if the Senate had no President pro tempore the office of President of the United States would be vacant, it may be, for months.

Again, in the middle of the Presidential term, and for nine months thereafter, the House has no Speaker. If within this period these vacancies should occur, unless the Senate has a President pro tempore, there is no one legally authorized to perform the duties of President of the United States. The fact that in the term for which a President and Vice-President are elected the office of Speaker of the House is vacant for eighteen months, or more than one-third of the entire term, is strongly suggestive that the existing law fixing the Presidential succession ought to be changed.

Is it said that the House may always have a Speaker? Not under existing laws. To change them at this time is impossible; and if changed it is questionable whether or not the public good in other respects would be substantially subserved.

But these are not the only reasons why the Speaker of the House ought not to be in the line of the Presidential succession. Unless the Speaker of the House is such an officer as the Constitution prescribes he would be legally disqualified to fill a vacancy in the Presidential office. The fact that he is a member of the House might be in the way of his holding the office of President. In case the Speaker was not a native-born citizen of the United States, or had not resided in the United States for fourteen years, or was not thirty-five years of age, his legal right to act as President might be disputed. Should he, while acting as President of the United States, be removed from the Speakership and the House elect another of its members to preside in his stead, or should he die, or resign his seat in the House, or his term as Representative expire, or the political complexion of the House change—either of these events might make a situation abounding in difficulties and doubts.

Under the law as it now stands controversies respecting the succession might arise between the Senate and House; and contention between the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House might possibly occur.

What sufficient reason can be assigned for allowing the Senate, without the concurrence of the House, to designate who of its members shall fill the vacancy, should one occur, in the office of President of the United States?

Upon what ground can it be claimed that the House, without the concurrence of the Senate, should make it possible for one of its members to become President of the United States?

Both the Senate and the House united in enacting the law to fix the succession. Under it the Senate stands first in the line and the House second. If the virtue and purity of those who made this law were not beyond question there would be room to suspect that the enactment is the result of a compromise between selfish, jealous, and conflicting opinions.

If the succession must be in the Senate and House, and can be kept there with safety, under the Constitution, its order ought to be changed. The Speaker of the House ought to stand first instead of second, and the President of the Senate second instead of first.

If the vacancy in the Presidential office could be filled at an election to be held by the people, instead of by the previous and fixed appointment of the law, this method would unquestionably be best. If the vacancy could be filled by the election of electors chosen by the people, this plan, no doubt, would be acceptable. Probably neither of these ways are at all practicable or expedient.

The Speaker of the House, as a member of that body, is a representative of the people, directly accountable to them, and for this reason their interests are, or at least are supposed to be, safer in his hands than in the hands of one whose relations to the people are too remote to feel proper responsibility.

The President of the Senate, as a Senator, is the representative of a State, and is not accountable, in theory at least, except to his State, for the manner in which his official duties are performed.

If the succession is not to be changed there is need for legislation that will secure perpetuity, if it is possible, in one if not both of the offices of President of the Senate and Speaker of the House.

To have the President pro tempore of the Senate or the Speaker of the House act for a time, long or short, as the President of the United States would not secure that care and attention to the duties of that high executive office which the place demands, and which the people have the right to expect.

The duties, cares, and responsibilities of the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House are great—enough, as we all know, to tax the strength, mental and physical, of the strongest and ablest. In addition to the duties of presiding officer, the one is the representative of a State and all of its interests; the other, of a district and all that concerns it in Congress. It is simply impossible for one man to discharge the duties of a Senator, of President pro tempore of the Senate, and of President of the United States.

There is no one who will say that the duties of President of the United States and those of Speaker of the House of Representatives can be performed by one and the same person. To make it possible for the President of the United States to be a member of the Senate or House, or the presiding officer of either body, is wrong.

Every good interest suggests the wisdom of keeping the executive and legislative departments of the Government widely apart. The President of the United States, if only for a time, sitting in the presiding officer's place in the Senate, or in the chair of the Speaker of the House, is a scene which it is to be hoped no eye will ever witness. The law as it now is makes such a scene a possible event.

We must not be deceived. Should the President of the Senate ever become acting President of the United States he will then hold three offices: Acting President of the United States, President of the Senate, and Senator in Congress. The duties of each of these places must be performed by the same person.

And the Speaker of the House, should he become acting President, will hold three offices: Acting President, Speaker, and Representative. The duties of each the same person must perform.

In the minds of those who made the law of 1792 we feel sure there was no thought that their work would open a way for the occupant of the Presidential office to preside in the Senate or the House, or take a part in the discussions or deliberations of either body.

Those pure and good men had no idea that in making it possible for the Speaker of the House to be President, temporarily, the time would come when the duties of the two places would be so great, varied, and arduous that no one person could perform them both.

When this law was enacted the Union contained seventeen States and no organized Territories. Our population was then less than 4,000,000—only a few more than the present population of Ohio, and considerably less than the present population of Pennsylvania or New York. Now we have thirty-eight States and eight organized Territories, with 56,000,000 of population.

In my judgment it would be sadly out of place for the President to be in the Senate when that body is in executive session. Offensive to all sense of propriety would it be to have the President in the Senate with the right to debate and to vote upon his own nominations to office, upon his own vetoes, upon treaties he negotiates, upon measures he recommends or opposes, upon each and every of his official acts.

More offensive to propriety would it be, if possible, for the acting President to preside over the deliberations of the House and take a part in the contentions in that body. Without a change in the existing law there is a possibility far from remote that what we would prevent may occur.

The office of President of the Senate or Speaker of the House may be vacant at a critical time. Both may be vacant at the same time. Both were vacant from the 4th of March last until December 7 following. Vacancies in the office of President and Vice-President during this period would have left the Government without a constitutional ruler. Perhaps we were nearer such a condition of affairs recently than ever before in our history.

On the 25th of November last the death of the lamented Hendricks made vacant the office of Vice-President of the United States. At that time, and for twelve days thereafter, the Senate had no President pro tempore, nor had the House a Speaker. Had the office of President become vacant during those twelve days the Government would have been without legal rule. Happily the situation was relieved by the Senate and the House electing their presiding officers on the first day Congress convened.

The Senate, it will be remembered, was in session for several weeks in March and April last, and adjourned without electing a President pro tempore.

It is within the recollection of us all that in the Thirty-fourth Congress, in 1855, the House was not able to elect a Speaker until the thirtieth day of its session. In the Congress of 1859 a Speaker of the House was not elected until the twenty-sixth day of the session.

In the Senate it is believed that there is no fixed time for the election of a President pro tempore. It may be done when the Vice-President is out of the Senate, if that body so wills, or it may not be done at all, as was the case at the session in March last.

There may have been times in the Senate when that body was unable to elect a presiding officer until after many days spent in the effort. The situation in the Senate and the House may be such as to prevent the election of a President pro tempore for the former or a Speaker for the latter for months, it may be, after Congress has convened.

At times party feeling runs high in Congress. Equally high, if not higher, does it reach among the people. Bitter and angry at times are party struggles upon this floor and in the Senate Chamber. Among the people few political compaigns open and close without making bitter disappointments and lasting hates. In the contests for party supremacy waged here and elsewhere our Government has had its severest trials.

Will any of us soon forget the great contest for the Presidency in 1876? Memorable was the strife of the people. Memorable were the contentions in this Capitol—memorable for what was done and equally memorable for what was not done. In every part of the Republic the strain from this eventful struggle was felt.

We all remember the long, dreary, and anxious days of November, 1884. Upon the electoral vote of a single State depended the result of the Presidential election of that year. The popular vote in that State was 1,125,159, and so evenly was it divided between the two great political parties of the country that the one had but 1,149 more than the other. Out of this condition of affairs contentions arose which for a time threatened the peace of the entire country.

The existing law as to the Presidential succession shows a weakness in our political system. The time may come, soon or late, when for the want of proper legislation upon this subject the Government may be without one authorized to administer its laws.

The President of the United States can not be removed from his office except on impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. The acting President, if he be the President of the Senate, may be removed at the mere will of the Senate; or if he be the Speaker of the House, at the mere will of the House.

If my memory is not greatly at fault the records of Congress show that Senators have been expelled from the Senate, and Representatives have been expelled from the House. Senators and Representatives have been unseated for party reasons and for party purposes. Offenses short of a high crime or misdemeanor will not remove a President chosen by the electoral college; but a President from the Senate or House may be ousted from his executive seat for the same causes which expel or unseat a Senator or a Representative.

If we would give peace to the country and stability to the Government, the tenure of the Presidential office, permanently or temporarily, ought to rest upon something else than the mere will of either or both of the legislative bodies of the Government.

We have two great political parties. One now controls the executive department of the Government and the other is in control of the Senate. A vacancy exists in the office of Vice-President and one may occur in the office of President. Should it occur, the party which the people voted into power so recently, and for four years, would surely and quickly have to give way to the opposite party, and its leader chosen by less than forty of its members.

A government thus constituted is weak where it ought to be strong. More lives than one should stand between the party in and the party out of power. Let us meet the responsibilities imposed at this time and in this place, and make stronger and more enduring, in one respect at least, the Government which cost so much blood and treasure to establish and so much blood and treasure to maintain.

The pending bill is a move in the right direction. Its purpose is to change the law fixing the Presidential succession. The bill proposes to take the succession out of the legislative department of the Government and place it in the executive department. It has passed the Senate, and ought, in my judgment, to pass the House.

The executive department of the Government ought to be administered always by the officers of that department and never by the officers of the legislative or judicial departments. The office of President of the United States is an executive office, and when from any cause its duties can not be performed by the President or by his constitutional successor, the Vice-President, another executive officer ought to fill, temporarily, the place. Experience in that department, and familiarity with its varied duties, ought to influence in some degree the question as to who shall succeed the executive head in case his place and the place of the Vice-President is vacant.

The principle urged is the same adopted and followed with eminent success in each of the several branches of the executive department. The Department of State, of the Treasury, of War, of Justice, the Post-Office, of the Navy, and of the Interior each has a head, and also assistants who are by law authorized to perform the duties of such head in case of his death, resignation, absence, or sickness until a successor is appointed, or such absence or sickness shall cease. In addition to this the President may authorize and direct the head of any other Department, or any officer in either Department, to perform the duties of the vacant office until a successor is appointed, or the sickness or absence of the incumbent shall cease.

This system, as organized and conducted, is believed to be entirely satisfactory and entirely free from objection. There are many reasons why the same principle should be controlling in declaring who shall be at the head of the executive department when the President and Vice-President, from any cause, are unable to perform its duties.

The pending bill puts the succession where, in my judgment, it rightfully belongs. It provides that in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President the duties of the President for the time being shall be performed,

First, by the Secretary of State;

Second, by the Secretary of the Treasury;

Third, by the Secretary of War;

Fourth, by the Attorney-General;
Fifth, by the Postmaster-General;
Sixth, by the Secretary of the Navy;
Seventh, by the Secretary of the Interior.

The bill further provides that in case either of these officers are ineligible to the office of President under the Constitution, or are under impeachment by the House at the time the duties of the Presidential office devolve upon them respectively, then the officer next in the order of succession, if eligible and not under impeachment, shall act as President. If there be no such officer, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, the same order as to the succession is fixed by the bill.

From any point of view this bill is a model. It has the merit of brevity, precision, and purpose. Make it a law, and the difficulties, dangers, doubts, and disputes which may come if the existing law stands will be removed.

Under this bill, if it becomes a law, it can not be otherwise than that the office of President will be always acceptably filled. It is very doubtful whether a Cabinet ever had a member not fitted to perform the duties of President. Seats in the Cabinet have been ably and patriotically filled by hundreds of our countrymen. Satesmen of world-wide renown have occupied seats in the Cabinets of our Presidents. The list of Secretaries of State does not exceed thirty. Upon it are names which brighten many a page in our history. Men whose labors in the higher places of trust impressed deeply and indelibly every department of the Government with their learning, ability, and love of country have presided over the Department of State. Six of them afterward became Presidents. With a few exceptions all who have held the place in the last sixty years have been more or less prominent in their parties as candidates for the Presidency.

Little if any less distinguished are those who have filled the office of Secretary of the Treasury. There is no name upon this list unworthy of a place upon the President's roll.

The other Executive Departments, without an exception, have been filled by men of marked ability and of eminent fitness for executive duty.

There is no room for a doubt that should the time ever come when the offices both of President and Vice-President are vacant that the Cabinet can be relied upon to furnish an acting President in whose integrity, ability, and patriotism the country will be entirely content. Such a disposition of the Presidential succession would, in my opinion, be in accord with the sentiments and convictions of our people, and would have their hearty approval.

In practice, if not in theory, the offices of President and Vice-President are not far from being elective. More than ten millions of our people participate in choosing electors, and these electors choose the President and Vice-President. Each political party puts in nomination candidates for these two offices. They nominate also candidates for electors. The electors chosen in each State, by the people of the State, vote for the candidates of their party. The electoral votes of the States may be in favor of one party and the popular vote may favor largely the opposite party. Both the electoral vote and the popular vote represent the political opinions of the people, and are cast not so much for the party candidates as for the measures and policy which the party advocates.

The will of the people as to the administrative policy of the Government thus ascertained, in the election of a President and Vice-President, the Constitution intends shall be operative and effective for the full period of four years. This will the Constitution respects and enforces by the provision that in case of the death, removal, resignation, or inability of the President that the duties of his office shall be performed by the Vice-President for the remainder of the four-year term. The better to secure the will of the people from defeat within the four years the Constitution declares that Congress shall provide by law what officer shall perform the duties of President in case of the death, resignation, removal, or inability of the Vice-President, and this officer is, by the Constitution, to act as President until the disability be removed or a President elected.

Under the present law as to the succession should the President of the Senate succeed to the Presidential office he may belong to the party holding political opinions directly the opposite of those held by the party voted into power only a short time before. Should this officer, while acting as President, resign, or die, or be removed, the Speaker of the House, who would succeed him, may belong to the party voted into power by the people.

This is the situation to-day. A vacancy in the office of President now would put the party defeated by the people in the contest for that office one year ago in control of the executive branch of the Government. Before the close of this year the office may be vacant again. Should this occur the party now in control would, after a few months of rule by the opposite party, again assume control.

During the Presidential term which expired in March last the situation was in many respects the same. The special session of the Senate, which was held in March, 1881, adjourned without electing a President pro tempore. Until Congress convened in December following, a period of nine months, the House had no Speaker; and from March until soon after the death of President Garfield, which occurred late in September, a period of more than eight months, the Senate was without a President pro tempore. The Senate met in special session in October, and elected a Senator (Mr. Davis), who was not identified with either of the two great political parties of the country, the President pro tempore of that body. Shortly after Congress convened, and a Republican (Mr. Keifer) was elected Speaker of the House. Occurrences like these, if there be nothing else, ought to admonish us of the insufficiency of the present law fixing the Presidential succession.

The people, regardless of party, are opposed to sudden or too frequent changes in the administration of the Government. It is better, far better for all, that the party voted into power retain it, free from all interruption, for the full period of four years.

The party successful at the polls represents, under our system, the will of the people, and this will ought to be secured beyond the possibility of defeat for the full period of four years. Under existing law this can not be done.

The pending bill accomplishes this purpose. If the temporary President be taken from the Cabinet, appointed by the President to assist him in administering the Government, there is positive certainty that the same party policy will be faithfully pursued until the end of the Presidential term. The Cabinet is composed of representative men of the same party to which the President belongs, and in this is a guaranty that for the Presidential term yet to expire the measures and policy of that party will be enforced.

In placing the succession in the Cabinet an officer experienced in executive duties will be at the head of the Government in case of a vacancy in the office of President. This is a consideration of the first importance, and ought to weigh heavily in fixing the line of descent. An election within the four years to fill an unexpired term, or for a full term, opens the way for inexperience to reach the head of the executive department.

The Cabinet officer succeeding to the Presidential office would still retain his place at the head of his Department. If the Secretary of State, he would continue to be the head of the State Department, the duties of which he would perform, and at the same time perform the duties of President. Possibly while actually engaged in doing the duties of President the First Assistant Secretary of State would, under another existing statute, be authorized to act as Secretary of State. If so, the Secretary of State would be relieved, in a large measure, from duty in the State Department, and thus be enabled to give his time and attention to the more important duties of the President.

Twice since the beginning of the Government has the office of President been vacated by the hand of an assassin. The circumstances under which both of these foul crimes were committed have induced the belief in the public mind that Booth and Guiteau had no other motive for taking the lives of Presidents Lincoln and Garfield than to bring about a change in the administrative policy of the Government. With the succession in the Cabinet, as proposed by the pending bill, it is believed that the life of the President will be secured against the attacks of desperadoes actuated by such a motive. The members of the Cabinet are the President's advisers, and are in sympathy with him in all that he does. There is nothing to be gained by putting him out of the way, for his successors in office are his personal friends and chosen advisers, and are committed to the same line of political action.

It is said the bill ought to be amended so as to provide for an election for President and Vice-President immediately after the vacancies in both offices occur. This election ought to be held, it is said by some, to fill the vacancies for the unexpired term, and by others for a new term of four years. In another connection both of these points have been noticed. These suggested amendments are, to my mind, objectionable for several reasons.

Perhaps there is no public event in which the people take a deeper interest than in a Presidential election. Every four years this election is held. The campaign, as it is called, opens months before. In it are employed all the agencies which human genius can devise to influence votes. Nothing that can be done is left undone by either of the political parties to win in the contest. As the campaign progresses the interest, anxiety, and excitement increase. There is scarcely a voter in the land who does not take a part, more or less active, in the struggle, and feel the deepest concern as to the result. And there is no department of labor, trade, or business which does not feel a depressing influence in a Presidential year. It is a year full of doubts and misgivings as to the immediate future. Elections are frequent. They come every year. They come in the spring and they come in the fall.

A Presidential election once in four years is all that the country can well stand. Two Presidential elections in a term of four years ought not, in justice to the people and their interests, be made a possible event.

Another consideration not to be overlooked is the cost to the people of holding a Presidential election. The cost is estimated at $2,000,000. To this sum may be added many millions for what is spent by the political parties to achieve party success.

Another objection to filling a Presidential vacancy by an election, to be held within the four years, is the changes that would surely follow in the subordinate places in the executive departme nt. The few, comparatively, who hold their places for a fixed term probably would not be disturbed. There are thousands, however, who hold their places by a different tenure, and all, without exception, would hold them at the pleasure of the incoming Executive.

The opponents of this bill say that the members of the Cabinet are not elected by the people, and therefore they ought not to be in the line of the succession. The existing law is open to the same objection. Neither the President pro tempore of the Senate nor the Speaker of the House is elected by the people.

There are no officers of the United States elected by the people. None can be so elected without changing our organic law. The President and Vice-President are not elected by the people, but by electors chosen by the people.

We must not forget that the Constitution requires the successor of the President to be an officer of the United States. Subject to this limitation Congress may declare who shall be the successor until the disability is removed, or a President is elected. The successor for the time being, and until a President is elected, whoever he may be, must be appointed. He can not be elected. From the very necessities of the case the appointment must come from Congress. The people may elect, but until they do the place must be filled in some other way; so that, after all, it is a question as to how long the appointment shall continue, or how early or late an election shall be held. If the country must be content with an appointed President for sixty or ninety days, it certainly ought not to be dissatisfied with such a President for a longer period of time.

Another objection made to the bill is that it gives to the President the power to designate his successor in office. The Constitution, we have seen, provides that his successor shall be an officer of the United States. We have argued that the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House can not be his constitutional successor. Who, then, shall be the successor? Congress certainly would not put the line of succession in the judicial department. It must, therefore, go into the executive Department. If there, it must of necessity be in the Cabinet. Shall the seven Cabinet officers be ignored, and the acting President be taken from their subordinates in authority?

The Presidential vacancy must be filled until the people can elect. As they can not elect for a time the place must be temporarily filled by appointment. An appointment by the President in advance of a vacancy is as near an appointment by the people as one can be made. An appointment by Congress declaring what officer shall temporarily fill the place is no more an act of the people than is the act of the President in naming his successor.

The President, as the elect of all the people, is supposed to be the representative of their will. The people, through their electors, intrust him with the power to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, all embassadors, ministers, and consuls, all judges of the Federal courts, and all other officers of the Government, except the Vice-President, and, except, also, such inferior officers the appointment of which is vested by law in the President alone, in courts of law, or in the heads of Departments. It will be seen, therefore, that the appointing power vested in the President extends to almost every office, civil and military, in the Government.

To say that the Secretary of State, or either of the other heads of the executive department, ought not to fill, temporarily, the office of President, if vacant, because they have been appointed to their places by the President, is an objection which, upon more mature reflection, will not be seriously urged.

If this objection is tenable, then there is no officer in either the executive or legislative departments of the government who can succeed to the Presidential office, for all officers in both departments are filled by appointment of the President. This, then, would leave no resting place for the succession, except where it now is, in the Senate and House.

But read the bill, and it will be seen that unless the Cabinet officer has been confirmed by the Senate he can not act as President. So that if the bill is construed as giving power to the President to appoint his successor this is not objectionable, because the Senate has the power to reject or confirm the appointment.

Who shall succeed to the office of President when it and the Vice-Presidential offices are vacant? The existing law says the President of the Senate, or, if there be none, the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Shall this law stand, or shall it give way to a more satisfactory enactment? Shall the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House continue first and second in the line of succession, or shall the line be changed and established for the future in the executive department of the Government? Where else can it go? If the opponents of this bill favor a change, and all save a few say that they do, tell me, gentlemen, where, if not in the Cabinet, ought the succession to be cast? I pause for an answer.

In my opinion our Government will be stronger and better when the existing law is repealed and a law, such as this bill proposes, takes its place in the statute-book of our country.

Pass this bill, and for the present and for all coming time, it is to be hoped, the question of the Presidential succession, now so disturbing, will be at rest.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Before the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] takes his seat I should like to address to him an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] has expired.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I rise to oppose the bill, but as I do not expect to occupy my full time, I have agreed to yield now five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES].

Mr. COWLES. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion of this question in this House, and without these walls the whole country is awaiting our action with suspense, if not anxiety. This measure, sir, was conceived in a political crisis caused by the death of President Garfield. It should be borne in mind that it is a proposition of the Republican majority of the Senate. It failed to pass this House at the last session for want of time. Since that time another political crisis is upon the country, caused by the death of Vice-President Hendricks, and such being the case, the Republican majority of the Senate could scarcely fail to bring their own proposition before that body again. They have shown their consistency by doing so now, and have passed it. Now, sir, it is not for me to say that this plan of succession is the best that can be provided, but it is sufficient for the evil we have to-day, and let this Democratic House refuse to pass this act, and that too without amendment, let them send it back to the Senate with amendments, and in my opinion we will not have another opportunity to agree with so good a proposition as this coming from the Senate. We will be unable to obtain their agreement to any proposition or amendment we may send them, and I, for one, am unwilling for this House to risk declining this proposition. The country, sir, is now in a state of uncertainty, depending upon the probability of a change of administration being precipitated by the death of one man, and the people, sir, demand, and properly demand, that the succession shall be fixed in that party which they have chosen to administer it for the next four years.

After it is passed and has become the law it can afterward be perfected by amendment or supplemental legislation; but, sir, it will remain the law until it is amended or repealed, both Houses concurring, imperfect as it may be, and it will give that peace to the country upon this question in all its bearings that the country so much needs. This is surely a question of the most vital interest—the peace of the country and the restoration of confidence in the stability of our institutions; and I for one am in favor of passing this bill at the very earliest opportunity.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, there are two objections to the pending bill.

First. The provision for the case of inability or disability in an acting President is a bad one.

Second. There is no provision for a speedy election to fill the vacancy in the office of President and Vice-President through the electoral college.

First as to inability. We do not know just what it is. There is no legal mode of ascertaining whether it exists or not in a particular case at a particular time. One thing we do know about it. It may be temporary. The Constitution provides that a person who acts as President in a case of disability acts as such only until the disability is removed.

As this is the meaning of the word in the Constitution, it is the meaning of the word in this bill. Disability in a President or in a Vice-President must be presumed to mean the same thing as disability in a Cabinet officer authorized to act as President by statute. If it is the same thing, it should be followed by the same legal consequences as nearly as may be.

As the President or Vice-President, being under disability, is obliged to surrender the exercise of the powers and duties of the office during such disability, but when the disability is removed he resumes the exercise of these powers and duties, so the acting President temporarily under disability should upon recovery resume the powers and duties of acting President. Such is not the provision of this bill. If the Secretary of State, being acting President, falls under disability for a single week, the authority to act as President passes from him not to return. And if the Secretary of the Treasury, having thus become acting President, should in his turn fall under disability for a single week, he too ceases to be authorized to act as President and does not regain his authority to act as such upon his recovery. And so the vast powers and responsibilities of the executive office pass from man to man always in one direction. As it has been graphically expressed by the distinguished author of the bill, the powers of the Presidential office go down step by step along the Cabinet ladder. They never go up, even by a single round.

This arrangement is objectionable for three reasons:

First. We reach the bottom of the ladder sooner than necessary. The purpose of a bill like this is to provide against all contingencies that can be foreseen. It is not enough in legislation of this kind to meet contingencies that are strongly probable. We must, if we can, meet contingencies which are only remotely to be apprehended, because the consequences are so serious if they do happen to occur. If we provide a series of offices along which the powers of the Presidential office can gradually pass, as on the rounds of a ladder, before they land at the bottom on what excitable persons call chaos, we ought to see to it that the ladder is as long as conveniently may be, and that the acting Presidency shall stay near the top as long as possible, in order to diminish the chances of arriving at the bottom.

The second reason is that the top rounds of the ladder are better than the bottom rounds. That is, ceteris paribus, a Secretary of State is rather better fitted to act as President than a Secretary of the Treasury; a Secretary of the Treasury is rather better fitted than a Secretary of War, and a Secretary of War than a Secretary of the Navy.

If this is not so, then the arrangement of the bill is all wrong and the order should be changed. The Cabinet officers best fitted for the place should stand first; that is, in the position upon which the powers and duties of the Presidential office are most likely to fall.

I will not discuss the relative importance of the Executive Departments of the Government. It is enough to say of that which stands first in the order fixed by this bill that by ancient custom, if not by the nature of its duties, its head is the head of the Cabinet, the nearest and most trusted adviser of the President. If the Secretary of State first and other Cabinet officers afterward are authorized by law to act as President in turn, the law should leave the execution of the duties of the Presidential office in the hands of the Secretary of State until some substantial reason appears for transferring these duties and powers to another officer.

Besides, let us remember that if this bill or a similar bill becomes law, Cabinet officers hereafter appointed will, partly at least, be chosen with reference to this law.

If in a Cabinet hereafter constructed it is known beforehand that the Secretary of State first, and the Secretary of the Treasury second, and the Secretary of War third, will be authorized to act as President in case of a vacancy in the office of President and Vice-President, persons will be chosen to fill these respective offices, not merely with reference to their relative fitness to perform the ordinary duties of their respective offices, but partly also with reference to their relative fitness to perform the vast powers and duties of the Presidential office under the trying circumstances of removal, death, resignation, or inability of those who were elected to the office by the people.

It is wise, therefore, to provide that he who is best fitted shall not only take the duty first, but shall continue to discharge it till strong clear reasons arise for transferring it to another.

This reason for objecting to the provision in the bill for the case of disability in an acting President seems to me a strong one. It is not nearly so strong, however, as the one which I will now try to state.

The powers of the Presidency are so vast, the splendor of the office is so captivating to the minds even of the wisest of American statesmen, that the transfer even of the acting Presidency from one man to another ought not to be permitted to depend on a state of fact so hard to define and so hard to ascertain as disability.

Remember that under this bill the term of a Secretary of State and ex officio acting President may last for four years. Consider what state of things might arise out of the ambition and jealousy of members of the Cabinet and their respective political adherents.

Suppose Thomas Jefferson were Secretary of State, as he once was, Suppose that in the same Cabinet Alexander Hamilton were Secretary of the Treasury, as he once was. Suppose Mr. Jefferson comes to act as President by virtue of this law, and has a serious illness which well-nigh prostrates him. What effect would be produced on Mr. Hamilton's performance of his duties and on Mr. Jefferson's performance of his duties and on the relations between them. Mr. Jefferson, however far he might be from ability to perform his Presidential duties, could not call on Mr. Hamilton for assistance, because by so doing he gives away the acting Presidency. Mr. Hamilton has no right to sign his name as Secretary of the Treasury and ex officio acting President merely because Mr. Jefferson wishes him to do so as a temporary accommodation to Mr. Jefferson.

Mr. Hamilton has no right to sign as acting President until the law gives him that right. The law does not give him that right unless Mr. Jefferson be under disability. And if by reason of Mr. Jefferson's disability Mr. Hamilton has the right to sign once as acting President, he has an equal right to act as President for the remainder of the term. Mr. Jefferson is not likely to call for help on the Secretary of the Treasury to any considerable extent. Rather will he allow the duties of his office to go half done or not done at all than to admit his inability to his successor. And this he might do without any conscious lack of disinterestedness or public spirit. For he might persuade himself, as Thomas Jefferson surely would have persuaded himself, that all the inconvenience that the people of this country might suffer from his temporary prostration would be as nothing compared with the public calamity involved in the transfer of the powers and duties of the Presidential office to Alexander Hamilton.

And how would the matter be regarded from Mr. Hamilton's point of view? Mr. Hamilton's point of view might be that of his political adherents. Might not Mr. Hamilton and his political adherents consider Mr. Jefferson's symptoms as truly alarming? Might they not say that the question of Mr. Jefferson's disability must be determined, not by Mr. Jefferson's resolution nor by Mr. Hamilton's delicacy, but by the fact? Might they not say that they had undoubted testimony that Mr. Jefferson was in fact under disability? That Mr. Hamilton was therefore in fact the acting President, and that it was his duty to assume the duties attached to the position? This, too, might be said and thought by Mr. Hamilton himself without any conscious lack of disinterestedness or public spirit, for he might persuade himself that as the law, enacted under the Constitution, had made him acting President without his act and independent of his volition, as Mr. Jefferson was therefore incapable under the law of performing any valid act thereafter as acting President, it was in the interest of the people that the powers and duties of the Presidential office should be immediately assumed by the only man who under the law was capable of performing any valid act as acting President, namely, himself, and that no false delicacy of his own ought to stand in the way.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the very difficulty suggested by him would not exist or does not exist under the law as it stands and applies to the present instance to even a greater extent then it would exist under the proposed law?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I need not admit nor deny that, Mr. Speaker, because my intention is when I have got a little further on in my speech to suggest an amendment to this bill by which that difficulty will be, I think, overcome.

Can it be said, Mr. Speaker, that this condition of things could not arise? Can it be said that intelligent men could not take sides on the question whether a public man is or is not under disability?

Have we not now living among us an American statesman who has recently given evidence of a high degree of mental vigor in a letter to yourself on the subject of coast defenses as to whom half of the newspaper men in the country claim that he has been under total disability for several years, while the other half unite in declaring that his mental condition is considerably above the normal level of the average American statesman?

Suppose another thing. Suppose Mr. Hamilton, during Mr. Jefferson's assumed disability, actually begins to act as President and continues so to act to the end of the term. Mr. Jefferson protests, but his protests are disregarded. It would make no difference perhaps whether he protested or not. He might even assent and it would make no difference, for the law does not give Mr. Jefferson the right to make Mr. Hamilton an acting President by acquiescence. The question after all is a question of fact. It is the question whether Mr. Jefferson was in fact under disability. If he was, then all Mr. Hamilton's acts thereafter are valid. If he was not, then all Mr. Hamilton's acts thereafter are invalid. And the validity or invalidity of all the official acts of the Executive of the United States for a term of years would turn perhaps on the degree of severity with which Mr. Jefferson during three weeks suffered from a lung fever.

Whatever evils there are inseparable from the uncertainty attending the question of disability in an acting President they should be reduced to a minimum. They can be reduced to a minimum by giving precisely the same legal effect to disability in an acting President which the Constitution gives to disability in a President or Vice-President. The powers and duties surrendered because of disability should be resumed when the disability is removed.

This is the first objection to the pending bill. The remedy which I propose is as follows: Strike out of the first section the word "inability" wherever it occurs in connection with a Cabinet officer and insert the following as section 2 of the bill: "In case of inability to perform the powers and duties of the office of President existing in any of the persons named herein during any part of the time during which he would be authorized, save for such inability, to act as President, the person who in case of his removal, death, or resignation would be authorized to act as President shall act as President until the disability named in this section shall cease."

I wish now to state the second objection to the bill and the remedy which I would propose.

There is no provision for a speedy election by the people through the electors to fill a vacancy in the offices of President and Vice-President. The provisions of existing law on the subject, which have stood for about ninety-four years, are repealed by the pending bill. Two reasons have been given for this radical departure from the ancient settled policy of the Republic.

First, it is said that there is no warrant in the Constitution for an election of President and Vice-President before the lapse of four years from the last election.

Of this theory of the Constitution it may at least be said that it is a novel one. It has not been seriously proposed or even deliberately stated until after the present Congress had been some time in session. Even the Senate bill as originally introduced did not contain it.

Mr. CALDWELL. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state that the original bill as introduced into the Senate repealed section 146 of the Revised Statutes, and that it did not repeal sections 147, 148, 149, and 150.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. That is what I say—it only repealed section 146. But I am talking about the existing law for a speedy election. That is contained in sections 147, 148, and 149, and no one thought of repealing them till after the bill had been introduced in the Senate at the present session.

I do not wish here to repeat at length what has been said elsewhere on the subject. I wish, however, to call the attention of the House to one point of the history of the convention which adopted the Constitution which has not been adequately discussed. I refer to the change made in giving its final shape to that clause of the Constitution involved in this discussion. When Mr. Randolph brought in his proposition to provide for the case of a vacancy in the offices of President and Vice-President it was in the following form: "The Legislature may declare by law what officer of the United States shall act as President in case of the death, resignation, or disability of the President and Vice-President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the time of electing a President shall arrive."

Now, I wish the House to consider that those who maintain the theory that a speedy election of President and Vice-President can not be by law provided for the case of a vacancy ought to give some reason why the Federal convention found it necessary to make any change whatever in Mr. Randolph's proposition. Their theory is that the sole power that Congress has in this matter is to declare what officer shall act in the interim. If that was indeed the purpose of the convention why was not Mr. Randolph's proposition adopted without the change of a single word? It expresses the idea as well as it could be expressed in words. It is clear, full, and precise. Its meaning can not be mistaken. It is beyond the reach of ingenious misinterpretation. Yet the convention amended it on the motion of Mr. Madison. Mr. Madison declared that if the foregoing propositions of Mr. Randolph were adopted it would prevent an intermediate election of President. That is to say, Mr. Madison objected to Mr. Randolph's proposition for the reason that if adopted it would make the Constitution mean what it is now for the first time contended the Constitution does mean, namely, that no intermediate election of President can be had.

Mr. Madison did not wish the Constitution to convey that idea. Therefore he proposed that it be changed, and it was changed by the convention and evidently for the purpose stated. How can it be contended now that the Constitution expresses a certain idea when the convention amended the draught for the express purpose of not conveying that idea?

The words "until the time for electing a President shall arrive" were stricken out, and the words "until a President shall be elected" were inserted.

But this was not the only change. If this had been all the proposition would have read thus: "The Legislature may by law declare what officer of the United States shall act as President" (in the case provided for) "until a President shall be elected."

This was not enough. It did preclude the theory that the ad interim administration must necessarily last until the end of the term, but it did not clearly confer upon Congress the power to provide for an intermediate election of President and Vice-President. Accordingly, the other amendment was made which brought the Constitution in this regard to the form in which it stands to-day. These words were inserted:

The Congress may by law provide for the case of the removal, death, resignation, or disability of the President and Vice-President.

This covered the whole ground. Congress may by law provide for a case which may be a case of vacancy in the Presidential office. How can such a case be provided for? Two steps are necessary. First, provide a mode of filling the vacancy; secondly, provide a mode of administering the office in the interval which must elapse before the vacancy can be filled. Nothing short of this is "provision for the case;" nothing short of this was intended by the Federal convention.

It may be said that the substance of Mr. Randolph's proposition was retained as a part of the Constitution. True; it was necessary as a limitation upon the power of Congress. Without it Congress might by law provide for an intermediate election, and might in the interim intrust the administration of the office to any one in its discretion, even to the governor of a State, as some members of the convention wished, or to some person not holding any office at all. With it the power of Congress to provide for an intermediate election was not in the least affected, but the power of Congress to declare who should administer the office in the interim was confined to officers, and, as it is usually construed, officers of the United States.

This construction gives a meaning to each part of the clause of the Constitution now in question. The opposite theory implies that the Federal convention marred the clear concise elegance of Mr. Randolph's proposition merely to lengthen out the sound. Those who like myself regard the Constitution of the United States as a model of pure and undefiled English will not readily subscribe to this theory.

I have examined all the volumes of Elliott's Debates to ascertain whether this part of the Constitution was discussed in any of the State conventions. The only reference to it that fell under my eye was in a colloquy between Mr. George Mason and Mr. Madison in the Virginia convention. Mr. Mason, who was one of the ablest men of the time, as he was one of the ablest opponents of the new Constitution, expressed a cautious doubt whether an intermediate election could be had, and he stated it as an objection to the Constitution. Mr. Madison immediately rose and declared positively that Mr. Mason was mistaken, and that in case of a vacancy in the office of President and Vice-President a new President would immediately be elected. Mr. Mason, though he strenuously resisted every other position that Mr. Madison took, made no answer to this.

I wish to refer to one circumstance connected with the statute of 1792 which is still on the statute-book, and which provides for an intermediate election in case of a vacancy. It is said that the frame of this statute was somewhat affected by jealousy of Mr. Jefferson which then prevailed in the Senate and House. This is true. It is probable that but for this jealousy the Secretary of State would have been the ad interim acting President instead of the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House. But this does not affect the weight of the authority of this statute in favor of the power of Congress to provide for an intermediate election. On the contrary, if there had been any doubt of the power and duty of Congress to provide such an intermediate election, jealousy of Mr. Jefferson would have kept such a provision out of the bill.

An intermediate election was, as things then stood, directly in the line of Mr. Jefferson's political ambition. Washington and Adams were President and Vice-President, and were reasonably certain of being re-elected for another four years. The case contemplated by the statute was the removal, death, or resignation of Washington and Adams. If Washington and Adams were out of the way Mr. Jefferson was reasonably certain to be chosen President at the next ensuing election. A provision for a speedy election was in his interest. His enemies in Congress, had there been any decent show of opinion against the right and duty of Congress to provide for a speedy election, would have kept this provision out of the statute and thereby delayed the gratification of his ambition.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. DIBBLE. I desire to ask the gentleman, as he has obviously studied this question very carefully, if he finds that the statute as it stands in the statute-book provides for an election in case of inability or disability?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The contingency which calls into exercise the powers of Congress consists of four branches: death, removal, resignation, or disability. Three of those go in one category, because either of them creates a vacancy. The other goes into another category, because it does not create a vacancy. Congress was authorized to provide for the case. It could not provide for a case in which there was no vacancy by proposing a mode of filling a vacancy which did not exist. Therefore that provision of the Constitution authorizes Congress to proceed by all appropriate means to fill the vacancy if a vacancy there should be, and in that case and also in the fourth case—disability without vacancy—to provide simply for an ad interim administration, since that was the only thing necessary to be done.

Mr. DIBBLE. Then I understand the gentleman from Illinois to say that in case of disability or inability there is no provision in the present law for a special election.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I intended to express no opinion upon that subject. I never studied it, never had occasion to do so. But it is said that while an intermediate election may not be unconstitutional, it is at least inexpedient; that it disturbs the periodicity of the frame of our Government; that it interrupts the synchronism of the Presidential terms with the terms of Congress. I do not care to argue this, because it has been much discussed. I wish simply to show to what extent this would be the effect of the existing law and to propose a remedy. Under the existing law a Presidential election to fill a vacancy might occur in any year. It might occur in an odd-numbered year. If it did occur in such a year, it would in fact to some extent disturb the periodicity of our frame of government and the synchronism of the Presidential and the Congressional terms. In each four years there would be three national elections, one Presidential and two Congressional, but if the intermediate election happened to fall in an even-numbered year, then the number of national elections in each four years would not be increased, the periodicity of our frame of government would not be disturbed, and the synchronism of the Presidential and Congressional term would not be destroyed, and the remedy I would propose is to provide that an intermediate election of President and Vice-President shall always fall on an even-numbered year.

The amendment which I would propose, and it would be also a change of an existing section of the Revised Statutes, is as follows:

Amend section 148 of the Revised Statutes so that it would read as follows:

"SEC. 148. The notification shall specify that electors of a President and Vice President of the United States shall be appointed or chosen in the several States as follows:

"First. If there shall be the space of thirty days yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, and if the term for which the President and Vice-President last chosen were elected will not expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing said next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, such notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen on said next ensuing day established by law for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress.

"Second. If there shall not be the space of thirty days yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, or if the term for which the President and Vice-President last chosen were elected will expire either on the 3d day of March next ensuing the date of such notification or on the 3d of March next ensuing said next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, the notification shall not specify that electors are to be appointed or chosen."

The effect of this amendment would be that if the vacancy occurred early in the Presidential term it would be filled at the next ensuing Congressional election. If it occurred late in the Presidential term, it would not be filled until the next regular Presidential election. The new administration would always begin with the expiration of a Congressional term, as it does now. The new system of Presidential elections would adjust itself as accurately to the existing framework of State elections as the present system does; and all the objections which have been made to a speedy election on the ground of inconvenience and confusion would vanish utterly.

Mr. Speaker, two amendments which I have prepared I will not read, but will send to the desk, that they may be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I will ask, Mr. Speaker, whether it is in order to have these two amendments now considered as pending?

The SPEAKER. The present occupant of the Chair (having been out of the chair for some time during the day) is advised that a substitute and also an amendment to the original text are pending. An amendment to the substitute would be in order, and also an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Well, I will only ask that these amendments be printed in the RECORD, so that members may read them. It may be that I shall get an opportunity to offer them.

The SPEAKER. They will be printed in the RECORD if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The amendments of Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, are as follows:

Strike out section 1 of the bill and insert the following as sections 1 and 2:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President of the United States, the Secretary of State; or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, or resignation, then the Secretary of the Treasury; or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, or resignation, then the Secretary of War; or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, or resignation, then the Attorney-General; or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, or resignation, then the Postmaster-General; or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, or resignation, then the Secretary of the Navy; or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, or resignation, then the Secretary of the Interior shall act as President until the disability of the President or Vice-President be removed or a President shall be elected: Provided, That whenever the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States shall devolve upon any of the persons named herein, if Congress be not then in session, or if it would not meet in accordance with law within twenty days thereafter, it shall be the duty of the person upon whom said powers and duties shall devolve to issue a proclamation convening Congress in extraordinary session, giving twenty days' notice of the time of meeting.

"SEC. 2. That in case of inability to discharge the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States existing in any of the persons named herein during any part of the time during which he would, save for such inability, be authorized to act as President, the person who, in case of his removal, death, or resignation, would be authorized to act as President, shall act as President until the inability named in this section shall cease."

Strike out from section 3 the words "one hundred and forty-seven, one hundred and forty-eight, and one hundred and forty-nine."

Add the following as an additional section:

"SEC. 5. That section 148 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:

"'SEC. 148. The notification shall specify that electors of a President and Vice-President of the United States shall be appointed or chosen in the several States as follows:

"'First. If there shall be the space of thirty days yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, and if the term for which the President and Vice-President last chosen were elected will not expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing said next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, such notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen on said next ensuing day established by law for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress.

"'Second. If there shall not be the space of thirty days yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, or if the term for which the President and Vice-President last chosen were elected will expire either on the 3d day of March next ensuing the date of such notification or on the 3d day of March next ensuing said next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, the notification shall not specify that electors are to be appointed or chosen.'"

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I yield the residue of my time to my colleague [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to believe that no partisan consideration will influence any vote in this House upon the pending proposition. But I am persuaded that if the condition of affairs existing to-day were different, if the presiding officer of the Senate of the United States were of the same party as the Executive of the United States, there would not now be this hot haste to amend a law that has been in force for ninety-four years. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the only real reason offered upon the floor of this House for the passage of the pending bill is the assumption that the party in power in the executive branch of the Government has the constitutional right to continue in control of that department for the term of four years in any event. All the arguments in favor of the passage of this bill hinge about the single proposition that the people, having declared a certain party shall hold the executive office, have a right to have that office continued in one particular party for four years, and therefore we must change the law of succession, and provide that in case of a vacancy officers appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate shall one after another during that time fill the executive office.

The argument in favor of having no intermediate election is based upon the same proposition. An intermediate election might change the political complexion of the Government, and therefore an intermediate election provided for in the Constitution is to be legislated away. All the arguments urged at this late day to the effect that the present statute is in violation of the Constitution are mustered up to justify a violation of the Constitution, a change of custom, so as to project an administration in every event across the period of four years.

Ninety-four years ago a Congress fresh from the discussion of a new Constitution passed the law which has stood unchallenged and unquestioned through all the intervening period; and there does not exist to-day as demanding a change any different condition from that which has existed during all these years. Remembering who enacted this statute, the fact that it has remained upon the statute-books is persuasive proof that it is in accordance with the Constitution; and while, as we grow older as a nation, and wiser, I trust, we have a right to reform and ought to reform any law that may call for amendment, we ought not to pass hastily, in order to meet a political exigency, a statute so crude, so objectionable, as this one appears to be and so uncertain in its interpretation.

It is said that the old law, because it provides that the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall be in the line of succession, is unconstitutional, upon the ground that these officers are not officers of the United States.

Gentlemen forget that the original proposition in the constitutional convention contained the words "officers of the United States," and after the suggestion of a member of the convention that Congress ought not to be limited to that class of officers, the words "of the United States" were omitted by the committee of revision. So that judging, as all courts must judge, from the discussion which then took place, it was not the intention of the Constitution to limit Congress to officers of the United States.

But if such was the intention, the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House are officers provided for in the Constitution itself. They exercise no other than Federal functions. The members of the Senate and of the House of Representatives are such by virtue of the Constitution of the United States. They assemble to make laws for the United States, not for the separate States. They constitute the legislative branch of the General Government, and if the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, as well as Senators and Representatives themselves, are not Federal officers, there is no legislative branch of the National Government. Yet, because of a political decision once rendered to the contrary effect in the Senate of the United States, we are to disregard the contemporaneous construction of the Constitution by a Congress assembled so early after its adoption; we are to disregard a law coming down to us unchallenged and unquestioned through ninety-four years; we are to disregard the judgment of the best lawyers that ever sat in the Senate of the United States; and we are to disregard the construction given by courts in collateral proceedings.

The power of the United States stands around the polls whenever a member of Congress is elected. The power of the United States reaches out and punishes the violator of the law when a Congressman is elected. A Senator or Representative has no State functions. He is recognized by no State constitution or statute; his official existence is only and solely by virtue of the Constitution of the United States. The startling admission made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL] who opened this discussion that under the bill proposed it is possible in the United States for one administration to be projected over four years after its term has expired ought to cause every gentleman here to hesitate before voting for this proposition. In case, admits the gentleman, the President and Vice-President elect shall die between the declaration of their election and the 4th day of March following, then the Secretary of State of the administration going out of power becomes President under this law for another four years. Where, now, is the reason for this bill to secure to one political party four years of life and in the same bill to secure to the same party four years more of life, in opposition, it may be, to the voice of the people; in opposition to the theory of the Government established by our fathers; in opposition to the peace and good order of the people? Never before in the history of legislation was presented to the American people such temptation to crime, such temptation to bring on anarchy, such temptation to revolution, as is presented in the bill as admitted by the gentleman who opened this discussion.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me inquire whether the gentleman agrees with the gentleman from Tennessee in his construction of the provisions of this bill?

Mr. ROWELL. I exactly agree with the gentleman from Tennessee that such will be the construction if this bill shall ever become a law. The term of the President terminates on the 4th of March, but his Cabinet ministers continue in office until such time as they may be removed or shall resign. After the Presidential office has terminated, therefore, there are a Secretary of State and other Cabinet ministers still holding place and capable of taking the succession. The Secretary of State will immediately enter upon his duties as President and will continue in office for four long years. Now, something ought to be done to correct this bill before we vote on it finally in order to prevent any such danger; and I do not believe there is any man on the floor of the House on either side who desires to perpetrate so great a crime.

There are other matters connected with this bill which ought to be noticed. In case the Secretary of State becomes President, does each one of the Cabinet ministers acting at the time he assumes office retain the succession, or is it in the power of the Secretary of State, who has become President, to turn each and every one of them out and set up a new Cabinet, with a new line of succession of his own choice? If he may not turn them out, then he may not select the officers who shall constitute his political family. If he may turn them out, then it is in his power to select the man who may succeed him in office!

We have an absolute provision for the succession now. It can never fail unless the Senate fails to do its duty. We have a second succession which can never fail except once in two years, and that from the 4th of March until the meeting of Congress. We have also a provision which will allow no failure of succession, because there will always be a President of the Senate and always a Speaker of the House of Representatives after it assembles. There is no danger because of a failure to have an officer and to continue to have an officer to fill the office in case of vacancy.

There is no exigency, Mr. Speaker, pressing upon this House to pass such a law; crude, undigested; so full of uncertainties; so suggestive of objection and so provocative of revolution. I would, therefore, like to see some amendment made to perfect it. I have no objection to having an election to fill a vacancy postponed. I believe it is within the constitutional power of Congress to set the day of election further off than twenty or thirty days, possibly down to the next election

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DIBBLE obtained the floor.

Mr. BLAND. If the gentleman will yield to me I will move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DIBBLE. I am willing to yield for that purpose provided it does not take me off the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has been recognized and will have the floor the next time the consideration of this question is resumed.

Mr. CALDWELL. I wish to state for the information of the House that it is probable the Committee on Claims will want to-morrow, as there is little private business yet prepared for consideration. The intention is to resume the consideration of this bill, and I give notice to gentlemen who wish to address the House on the subject that it is my intention to call the previous question and have the matter disposed of before the adjournment.

Mr. BLAND. I insist on the motion that the House adjourn.

Mr. TUCKER. Permit me first to say to my friend from Tennessee that, as to the Private Calendar to-morrow, there are two bills upon it, possibly three, which will not probably take more than two or three minutes each to dispose of, as they are bills simply for the removal of political disabilities.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled Senate bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 128) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind.; and

A bill (S. 602) to legalize the election of the Territorial Legislative Assembly of Wyoming.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House papers presented in the Forty-eighth Congress in the claim of Mathilda Victor, there being no adverse report.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, it is suggested to me that we had better obtain unanimous consent now to go on with the debate to-morrow on the Presidential succession bill after the private business is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

EVENING SESSION FOR PENSION AND OTHER BILLS.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask the attention of the House and the gentleman from Tennessee for a moment while I make a brief statement preparatory to presenting a resolution and asking its adoption. I have examined the Private Calendar, and discover that nearly all the bills on that Calendar have been reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions; all, in fact, with the exception of three or four. That committee desires an order such as has been customary heretofore for Friday evening sessions. Pending the motion to adjourn, therefore, I ask unanimous consent to offer this resolution, which is the usual order, adding, however, bills from the Committee on the Judiciary for the removal of political disabilities.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection to its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on each Friday the House shall take a recess from 5 o'clock p. m. until 7.30 p. m., at which evening sessions private bills reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills reported from the Judiciary Committee to remove political disabilities only shall be considered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. MATSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL EMPLOYÉS IN DOCUMENT-ROOM.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, by unanimous consent, introduced a resolution providing for additional employés in the House document-room; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDEN. Has the consent been given that was asked for by the gentleman from Tennessee to continue the discussion of this Presidential bill to-morrow after the private business is disposed of?

The SPEAKER. It has been given.

The motion of Mr. BLAND was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Papers in the case of Mrs. Ellen S. Tollman, an army nurse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of citizens of Washington city, asking for the extension of the Capital, North O Street and South Washington Railway—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of James E. Rose, administrator Malitty Rose, deceased, to recover certain arrears of pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition and papers relating thereto of Folkes & Winston and others, of Lynchburg, Va., for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BARNES: Memorial of the heirs of Col. James Mayson, praying compensation for the services of said Mayson during the Revolutionary war—to the same committee.

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Resolutions adopted by a convention of citizens of North Louisiana, memorializing Congress to remove the raft in Bayou Pierre, Louisiana—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BLAND: Papers to accompany bill for relief of J. W. McClurg—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CABELL: Petition of citizens of Carroll and Grayson Counties, Virginia, for the improvement of New River between lead mines, in Wythe County, and the mouth of Wilson, in Grayson County, Virginia—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of citizens of Carroll and Grayson Counties, Virginia, praying the improvement of New River between the lead mines, in Wythe County, and the mouth of Wilson, in Grayson County, Virginia—to the same committee.

By Mr. DOCKERY: Petition asking that the pension of John P. Brinegar be increased—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROUT: Petition of George R. Harlow, for rating by Pension Office of disability in addition to that for loss of leg or arm—to the same committee.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Memorial from soldiers of the late war now residing in Iowa, praying for the allowance of 160 acres of land as a homestead to soldiers and sailors of the late war—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LORE: Petition of John J. Coughlin, for services rendered under the Architect of the Capitol—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NELSON: Petition of D. H. Robbins, relative to the Mille Lac reservation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, petition of Gustave H. Beaulieu, an Indian—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, petition of C. H. Beaulieu, relative to the license of traders of mixed blood among the Indians, &c.—to the same committee.

Also, petition of Charles E. Molen—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Petition of William S. Downs; of John Jett; of George Chrisman, executor; of Henry W. Dean, and of Jonathan Headley, asking the reference of their several claims to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RANNEY: Petition of Isaiah Rich & Co. and others, pro-

By Mr. FULLER: Of Adam Martin and others, of Floyd, Iowa.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: Of 64 citizens of Branch County, Michigan.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 15, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Rev. S. K. Cox, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, laid before the House Senate bills of the following titles; which were severally read twice and referred as follows, namely:

A bill (S. 85) for the relief of B. Jennings—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 87) for the relief of Thomas B. Miller, of Washington Territory—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 163) releasing the estate of the late Frank Soulé, late collector of internal revenue for the first district of the State of California, and his sureties on his official bond—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 178) for the relief of Ida A. Richardson, Caroline A. Urquhart, and Cora A. Slocomb, as heirs at law of Cora A. Slocomb, deceased, Ida A Richardson, and Caroline Augusta Urquhart—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 193) for the relief of John Hollins McBlair—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 214) for the relief of Oscar Eastmond and James W. Atwill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 216) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish certificates of discharge to certain members of the Missouri Home Guard—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 218) to confirm the title to certain lands in Platt County, Missouri, and authorize patents to issue thereof to Kinsey B. Cecil—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (S. 221) for the relief of Alex. Smiley—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 296) for the relief of the legal representative of John Hatfield, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (S. 556) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 767) for the relief of John Leathers—to the Committee on Claims.

Joint resolution (S. 19) directing copies of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina to be furnished to said State—to the Committee of Military Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CUTCHEON, by unanimous consent leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers filed in the case of Andrew Lafferty, no report having been made thereon.

SUBSIDIARY COIN.

Mr. BLAND, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3847) to repeal so much of the act of June 9, 1879, as provides for the exchange and redemption of subsidiary coin; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has marked on the back of the bill a reference to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The Chair is inclined to think under the rules of the House it would go to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BLAND. Similar measures have been considered heretofore by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be referred to that committee.

There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

H. P. M'FARLIN.

Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3848) for the relief of H. P. McFarlin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EXTRA PAY FOR DISCHARGED EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Accounts a joint resolution to allow discharged employés a month's extra pay.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report, after which the Chair will ask for objections, unless it be a privileged report.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is not a privileged report.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

Your committee, to whom was referred the following joint resolution:

"Resolved, &c., That all officers and employés of the House who were employed on the 7th day of December, 1885, and who have ceased, or shall prior to the 1st day of February, 1886, cease, to be so employed, shall be paid a sum equal to one month's pay at the same rate they were severally receiving on the 7th day of December, 1885; and an amount sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be immediately available"— respectfully report the following substitute, and ask its adoption:

"Resolved, &c., That all officers and employés of the House, including E. C. Fields, clerk to the Committee on Accounts of the Forty-eighth Congress, who were employed on the 7th day of December, 1885, and who have ceased, or shall before the 1st day of February, 1886, cease, to be so employed, shall be paid a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate they were severally receiving on the 7th day of December, 1885; and an amount sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the same to be immediately available."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 75) reported as a substitute was read a first and second time, and ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 51, noes 15.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. A quorum has not voted. Gentlemen seem to be diffident on this question for some reason. We might as well have the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were—ayes 32, noes 87; the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote.

Mr. DOCKERY. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement with reference to the resolution.

Mr. MILLS. I ask that the resolution be again reported.

The joint resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] asks unanimous consent to make a brief statement. Is there objection?

Mr. REAGAN. If permission be granted to reply I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks like consent for a brief reply. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WISE. I desire to make an inquiry. Is it in order to move an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The resolution has passed the stage of amendment, having been engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DOCKERY. This is the usual resolution adopted at the beginning of each session, as I understand it. As an original proposition, I am frank to say I would not favor any such resolution. I believe the salaries of the employés of this House ought to be fixed. I think the employés accept the position with the understanding they are to have certain fixed salaries, and I think they ought to be content with those salaries. But this is a custom which has grown up with years and has almost become an unwritten law. Perhaps it might be better honored in the breach than in the observance. But it is the custom that has prevailed in former Congresses, it is a custom of which the discharged employés desire to avail themselves, and, in obedience to what we regard as the unwritten law of the House, the Committee on Accounts has considered this proposition and reported it back with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. How many employés does this resolution cover?

Mr. DOCKERY. I can not say, because the resolution, to a certain extent, is indefinite. It is the usual resolution. It provides that all employés discharged prior to the 1st of February next shall receive an extra month's pay.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Can the gentleman tell the House about how much it will cost?

Mr. DOCKERY. I can not, because I do not know how many employés will be discharged prior to the date mentioned in the resolution. I only know that it is the customary resolution, and that if it were presented as an original proposition I would be against it; but, as it is the customary resolution, I shall support it, as directed by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question, if he will permit.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. Were not these employés who are provided for in this resolution included in a resolution which was passed at the end of the last session of Congress giving an extra month's pay.

Mr. DOCKERY. No, sir.

Mr. HEPBURN. Are you sure of that?

Mr. DOCKERY. I think I am correct in that.

Mr. HEPBURN. We did pass such a resolution, did we not, at the end of the Forty-eighth Congress, giving the employés of the House a month's extra pay?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; those who were then on the roll.

Mr. HEPBURN. Now are not some of these gentlemen who are included in this resolution employés who were on the roll at that time, and were they not beneficiaries of the resolution passed at the end of the last Congress?

Mr. DOCKERY. I suppose so.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then this resolution would give them another month's pay, making two months' extra pay within the year.

Mr. DOCKERY. The resolution to which the gentleman refers, as I understood it, gave the extra month's pay to all the employés of the House, both annual and session. This resolution applies only to the annual employés who are discharged before the 1st of February.

Mr. HEPBURN. But it gives all of those employés two month's extra pay in the year, does it not?

Mr. DOCKERY. I suppose that would be the effect of it. It is a thing that has always been done on such occasions.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I have on former occasions objected to the passage of resolutions like this. I know it is regarded as an ungracious thing in any member to refuse to vote money to anybody who wants it from the Government. I know, too, from experience and observation here, that we are exceedingly liberal when we are voting away other people's money. If we were dealing with our own employés and taking the money out of our own pockets we would not think of giving it away in this manner, nor would it be asked for or expected. But as it is the Government, as there is no one to take care of the Government because everybody is taking care of the private applicants for money, of course we give it. We forget that the Government is not a reservoir of money. We forget that this money which we vote away is drawn from the people by taxation, and comes from the hard earnings of laboring men at home, and women, too, who do not get half as much pay as the officers of this House receive. We seem to forget that we have a contract with these employés by law, by which we undertake to pay them more than men of like capacity can get in private employments. We have given these men already, or a portion of them, one month's extra pay, and now it is proposed to give them a second month's extra pay, and in addition to that, the men appointed at the beginning of this Congress who have been discharged or may be discharged, for inefficiency or any other cause, before the day named, are to have a month's extra pay.

This, Mr. Speaker, is all wrong. Will the time never come when the representatives of the American people can look to questions of economy and to the preservation of the public funds from waste and squandering in this way? It seems that we can never reach the time or the occasion when we are prepared to take care of the people and protect them from the load of taxation which is put upon them for every imaginable subject. I make these remarks with no hope of success in resisting the passage of this resolution, but in the discharge of a duty which I feel I owe to my constituents and the country.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now proceed to call the roll.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I ask unanimous consent to say a few words.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope there will be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Speaker, in the Forty-seventh Congress it was stated to the House that it had been the custom to vote our employés one month's extra pay. The Republicans here, recollecting that the office-holders in the Forty-sixth Congress were Democrats, gracefully yielded to the demand then made, though not without many a protest. When the Forty-seventh Congress had ended and the Forty-eighth came in, it was claimed on the part of the Republicans that a like provision should in fairness be made, and I recollect that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES], speaking in opposition to voices raised on the Democratic side, remarked then that it would be violative of propriety and good faith for the Democrats to resist the proposition then made, but that the occasion was a proper one for giving notice that in the next Congress the whole matter should be cut off.

It turns out that we have now another Democratic House. The great mass of the employés in this House were employés in the last Congress, and as such received their one month's extra pay. So that if we now pass this resolution we shall give to many of these men two months' extra pay. Both sides being now equal, and if there is any such thing as courtesy in this matter—courtesy having been shown on both sides of the House—the present is a proper time to inaugurate a new and correct order of things. Let us pay men for the time they have actually been employed and stop this abuse.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I would ask the gentleman whether the object of this resolution is not simply to enable these men who have come here in the performance of public duty and been discharged without any fault of theirs to have means enough to get home?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I suppose these gentlemen are no worse off than other laboring men in this country. They knew when they came here that they were liable to be discharged.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Would he bring men miles away from their homes to enter his employ under the impression that they were to be employed for a length of time and then discharge them after one month, leaving them no money to get home?

Mr. PETTIBONE. If I had made a contract to employ a person for a certain length of time, I answer no; but if I had made a contract with him that he was liable to be discharged at any time, then I say yes.

Gentlemen say that the voting of this extra pay has grown into an almost immemorial usage. I have read about some goose-grease in Russia which ran a hundred years at an annual charge because a certain doctor on one occasion ordered an ounce for a patient. I think that the practice which has grown up is all wrong, and now is the time to end this miserable business.

Mr. BLAND. Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him whether it is not true that the Forty-third Congress made this provision for a month's extra pay——

Mr. PETTIBONE. I was not here in the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. BLOUNT. And whether that example was not followed by the Republicans in the Forty-seventh Congress?

Mr. PETTIBONE. My answer to the gentleman is that I do not care how that matter may be. I put it now to the common sense of this House whether this is not a proper time to end the abuse?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not desire to go into the merits of the question; but as the gentleman is claiming some little credit for his party, I thought he had better look at the record.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask unanimous consent at this time that this resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Accounts.

Several members objected.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Is not a motion to recommit now in order?

The SPEAKER. It is if the order for the yeas and nays shall be reconsidered by the House and the demand withdrawn or refused.

Mr. DOCKERY. Then I move to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. BLAND. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. DOCKERY. I now move to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the yeas and nays is still pending. The motion to reconsider having been agreed to, the question recurs on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. DOCKERY. Can I not move now to recommit?

The SPEAKER. The demand for the yeas and nays has not been withdrawn. The question recurs on ordering the yeas and nays.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 51.

The SPEAKER. The vote in favor of ordering the yeas and nays is more than one-fifth of any vote taken during to-day. Unless a count of the other side be insisted upon, the yeas and nays will be considered as ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 70, nays 191, not voting 63; as follows:

So the resolution was rejected.

During the roll-call,

Mr. DIBBLE said: My colleague Mr. DARGAN is absent on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he has leave of absence.

Mr. BRAGG. My colleague Mr. RANKIN is confined to his room by reason of sickness.

On motion of Mr. DOCKERY, by unanimous consent the reading of the roll-call was dispensed with.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask to have my vote recorded.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name was called.

Mr. LAWLER. No; I was absent when my name was called.

The SPEAKER. There is a rule of the House which expressly forbids the Chair entertaining any request for unanimous consent if the member was not present when his name was called. But the custom has been when a gentleman rose and said he was in his seat, but failed to hear his name called, to allow him to record his vote.

Mr. LAWLER. I was in the Chamber at the time the vote was being called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the request of the gentleman, but he can state how he would have voted and that will be entered in the RECORD.

Mr. LAWLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to be permitted to record my vote.

The SPEAKER. But the rule prohibits the Chair from entertaining a request for unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. LAWLER. Then I will state, Mr. Speaker, that I would have voted "ay" on this question.

The pairs were then announced as follows from the Clerk's desk:

Mr. HENLEY with Mr. PAYSON, for this day.

Mr. HARRIS with Mr. CULBERSON, on this vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. KETCHAM, for to-day.

Mr. MULLER with Mr. LAIRD, for this day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSENGER FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS COMMITTEE.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be, and he is hereby, requested to employ a messenger for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors at a salary of $——, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

PAYMENT OF INTEREST-BEARING DEBT.

Mr. TARSNEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to inform the House at the earliest practical moment of the amount of moneys in the Treasury that can be legally applied to the payment of bonds, or any other interest-bearing debt of the United States, and if there be any such moneys in the Treasury legally applicable to the payment of the obligations aforesaid, why the same has not been so applied.

Several members asked consent to introduce bills for reference.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to gentlemen on the floor that on next Monday all the States and Territories will be called for the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions.

Mr. BEACH. I object to the introduction of any more bills or resolutions at this time.

The SPEAKER. There is objection to the request of gentlemen.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

The SPEAKER. That requires a two-thirds vote.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

Mr. SPRINGER. Does this motion dispense also with the second morning hour?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to dispense with that hour.

The SPEAKER. There is no provision in the new rule for dispensing with the second morning hour, and the Chair thinks it can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with it.

The SPEAKER. By clause 5 of Rule XXIV it is provided that this morning hour shall be for the consideration, on the call of committees, of bills reported on a previous day and placed on either the House or the Union Calendar, no provision being made for the consideration of private bills on that call. But under another rule of the House this day is devoted to the consideration exclusively of private business, unless dispensed with.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desired to ask a ruling of the Chair on this point. Friday being devoted to the consideration of private bills, and as under the present rule we have a morning hour, under which second morning hour it is provided that only matters can be called up from the Union or House Calendar, my object is to get a ruling from the Chair as to whether that rule applies to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair simply informed the gentleman that the morning hour for the call of committees for the consideration of bills could not be dispensed with by a simple vote of the House. But the Chair thinks that under the amended rules of the House on Fridays that morning hour can not be had at all, because during that hour bills upon the Union and House Calendars only can be considered; that is to say, bills of a public character; whereas under another rule Friday is specially set apart for the consideration of private business only. If private business for to-day, therefore, be not dispensed with, the Chair thinks the time which on other days is devoted to that morning hour will be devoted to the consideration of private business in the usual way under other rules of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I fully agree with the Chair, and move to dispense with the private business to-day.

The SPEAKER. That can be done by a majority vote under the amended rule.

Mr. SPRINGER. That motion does not include the evening session?

The SPEAKER. It does not; there will be an evening session under a previous order of the House for the consideration of pension bills.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. SPRINGER; and on a division there were—ayes 63, noes 41.

So the motion to dispense with private business was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour for the call of committees having been dispensed with and private business having been dispensed with for to-day, the business now in order is the matter under consideration yesterday, the bill reported from the Select Committee on the Election of President and Vice-President, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 471) to provide for the performance of the duties of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who consider that to make a proper provision for every contingency of vacancy in the Presidential office a constitutional amendment alone would be satisfactory, but I propose to discuss the proposition this morning that the bill now under consideration is a far better statutory provision than the existing law. Under the present law the President pro tempore of the Senate, and if there be none the Speaker of the House of Representatives, shall act as President until the disability is removed or until a President shall be elected; and the present law further provides (not in the case of disabilities, but in the case of vacancy) that there shall be a special election to fill the offices of President and Vice-President. Under the pending bill the officers of the Cabinet, in a certain fixed order, are to act as President; and the pending bill also provides that so much of the statute as relates to a special election be repealed.

The first objection that is apparent to the statute is that it does not comply with the provision of the Constitution requiring the Congress to declare what officer shall act as President, the President pro tempore of the Senate not being an officer of the United States. What is the President pro tempore of the Senate? He is the Senator from his particular State, presiding over the Senate. It has been decided in the Blount case that a Senator is not an officer of the United States. The President pro tempore of the Senate holds the chair by virtue of being a Senator. He takes the oath of office as a Senator. He does not take a special oath as President of the Senate; and the same applies also to the Speaker of this House. When the Nestor of the House administers the oath of office to the Speaker he administers to him an oath as a representative from his particular State. That is his qualification, and then he enters upon the duties of the position.

But, sir, there is a second objection. A member of either House of Congress is incompetent to hold office under the United States during his membership; and if the President pro tempore of the Senate (as has been advocated in this debate) were an officer of the United States in the sense of the Constitution, then a member of the Senate could not hold the office; that is, under Article I, section 6, of the Constitution, which says:

No person holding any office under the United States, shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

Therefore, if the President pro tempore of the Senate be an officer under the United States, the Senator holding that office under that provision of the Constitution would, by going into it, vacate his seat in the Senate, and no longer represent his State on the floor.

The distinction, Mr. Speaker, is again recognized in the Constitution and recognized in a recent amendment. The fourteenth amendment of the Constitution makes the same distinction:

No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or elector of President and Vice-President, or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who having previously taken an oath as a member of Congress or as an officer of the United States, &c.

That is to be found in the third section of the fourteenth amendment, and it recognizes the existence of a distinction between a member of Congress and an officer of the United States.

There is the further objection, Mr. Speaker, that the President pro tempore of the Senate is not a position always filled. And the Constitution, when it says that Congress may declare what officer shall act in the case of disability or vacancy, must recognize the possibility, yea, even probability, of disability or vacancy during a recess of the Senate, and at a time when there may be no such officer as President of the Senate pro tempore in existence. The Congress of the United States in the exercise of that duty of declaration must select an officer who would be in existence whenever the contingency might arise. He must be a continuing officer, and the President pro tempore of the Senate is not such an officer.

But, Mr. Speaker, suppose the contingency should arise, and that there should be in existence at the time a President pro tempore of the Senate, and that, a vacancy occurring in the Presidential office, he should assume its functions and enter upon the discharge of its duties as acting President, what is his position then concerning the Senate? Suppose it is a case of disability; suppose it is a case of disability lasting only three months, for instance, does the President of the Senate vacate his place as Senator and vacate his place as President of the Senate in order to act as President of the United States for the three months and then be turned adrift as soon as the disability is removed?

The President pro tempore of the Senate is merely acting as President ex officio; he is a locum tenens; and the only consistent theory is, that he would be the member of the Senate from a State, the President pro tempore of the Senate, and the acting President of the United States. What arises from such a state of affairs? Why, we have the acting President of the United States sending in appointments to the Senate, and we have him presiding in executive session upon the discussion of those appointments. We have him voting as a Senator in confirmation of his appointments—I will not say in rejection, because that would be stultifying his action. If he does not so vote, then his State, for the time being, is deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

Take another case, already illustrated in our history, as a reason why the President pro tempore of the Senate should not be the succeeding officer. Take the case of impeachment, the impeachment of a President of the United States, with no Vice-President, and with the President pro tempore of the Senate under the act coming next in the succession. He either must violate the principle that no one should be a judge in his own behalf, or he must violate the mandate of the Constitution, equally peremptory, that no State shall be deprived of equal suffrage in the Senate, and that, too, in the gravest of cases—the case of the trial of the President of the United States by impeachment.

But, Mr. Speaker, further, it is in violation of the spirit of the Constitution; it is in violation of the spirit of all of our constitutions. It is true there is not found in the Constitution of the United States express separation of the three departments by a clause providing that the executive, legislative, and judicial functions shall be maintained distinct from each other. We find that clause in the State constitutions. But we find practically and in spirit the same idea in the Constitution of the United States, because in Article I it is stated that all legislative powers shall be vested in one way; in Article II, that the executive power shall be vested in another way; in Article III, that the judicial power shall be vested in another way, recognizing the separation of the three departments of the Government. But that principle is violated whenever the President pro tempore of the Senate or the Speaker of the House of Representatives acts as the President of the United States.

Another objection. The Senate have decided that the President pro tempore of that body is removable at their pleasure; that they can make one President pro tempore to-day, and they can remove him and appoint another to-morrow. Now, it is not for us to discuss in this House of Congress whether that decision of the other House be right or wrong. They are the ultimate tribunal to decide whether it is right or wrong. They choose their own officers, they make their own rules. We have that as a fact.

There is then a vacancy in the office of President. The President pro tempore of the Senate acts as President under the law as it now stands and under the Constitution. There comes a change in the political complexion of the Senate, or for some other reason the Senate, in its pleasure, determines arbitrarily to remove its presiding officer and selects another. Then the President pro tempore of the Senate, acting as President of the United States, on being removed from his office loses the foundation for his executive functions, and the new appointee of the Senate takes the Presidential chair. I will say that to my mind there is no condition of things under any law that has ever been proposed that is as abhorrent to all our views of constitutional government as that the country should be put in a condition of being governed by an oligarchy composed of a majority of one branch of the National Legislature, bringing us exactly into the position of the Republic of Venice under its Doge and its Council of Ten.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as to the matter of special election. The Constitution as a whole does not seem to provide for any special election as it stands to-day.

Take the history of its adoption. When the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States was within a few days of its final adjournment it passed a resolution that the Congress of the Confederation should be notified, and that they should fix the time for the election or the appointment of electors and the time when those electors should cast their votes for President, and also the time when the new Constitution should go into operation. Under that action of the constitutional convention the Congress of 1788 fixed the first Wednesday in March, 1789, as the time when the operation of the new Constitution should begin, which in that year happened to be the 4th of March. The President holding for a term of four years, that circumstance gave the Presidential office its period of termination on the 4th of March in every fourth year; the Senators holding for six years, and being divided into the three classes whose terms of office expired respectively in the second, the fourth, and the sixth year, and the members of the House the second year. Now, while it is true that in the Constitution as originally passed there is no mention of the 4th of March, yet that period has been recognized in the twelfth amendment to the Constitution, in its provision in relation to the failure of the electors to choose a President, devolving the choice of President upon the House of Representatives. The language of that amendment is:

> And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President, whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the 4th of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President.

And so on.

There, Mr. Speaker, is the recognition of that period in the Constitution; there is the recognition of the quadrennial election of the President; and there, in the only provision which is of force to-day in relation to the choice of a President by electors, is recognized the termination of the right of the House of Representatives to make a choice of President on the 4th of March next following the commencement of their exercise of the right.

Mr. Speaker, it occurs to my mind that there are two reasons for that provision. One is that, under the system of the Constitution, that House of Representatives expires on the 4th of March, and this provision is tantamount to saying that if the House fail to make a choice during their official life, then the Vice-President shall act as President. The other reason is, that the Presidential office expires on the same day, and the Vice-President comes in to prevent an interregnum or a hiatus.

Such is the only provision for the election of a President. Gentlemen say that in the discussion of the Constitution in the convention, when Mr. Randolph moved for this power in Congress to declare what officer should act, and to provide that he should act "until the disability be removed or until the time for electing a President shall arrive," that then the language was modified into the expression "until a President be elected;" and they cite the colloquy which took place as evidence of the intent of the convention.

What was the colloquy, Mr. Speaker? Simply this: Here are the fathers of the Constitution meeting in council; they are making the Constitution; it is not yet built up; they are working on one of its parts. An expression is put in that clause which in very terms would exclude the idea of an intermediate or special election. The only change made, according to the colloquy, was to prevent such exclusion, that being the only idea that could be embraced under the expression. It was not a change of the expression "until the period for electing a President shall arrive" into "until a special election," but to make the expression broad enough to cover any case which, in the electoral provisions of the Constitution, might be made by them when they were building it up as a whole. It was designed to leave them liberty of action in the Constitution to put in any provision for a general election or a special election, either or both, as they might deem fit. It did not commit them to a special election by its terms, nor does the colloquy embrace that idea. The point, Mr. Speaker, that I submit is this: that, so far as that clause of the Constitution is concerned, its terms are broad enough to embrace any kind of election. But we must read each part of the Constitution with its context; and if in the Constitution elsewhere we find provision only for a general election—an election for the full term of four years—an election that is to be declared by the House of Representatives in one contingency before the 4th day of March following—and if we do not find in the Constitution any provision for a special election, or for terminating the power of choice of the House on a day other than the 4th of March, then I submit that the expression "until a President shall be elected," which is broad enough to cover either a special or a general election, is confined by the context of the Constitution to such an election as the Constitution in its context provides for.

Now let us take the statute in relation to special elections, by which Congress has assumed to provide for them. Upon that, Mr. Speaker, my first observation is this: Without going into the details of the statute, it provides that in some cases of vacancy an election can take place in an off year; the electors meet on the first Wednesday in December in an off year, when there is neither a Congressional nor a Presidential election, and cast their votes, and the President thus elected and the Vice-President, too—because they can not elect one without electing the other—will be declared elected on the second Wednesday in February following that off year, in the middle of a Congress; giving us, in a certain contingency, this situation: that the President of the United States will come into office in the middle of one Congress, and will be President through the whole of the next Congress and for half of the succeeding Congress; because I do not think any gentleman on this floor will gravely dispute this proposition, that when a President is chosen by electors he is elected for the full term of four years. That is the position into which the Presidential election will be thrown in the off years—either the first off year or the third off year of the Presidential term.

That is one difficulty; but there is still further lack of symmetry in this statute as it stands on the books. In case of the regular election of a President, the term of office of his predecessor terminates on the 4th of March. Although the newly elected President is declared elected on the second Wednesday in February, he takes his office on the 4th of March next succeeding, because until that time his predecessor has not filled out his term. But suppose there comes a special election. On the second Wednesday of February the two Houses meet, the votes are counted, and it is declared that such a one has been elected President and such a one Vice-President of the United States. There is a vacancy; and here is a man who has the full power conferred by the electors of the country, and there is no term to expire that he must wait for. Hence on the second Wednesday in February he comes into the Presidential office, and under the Constitution he holds it for four years. Now, let us follow this matter out to its legitimate conclusion. The term of this officer expires on the second Wednesday of February four years afterward or on the day of the month corresponding with that on which his term began. On that day the Senate and House of Representatives again meet to count the votes of the electors; and it so happens that the electors have failed to confer a majority of the votes on any of the candidates, and the election of the President is thrown into the House and the election of Vice-President into the Senate. On that day the term of the incumbent under the special election expires.

Suppose, Mr. Speaker, the House does not fill the place on that day (and under the Constitution it has until the 4th of March to fill it) who takes the Presidential chair? Suppose on that day the Senate elects a Vice-President. Is there an interregnum? Is there a hiatus? The Vice-President elected on that day goes into office on that day in February. There is no President elected. The Presidential term has expired. There is a Vice-President, and under the Constitution he takes the Presidential chair. But prior to the 4th of March, the time limited in the Constitution, the House under its constitutional authority elects a President of the United States. Does that Vice-President retire and this President elected after him take his seat? These are the questions, Mr. Speaker, which are bound to arise; and there are two chances out of four that they will arise; yea, three chances out of four that they will arise if the statute of 1792 is ever put into practical operation. So that this statute destroys all the symmetry of our electoral system by reason of the possibility in the first place of the Presidential term beginning at the middle of the respective Congress, and again by reason of the certainty of a Presidential term under a special election running from the second Wednesday of February instead of from the 4th of March.

But it has been stated that to abandon this system is unconstitutional. Why, Mr. Speaker, even if there were a provision for a special election, if Congress can say that in a certain contingency the election of electors shall take place within thirty-four days of a given time and in another contingency shall be postponed from one December to another—twelve months; and if Congress may say that if the vacancy should occur in the third year within two months of the first Monday of December, there shall be no election at all, can not Congress say that the election shall be at the time of the next regular election? If they can postpone the election twelve months, can they not postpone it two or three times twelve months? If they can say that when the interval is about five months there shall not be any election, can they not so say in case the interval is twenty-five, or thirty, or forty months?

If Congress, under the Constitution, has the discretion to determine the time of choosing the electors and fixing the same uniform day for them to cast their votes throughout the United States, as is expressly provided in the Constitution, can they not, when they have put upon the books a statute like this, take it off? It is no more unconstitutional to do so than to change the time for the special election provided in the statute as it stands.

It is said that this power to provide for a succession for the remainder of the term, or for a definite period, was not delegated to Congress or to the United States, and that this bill is a usurpation of power retained by the people under the ninth and tenth amendments of the Constitution. Now, Mr. Speaker, let me read those amendments:

ARTICLE IX.

> The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

ARTICLE X.

> The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Now, I contend that all executive Federal power is delegated by Article II, and all legislative Federal power is delegated by Article I. Rights and powers refer to the scope of the executive, legislative, and judicial rights and powers, and not to the officers administering these branches. The right to elect a President is not a reserved right, for it is delegated to electors to be appointed by the States. The power to elect, whether by general election or special election, is delegated to electors; and being a delegated power, it is not reserved. The whole executive power is vested in a President, Vice-President, &c.; therefore the power of the office is not reserved. So these are clearly Federal rights and powers, and the ninth and tenth amendments can have no application.

Besides, Mr. Speaker, the people do not elect the President or Vice-President of the United States. There is no such provision in our Constitution. They are to be elected by electors; and those electors are appointed—by whom? Not by the people.

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors.

So that there is no popular right affected, no popular power infringed. We have seen the operation of that rule of the Constitution in the election of 1876, when Samuel J. Tilden received by nearly a quarter of a million the majority of the people's votes, but the electoral vote by States gave 1 majority to Rutherford B. Hayes over Samuel J. Tilden. Under the Constitution the electors of the several States elected the President by that majority of 1, when the people had given a majority of a quarter of a million of votes in favor of the other candidate. There is no such thing, under our form of government, as the direct election of President by the people.

There are some objections which have been proposed to this bill. There have been suggestions made that possibly a party might be continued in power for an additional four years under certain contingencies against a vote of the people if the candidates chosen by the electors should die before assuming the functions of their offices. Be that as it may, is there anything better in the statute? Suppose that one political party should be in power. Suppose that at the regular Presidential election the other political party should elect a President and Vice-President to go into office on the ensuing 4th of March. Suppose the President and Vice-President elect should both die before the 4th of March. What is the consequence under the present law? Why, if the political complexion of the Senate should be different from that of the persons selected by virtue of the electoral vote the Senate would put in a President pro tempore of the other political party, whichever party it might be.

But there is another contingency. If the President and Vice-President elect should die before the 4th of March there is no provision of law by which either House of Congress shall meet on the 4th of March. They meet in December, and, unless the outgoing President should call a session of the Senate or a session of Congress, there would be a period of nine months absolutely without any provision whatsoever under the present law. Is there anything worse than that? Suppose the outgoing President should convene Congress by proclamation to meet in extra session on the 4th of March, and that there has then arisen by death or disability the contingency of no President or Vice-President elect to take the oath of office. Suppose that one House of Congress was of one political complexion as to its majority, and the other House of Congress was of the other, why, Mr. Speaker, there would be an unseemly scramble on the one hand to get possession of the Presidential chair, and a disposition to filibuster on the other hand to prevent it, both Houses of Congress running a race for the Presidency through the President pro tempore and the Speaker of the House.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, for these reasons there is at least necessity for a change; and while I do not subscribe to the proposition that the measure which is submitted before the House now as it has come over to us from the other House is perfect, or that it supplies every possible contingency, I do consider it is infinitely better than the present law, not looking simply at the present, but looking to any time and any contingency which may arise; and I do so irrespective of party considerations, because they should not enter upon this field. I do submit that the provision that an officer of the executive department should be the locum tenens, should be the acting President, gives certainty to there being an officer to fill the office if it shall become vacant—gives consistency, and will answer about as well as any statute law would answer, until some provision can be made by which the Constitution can be amended.

I am myself in favor of a constitutional amendment in this matter; but I say now, although I had the honor to submit one of the propositions for such amendment, I am wedded to no scheme or system in that regard, so long as the language of the Constitution can be so amended as to be certain, and meet not only the contingencies for which the foresight of our ancestors have provided, but the contingencies which the experience of one hundred years have shown to us, and which were not anticipated by the founders of the Constitution. Our life and our history as a nation have lessons of instruction, and the founders of the Constitution themselves did not once assume that they were completing a perfect work, for they provided for amendments to meet emergencies such as were not fully provided for in their system. Whether the amendment be to elect additional officers, as is proposed in one resolution, whether it be that electors should hold office for four years to fill vacancies in the Presidential or Vice-Presidential office, as the case may be, or any other plan which will give certainty to this matter by an amendment to the Constitution, some measure ought to meet the full support of every one who feels that it is not right, it is not prudent, that the vast interests of this country, which has grown to be a mighty empire, should at any time be imperiled and our Constitution be in danger of overthrow by a scramble for the splendid position of head of these United States.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of accepting this proposition which has come from the other House, taking it as it is, and then going on and, with the united wisdom of the country behind us, providing for such fundamental remedy as will supply the desideratum which now exists in the Constitution of the country.

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Nine minutes.

Mr. DIBBLE. I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I will reserve my time until after the other side has been heard.

Mr. DIBBLE. Very well; then I will reserve the whole time remaining to me for the present.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I have the honor to be a member of the select committee from which this bill was reported, it is my purpose to submit briefly the considerations which led me to favor the report in its present form. But I do not propose to occupy the whole of the time which belongs to me, and have agreed to allot fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OSBORNE], who desires to oppose the bill.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, I fully appreciate the importance of the subject under consideration and exceedingly regret that the bill now pending before the House can not receive my sanction. I have listened attentively and with great interest to the able and learned arguments made by the friends of the bill in this House, and have carefully read all that was said by the Senator who advocated its passage in the Senate, but I am unable to find in this mass of learning and ability sufficient legal reason to answer the constitutional objection I find to it.

The only authority Congress has to assume jurisdiction over any measure or thing is delegated to it and exists in the Constitution. All power and authority not granted in the Constitution of the United States remains with the States or in the people.

The Constitution itself declares:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

With these propositions of law settled by the Constitution and by judicial authority, the gravity of legal objection to this bill is presented with great force and clearness when we contrast what is sought to be done through its provisions and what Congress is allowed to do in the premises by the Constitution.

Article II, section 1, of the Constitution provides:

The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice-President, chosen for the same term, be elected, as follows.

We have in this clause three important elements:

First. The office: President of the United States of America.

Second. The term: four years.

Third. How chosen: elected.

I venture to say that no man can be found who would contend for a moment that the executive power could be anywhere except as vested by the Constitution. Nor do I think anybody entertains the opinion that Congress has the power to shorten or extend the term fixed by the Constitution.

Such legislation would be usurpation, and the men who would attempt it would receive, as they deserve, the just condemnation of all citizens who love the Republic. Can we say less of an act passed by Congress that would establish a mode for choosing the Executive other than that prescribed by the Constitution?

This bill is aristocratic in its tendencies, does not conform to the spirit of our institutions, and if passed will be a usurpation by Congress of powers still vested in the States or in the people. Hence it is unconstitutional, and should not receive the sanction of this House.

In the language of Alexander Hamilton, I would say: "The fabric of American empire ought to rest on the solid basis of the consent of the people. The streams of national power ought to flow immediately from that pure original fountain of all legitimate authority."

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, I have agreed to allot a portion of the time remaining at my disposal to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL], to whom I now yield five minutes.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill leaves about fifteen days from the time the vote of the electoral college is ascertained till the new Cabinet officers are announced, when, if both the President and Vice-President elect, or but just inaugurated, should die, resign, or be unable to perform the duties of their positions, the Secretary of State under an outgoing administration would become President for four years.

As the law of Presidential succession now stands, it is feared in case of vacancy in both Presidential and Vice-Presidential positions the provisions for the succession of the President pro tempore of the Senate or of the Speaker of the House of Representatives might give rise to grave complications because of the unconstitutionality of the law relating to their succession. The question at issue is which plan carries the least risk.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY] yesterday set forth in a judicial argument—where not a word was wasted—the risk under the present law. I know of no amendment which will fill the gap in the bill now proposed. With this admitted defect, with which political parties equally take their chances, the bill yet makes it clear who in certain contingencies shall be President. Under the present law it is uncertain. The question when it arises may be referred to the Supreme Court, and if the law is then declared unconstitutional there may be an interregnum.

It is urged against this bill that in case the Secretary of State of an outgoing administration should succeed within the fifteen days stated and so become President for four years, he might not be in harmony with the policy of the party that won at the previous election, and thus the registered will of the people be thwarted. Yet under the present law it is possible that the President pro tempore of the Senate or the Speaker of the House, whoever may succeed, may not be in accord with the winning party. In this respect there is a risk under either system.

Preferring then, sir, that the question of the Presidential succession shall be determined and certainly fixed, I shall support this bill with its admitted defects.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as I have the honor to be a member of the select committee from which this bill was reported, and since as a member of that committee and of the subcommittee I concurred in the majority report accompanying the bill and so ably sustained by the chairman in his argument, it is my purpose somewhat briefly to state the considerations which lead me to favor the bill now under consideration in its present form.

In the outset permit me to observe that I do not consider this bill entirely free from defects; indeed, many of the criticisms made and questions suggested in the able arguments of the gentlemen on this floor in opposition to the bill have occurred to me and were considered by the committee; but in view of the fact that a very general public demand has been urged for several years for legislation upon this important subject, and in view of the almost certain failure of all legislation upon the subject if this bill be not passed in just the form in which it came from the Senate, I conceived it to be my duty to waive the several objections suggested, based as they are upon contingencies which are unlikely to occur within many years, if ever, and favor a proposition which clearly and fairly meets the present emergency. I conceive it to be our duty to consider this question in its highest, broadest, and most patriotic sense; to set aside all partisan considerations, and face the subject as one people aiming for the tranquillity and prosperity of one great Union under the Constitution handed down by our fathers, the preservation whereof has cost so much in blood and treasure.

The pending bill proposes in its first section "that in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President of the United States, the Secretary of State, or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Secretary of the Treasury; or if there be none, or in case of his removal, death, resignation, or inability, then the Secretary of War," and in the same manner naming, respectively, the Attorney-General, the Postmaster-General, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Interior in the order stated, "shall act as President until the disability of the President or Vice-President is removed or a President shall be elected," and further provides, "that whenever the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States shall devolve upon any of the persons herein named, if Congress be not then in session, or if it would not meet in accordance with law within twenty days thereafter, it shall be the duty of the person upon whom said powers and duties shall devolve to issue a proclamation convening Congress in extraordinary session, giving twenty days' notice of the time of meeting."

By the second section it is provided:

That the preceding section shall only be held to describe and apply to such officers as shall have been appointed by the advice and consent of the Senate to the offices therein named, and such as are eligible to the office of President under the Constitution, and not under impeachment by the House of Representatives of the United States at the time the powers and duties of the office shall devolve upon them respectively.

At the present time the only existing law of Congress providing for the Presidential succession in case of a vacancy of both Presidential and Vice-Presidential positions is the act of 1792.

An examination of the history of this section shows that in the proceedings of the Federal convention—

Mr. Gouverneur Morris objected to the President of the Senate being provisional successor to the President, and suggested a designation of the Chief-Justice.

Mr. Madison adds, as a ground of objection, that the Senate might retard the appointment of President, in order to carry points whilst the revisionary power was in the President of their own body, but suggested that the executive powers, during a vacancy, be administered by the persons composing the council of the President.—Madison Papers, volume 3, page 1434.)

All questions as to what course the succession should take were finally resolved by the adoption of the section 1 in Article II of the Constitution, which provides:

"In case of the removal of the President from office, or his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President; and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected."

From 1787 till 1792 Congress made no provision for the succession in case of vacancy in the offices of President and Vice-President, when it provided that the President pro tempore of the Senate, or, if there were none, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, should succeed. It was at the time questioned by Mr. Madison, in a letter to Edmund Pendleton, as follows:

"The bill concerning the election of a President and Vice-President, and the eventual successor to both, which has long been depending, has finally got through the two Houses. * * * On another point the bill certainly errs. It provides that in case of a double vacancy the executive powers shall devolve on the President pro tempore of the Senate, and he failing, on the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The objections to this arrangement are various.

"1. It may be questioned whether these are officers in the constitutional sense.

"2. If officers, whether both could be introduced.

"3. As they are created by the Constitution, they would probably have been there designated if contemplated for such a service instead of being left to the legislative selection.

"4. Either they will retain their legislative stations and their incompatible functions will be blended, or the incompatibility will supersede those stations, and then, those being the substratum of the adventitious functions, these must fail also. The Constitution says, Congress must declare what officers, &c., which seems to make it not an appointment or a translation, but an annexation of one office or trust to another office. The House of Representatives proposed to substitute the Secretary of State, but the Senate disagreed, and there being much delicacy in the matter, it was not pressed by the former."—Madison's Papers, volume 1, pages 548, 549.

It is thus shown that the propriety of this measure of succession was challenged by the father of the Constitution, not only in the Federal convention, but in Congress. This certainly renders less presumpuous present criticism of an act apparently rendered sacred by the ninety years it has remained undisturbed on the statute-book. It is true no trouble has arisen under it; but it is also true that there has fortunately been no occasion to apply it to the settlement of the Presidental succession. And it is perhaps warrantable to say that, if occasion had arisen for its use, trouble would have probably ensued as to its practical application and enforcement.

It is first to be observed that, waiving all constitutional questions, long periods have occured, and may occur again, during which there is neither President pro tempore of the Senate nor Speaker of the House of Representatives, and hence no one who could succeed to the Presidential office in case of the failure of both President and Vice-President. This possibility is certainly of great weight against this plan of succession.

If we were confronted with the proposition as to whether now and here we should pass that act of 1792 (section 146), I submit it would not have the serious consideration of Congress for a moment. Such being the fact, it occurs to me we are called to act as if that law had never been passed, starting with the manifest proposition that it was wrong in principle and clearly of very doubtful constitutionality.

But there are still graver objections to the present system. The separation of the departments of the Government, and the division of their powers and functions into executive, legislative, and judicial, forbid that they should under any circumstances be united. We say in our report further upon this subject:

Here we would have the executive department merged into the legislative, and the powers and duties of the chief executive office of the nation "annexed," to the position of President pro tempore of the Senate or Speaker of the House, as the case might be. He would preside, as President of the Senate, over proceedings involving the confirmation of appointments to office that he has made as President of the United States; nay, as Senator he could vote upon them. As Speaker of the House, he could vote to sustain his veto upon legislation made as President of the United States.

He could, as President of the United States, bring all the power and patronage of the great office of the Chief Magistrate of the nation to improperly influence legislation. Even, then, granting for the sake of argument that these are such officers as are meant by the Constitution, they are the last that a wise Congressional discretion should select for succession to the office, because the duties of the executive and legislative stations are utterly "incompatible" and should not be "blended."

But either House of Congress may expel one of its members. Hence, for proper cause, the acting President of the United States might be expelled, and thus deprived of his office of Senator or Representative, as the case might be. The Presidential annex then, lacking its "substratum," would fall, and the Government would be deprived of a President. How? By impeachment for and conviction of treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors? No; on account of the vote of expulsion of either House of one of its members for improper conduct. Hence, section 4 of Article II of the Constitution, which provides for the President's removal from office by impeachment for or conviction of high crimes and misdemeanors, as the only method, will be rendered nugatory and of no effect.

But the Constitution itself in express terms forbids the blending of legislative and executive functions. Section 6 of Article I provides, among other things, that—

"No person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office."

It can not be denied that the Presidency is "an office under the United States," and to hold such an office is forbidden to any member of either House during his continuance in office. But he can not, under the law, act as President except by virtue of being a member of Congress. His Congressional position is the "substratum of the adventitious functions." Yet as soon as he takes the office under the United States he is forbidden longer to be a member of either House. Such attempted succession would be anomalous and productive alone of confusion.

The question as to whether a member of the Senate or House is an officer of the United States is not an open one. Articles of impeachment against William Blount were exhibited by the House of Representatives in 1798, and upon the question arising on demurrer or plea to the jurisdiction as to whether a Senator was a civil officer of the United States, it was held in the negative, and that he was not liable to impeachment. This has been and is considered as settling that question—that a Senator was not a civil officer, and hence not impeachable. The same conclusion will necessarily follow as to a Representative.

If, then, they are not such officers as can be impeached, how can they be considered such officers as can succeed to the Presidency? Manifestly they are not, unless their election to the offices, respectively, of President pro tempore and Speaker makes them such. But they can only hold such positions by virtue of their commissions from their States and their qualifying as members of their respective bodies. They are still Senators and Representatives; they are not commissioned by the United States; they are amenable to their own Houses; they are subject to expulsion; they may be removed by election by their Houses. At any rate this is manifestly so of the President pro tempore, who, by resolution of January, 1876, was declared "to hold at the pleasure of the Senate."

This would make the tenure of the Presidential office subject to the pleasure of the Senate. Hence they are in no sense officers of the United States upon whom the succession could devolve. It is presumed to be useless to waste time in demonstrating that it is an impossibility that any man at one and the same time could perform the duties of President of the United States and preside in either House of Congress. The duties of either office during the sessions of Congress are enough to employ all the time, industry, and capacity of any man.

Hence it seems to me you will all agree that the passage of the existing law as an original proposition at this time would not for a moment merit or receive the serious consideration of Congress. What, then, is our duty? Clearly to make immediately some suitable provision to meet the existing contingency.

Will the pending bill do this in such a way that if the hand of the Almighty should remove the present Chief Executive, and the Secretary of State should be called to perform the duties of that great office the vast business interests of our country would be less disturbed than if the succession should occur under the existing law?

There can be no doubt as to your answer. The millions of people now looking to Congress for relief from the anxieties incident to this question answer affirmatively. Hence I am led to favor the pending bill, subject though it may be and is to many criticisms. We can not afford to disregard public sentiment and anxieties upon this subject.

My conclusions are particularly strengthened in view of the fact that upon the happening of such event the Secretary of State acting as President would be required immediately to issue his proclamation convening Congress in extraordinary session—an act, a provision, that would further tend to preserve and promote the tranquillity of the nation.

This is a non-partisan measure. It has twice passed a Republican Senate. It has met the approval of public sentiment as reflected through the press quite generally. The third section of the bill repeals the act of 1792 (sections 146 to 150, inclusive, United States Revised Statutes), and so does away with the provisions of law providing for a special election. In my opinion it would be a calamity to subject the country to the strain of an extraordinary or special Presidential election, succeeding, it might be, within a very short period a regular quadrennial election as now provided by the Constitution and the laws. The passage of the pending bill will largely, if not entirely, set at rest the public mind upon this as on all the exciting matters incident to this subject.

I should regret to see this measure, important as it is, involving to a greater or less degree as it does the peace, prosperity, and welfare of our country, considered or discussed from any mere partisan standpoint. I appeal to my colleagues on this floor to heed seriously the manifest desire of the people, from whom we have come freshly charged with these responsible trusts, and to discharge this duty conscientiously, having regard only for the best interests of the whole people.

The pending bill has been carefully considered here and by the Senate. The objections to it do not weigh, are not contended to be, against it so far as it would meet an immediate contingency. Hence, I am pleased to waive any personal objections, as I did in our committee, and favor the bill in its entirety as the only measure possible to pass at this Congress and fairly responsive to public demands.

The amendments proposed only relate to remote contingencies. Any amendment means defeat of any legislation by this Congress, and I am unwilling to be a party to any proposition that would prevent prompt and proper action.

Mr. RYAN. I have not formulated any remarks upon this subject; but some thoughts have impressed themselves upon my mind which, in a disconnected way perhaps, I desire to offer to the House. There are two things of the highest importance in formulating a provision against the apprehended dangers: First, certainty of succession; secondly, purity of title. Any provision that falls short of this is wholly inadequate and irresponsive to the public demand.

I have given some little thought to the various suggestions and propositions which have been offered, and in the few observations I shall make I shall take a shot at the flock. I do not think that any of them affords both of the essentials I have suggested. I do not think that any of them affords both certainty of succession and purity of title. The pending bill is in some respects in my judgment far superior to the existing law. In other respects it is so defective that I do not feel at liberty to vote for it. No matter how odious an administration may become in the public judgment, no matter how much it has provoked the indignation of the American people by outrages and wrongs, no matter though every State in the Federal Union has cast its electoral vote against it, no matter though there has been entire unanimity among the American people in that respect, if the President-elect and the Vice-President-elect shall die between the time of the certification of the vote and the time for their inauguration into office then that odious administration is by the pending bill continued in power against the will of the people for four years more. That is a contingency that ought not to be permitted to be possible in any legislation which we are attempting now to formulate against apprehended dangers.

There are many other defects in the pending bill, though in my judgment quite inferior to this. What, Mr. Speaker, is the power that Congress possesses under the Constitution in formulating a scheme of succession? The Constitution declares that—

The Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.

It would seem quite clear under this provision that the officer upon whom we devolve the succession by any law that we may enact that shall be in harmony with this provision of the Constitution must act as President ex officio—that is, he acts as President in virtue of the office he holds. In other words and to illustrate, the present law devolves the succession in a contingency upon the President pro tempore of the Senate. Now the President pro tempore of the Senate, under this provision of the Constitution, can only act as President while he holds the office of President pro tempore of the Senate. It is in virtue of that office, in right of that position that the Constitution permits Congress to confer upon him the right and power to act as President of the United States.

My object in the few remarks I have to make will be to show that all propositions pending, including the present law, are so defective that it would seem that the only adequate remedy that can be provided must be by an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Take, if you please, the existing law, with which I am not so much enamored as some of those who have preceded me in the discussion. It does not come to me sanctified by use. It is matter of history that that law is the offspring of the rivalry existing at the time between Mr. Hamilton, who was then Secretary of the Treasury, and Mr. Jefferson, who was then Secretary of State; that it is the product of the personal and political animosities of that hour, rather than of the deliberate judgment of the Congress that passed it. In the Life and Times of Madison, page 223, it is stated:

That this decision proceeded mainly if not exclusively from feelings of personal and political enmity to the gentleman who then filled the office of Secretary of State, and the jealousy entertained of him by the friends and partisans of the Secretary of the Treasury is rendered apparent by the surviving memorials of the time. Colonel Hamilton himself in a letter to a friend of his, of nearly contemporaneous date with the transaction, acknowledged that he used his influence from motives of personal and political opposition to Mr. Jefferson to defeat the amendment of the House.

That amendment of the House was that the office should devolve on the Secretary of State. Mr. Hamilton himself at that time wrote a letter to a friend, in which he said:

You know how much it was a point to establish the Secretary of State as the officer who was to administer the Government in defect of the President and Vice-President. Here I acknowledge, though I took far less part than was supposed, I ran counter to Mr. Jefferson's wishes; but if I had had no other reason for it, I had already experienced opposition from him which rendered it a measure of self-defense.

Mr. Madison was then leader of the House and had been among the ablest of the men who framed the Constitution; but he antagonized the bill at every step as it finally passed, and that he regarded it as unconstitutional is evident from the letter written by him to Mr. Pendleton, of Virginia, immediately after it had passed both Houses. In that letter he says:

The bill concerning the election of a President and Vice-President, and the eventual successor to both, which has long been depending, has finally got through the two Houses. It was made a question whether the number of electors ought to correspond with the new apportionment or the existing House of Representatives. The text of the Constitution was not decisive, and the Northern interest was strongly in favor of the latter interpretation. The intrinsic rectitude, however, of the former turned the decision in both Houses in favor of the Southern. On another point the bill certainly errs. It provides that in case of a double vacancy the executive powers shall devolve on the President pro tempore of the Senate, and he failing, on the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The objections to this arrangement are various:

1. It may be questioned whether these are officers in the constitutional sense.
2. If officers, whether both could be introduced.
3. As they are created by the Constitution, they would probably have been there designated if contemplated for such a service, instead of being left to the legislative selection.
4. Either they will retain their legislative stations, and then incompatible functions will be blended, or the incompatibility will supersede those stations, and then those being the substratum of the adventitious functions, these must fail also. The Constitution says Congress must declare what officers, &c., which seems to make it not an appointment or a translation, but an annexation of one office or trust to another office. The House of Representatives proposed to substitute the Secretary of State, but the Senate disagreed, and there being much delicacy in the matter, it was not pressed by the former.

So, Mr. Speaker, contemporaneous history stamps the scheme which was then formulated as the issue of personal and political strife and as of questionable validity. It has been said that this law is sanctified by nearly ninety years of use. It never, thank God, has been in use a moment. It has slumbered upon the statute-book without ever having been called into action at all.

Now, sir, what is the plan of our Constitution and the scheme of our Government with reference to this question? It is that the Government shall be made up of co-ordinate branches, each branch independent within its own sphere, yet sustaining such relations to the others that each shall be a check and a balance upon the rest. Running all along through the lines of the Constitution is this idea of keeping each department separate and independent of the others, so that each shall be a restraint and check upon any abuses that may occur in any other department. The Constitution is careful not to confer any legislative power upon the Executive. The only legislative function with which it clothes the Executive is the right to approve or disapprove bills which have passed both Houses of Congress; and when the Constitution prescribes what powers the Executive shall have in that respect, it denies to him all other powers of legislation. Will it be contended for a single moment that the man who acts as President of the United States shall carry any greater constitutional or other power than the man who was duly elected President of the United States by the people? Certainly not. But the President pro tempore of the Senate is still a Senator after you have devolved upon him the duties of the Executive office; he still performs all the functions of a legislator; he still has the right to speak in the Senate for or against every measure of legislation, and introduce legislation there and formulate it as freely after he is clothed with executive powers as before. He has a right to vote for or against every proposition that may come before that body. His relations to the Senate as a Senator are not changed in any respect. Such a case, in my judgment, was never contemplated by the framers of the supreme law. Such a power as that was never intended by them to be blended with the powers and duties of Chief Magistrate.

But, Mr. Speaker, it may be fairly questioned whether the President pro tempore of the Senate is not made in positive terms ineligible by the Constitution of the United States. The Constitution declares that no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office. But here is a law which declares that a man shall be President of the United States while he is at the same time a Senator of the United States; whereas the Constitution says that while he holds the office of President, or any other United States office, civil or military, he can not be a member of either House of Congress. The impeachment provisions of the Constitution are the great safeguards placed in the hands of the representatives of the people as a protection against an unscrupulous and profligate Executive. Yet for ninety years the law has obtained that a Senator of the United States is not subject to impeachment. If, then, you devolve the office of President of the United States upon the President pro tempore of the Senate, will he be subject in any respect to the impeachment provision of the Constitution? Certainly not as President pro tempore of the Senate. Can you apply it, then, to him as acting President of the United States? If you do that, he is still, by virtue of the Constitution, a member of the high court of impeachment before which he is himself to be tried for treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. Here is an incongruity that I apprehend was never contemplated by the framers of the Constitution.

Again, the Executive appoints embassadors, consuls, ministers, and other officers of the United States, "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." Will this acting President preside in the Senate to act upon his own nominations, and, perhaps by his own vote, give the "advice and consent of the Senate" to the appointments which as Executive he is authorized under the Constitution to make? He is charged by the Constitution with the power to veto all legislation that he disapproves. Is he to sit in the Senate, introduce legislation of his own, formulate it, discuss it, vote upon it, and then as Executive exercise the veto power with reference to it? If he shall disapprove by his voice and vote in the Senate Chamber, will he disapprove as President of the United States? In other words, is the Executive to be so participating in legislation as all the time to flaunt the veto power in the face of Congress?

But, sir, it is admitted that the President pro tempore of the Senate may be changed at the will of that body. When you devolve upon him the office of Chief Magistrate of the country, there is placed with the Senate of the United States the power to change the President at its own pleasure—to make and unmake a President of the United States with a frequency limited only by its own sweet will.

All this is offensive to the Constitution and wholly inharmonious with our magnificent scheme of government.

The Constitution creates the office of Speaker of the House; it creates the office of President pro tempore of the Senate. These offices had been created before the framers of the Constitution reached the provision in relation to the Presidential succession. They provided a Vice-President to succeed the President of the United States in certain contingencies, and then relegated to Congress the power to provide a further succession to the Presidential office. But if they had deemed the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House proper officers to succeed to the Presidental office and perform its functions, it would have been an easy matter, as Mr. Madison said, for them to have done so. The fact that the offices were incongruous, that to devolve the duties of President upon these officers would merge legislative and executive duties in one person in contravention of the whole scheme of the Constitution, were perhaps sufficient reasons why they did not.

One word in regard to the power to provide by law for a special election. The Constitution provides:

> And such officers shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.

How elected? It would seem to have been an easy matter for the fathers to have provided in express terms for an election to fill the vacancy if they had so desired. But they had already framed a provision in the Constitution for the election of a President. They had not only provided when and how he should be elected, but for all the details of his election, creating the office of electors and prescribing their duties in all respects; so that it is contended by some of the ablest constitutional lawyers in the country that the phrase "or a President shall be elected" relates to the quadrennial election, the election provided for by the Constitution itself. I desire to quote upon this question the judgment of a distinguished constitutional lawyer whose eminence as such commands the respect of the people of the United States. I refer to Mr. Evarts:

> Now the Constitution resumes its authority: "And such officer shall act accordingly"—that is, discharge the duties of President—"until the disability be removed;" which is one of the occasions for the action of Congress, and the other occasion, the alternative occasion, when the office is vacant, "or" in that case "a President shall be elected." And when the Constitution stops there, and does not provide for Congress the right to determine whether there shall be an election or when there shall be an election, and the power of the Constitution asserts itself as disposing of the whole question, when Congress has made its declaration of the officer and the Constitution has prescribed what shall ensue, it is then fastened upon the power of the officer; that is, if he takes the place to perform the duties by reason of disability, the Constitution says he shall hold it for the disability. Does any one pretend that Congress could order an election during a temporary disability, during a constitutional disability, whatever that may be? By no means. Here then is an exhausted power. It comes then to the alternative, the vacancy, however it may have occurred. There it provides that the duties of the Presidency shall be executed until the election of a President; and what does that mean? It means an election that the Constitution provides for; it means what the framers of the Constitution knew and recognized as a condition that was to follow. That is the whole frame of the periodicity of the Constitution, and that frame which protects the office against innovation from Congress is maintained in all respects and always. And you will find that all the mischiefs which have threatened and all the difficulties which have given rise to debate among eminent statesmen and eminent lawyers as to there being any doubt and therefore difficulty, come from not reading the Constitution as meaning what the framers meant—meant by them intelligently—and what they were undertaking to provide for, what at least they meant to maintain, that whatever in the unforeseen vicissitudes that should attend the life of a great nation might occur, they meant this principle at least should last, that Congress should not say whether or not there should be an election or when there should be one, but should do what? Exactly what the framers of the Constitution did not undertake to do and did not feel themselves competent to do.

One of the most eminent constitutional lawyers of this country, Mr. Justice Story, in his great work on the Constitution of the United States, says in reference to this question of the constitutional power to provide law for a special election to fill the vacancy:

> Congress, however, have undertaken to provide for every case of a vacancy both of the offices of President and Vice-President, and have declared that in such an event there shall immediately be a new election made in the manner prescribed by the act (the existing law). How far such an exercise of power is constitutional has never yet been solemnly presented for decision. The point was hinted at in some of the debates when the Constitution was adopted; and it was then thought to be susceptible of some doubt. Every sincere friend of the Constitution will naturally feel desirous of upholding the power as far as he constitutionally may; but it would be more satisfactory to provide for the case by some suitable amendment which should clear away every doubt, and thus prevent a crisis dangerous to our future peace, if not to the existence of the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have this condition of things: The right to devolve this great office by an act of Congress upon the President pro tempore of the Senate or the Speaker of the House is questioned by some of the ablest constitutional lawyers in the land; and further, the right of Congress to provide for a special election to fill the vacancy is equally uncertain and equally doubtful and disputed by high authority.

Now, let us consider for a moment the plan suggested by my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS]. He proposes to devolve, as unquestionably may be constitutionally done, the duties of President upon the Secretary of State temporarily. Then he undertakes to provide for a special election to fill the vacancy. For the purpose of illustration, suppose the present Executive should unfortunately die before the expiration of his term and this proposition should be in force as the law. Then this law would devolve the duties of the Executive upon the Secretary of State temporarily; then a special election is called, and the opposition to the administration prevails in the election. Suppose the Secretary of State, backed by his entire party, should assume the position which has already been assumed by the most distinguished lawyers and statesmen of the country in every division of public sentiment, that that election was unauthorized by the Constitution and all the proceedings under it void. Here arises one of the most difficult and dangerous conflicts that we can possibly contemplate. The prevailing party in the election can not surrender. Their chosen officers take upon themselves the oath of office, provide a cabinet, and assume to perform all the functions of government.

"Oh, well," you say, "let the Supreme Court decide the controversy." But you must remember that when there is such a condition of things the passions of the people are at white heat; and we would have very little reason to expect from the Supreme Court anything that we would not find in mortal man generally. It is not at all likely we would have a decision embodying any other views than those which their partisan bias would reflect; and such a decision would be as unsatisfactory to the American people as anything possibly could be—an entirely partisan opinion. In the mean time dangers are multiplying and all business is paralyzed.

I say it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to avoid even the possibility of such a danger. Do you tell me it is remote, it is not probable? Why, sir, it is against improbabilities that we are making provision. We have lived under the present law nearly one hundred years, and the contingency against which we are now trying to make provision has never yet happened; and the contingency I have mapped out is perhaps quite as possible as any other apprehended.

Now, let us take the plan proposed by my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. He proposes to devolve temporarily the office upon the Secretary of State. Then he provides the electors shall hold a four years' term of office and that they may be called, upon certain notice which he provides for, to elect a President and Vice-President of the United States to fill the vacancy. Here we shall run against another constitutional difficulty. The electors and their duties are prescribed by the Constitution of the United States, and when they have performed the last duty prescribed by that instrument they become functus officio. They no longer exist as officers; and it may be fairly questioned whether Congress has the right, the Constitution having prescribed the duties of an officer, to impose additional duties upon him, or, having imposed a limit to his term of office, whether they can enlarge it at all. If that be the condition, then we would have the same difficulty I have described in reference to the scheme of my friend from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

So, if a President should be chosen by the electors under such doubtful constitutional warrant the same difficulties might arise. The party in power holding by constitutional right and the other party elected by a doubtful and disputed authority, the same perils and the same controversies are possible. Now, Mr. Speaker, all I have sought to do is to show that none of the propositions which have been formulated are free from uncertainties, are free from doubt. None of them are likely to give us, if the contingency should ever arise—which God forbid—an Executive with absolutely unquestioned and unquestionable title.

My own judgment is that Congress never ought to adjourn until they make ample and adequate provision for the succession. It can be done easily by a constitutional amendment. If it is desired to provide a special election, lift it from the domain of doubt by making it a provision of the Constitution. If it is not desirable to do that, some other method can be easily formulated. One that suggests itself to my mind as the best is an amendment to the Constitution that would provide two additional Vice-Presidents. In that case there would be no difficulty, there would be no uncertainty, about the succession; there would be no question about the title. Whenever the vacancy did occur there would be an official upon whom under the Constitution the office might fall without his right to exercise its functions or its powers being called in question by anybody on earth.

Mr. ERMENTROUT rose.

Mr. CALDWELL. I rise to give notice, Mr. Speaker, that I will call the previous question at 4 o'clock.

Several MEMBERS. Call it now.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. If the House is ready to vote I will cheerfully yield the floor for that purpose. Does the gentleman from Tennessee purpose to call the previous question now? [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. Speaker, that it is hardly fair to prohibit men on his own side of the House who object to this bill from expressing their views on it, when opportunity so far has only been given to those who oppose it on the other side. There is plenty of time for discussion, and there is no other question before the House demanding attention. In my judgment there does not seem to be any good reason why a question so great and important as this is should be pushed through this House in this way without allowing members an opportunity to express themselves on it. I am hostile to this bill and desire to state the reasons why I can not vote for it.

Mr. CALDWELL. I had no intention, Mr. Speaker, unnecessarily to push the bill to a vote, but of course I must follow the wishes of the House.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. As it does not appear to be the intention of the House to take a vote on the bill at this time, I shall proceed, Mr. Speaker, to submit what I have to say on the general subject. I do not indulge in this debate with the hope of adding anything new to what has been already said, but simply to bear, if I may use the term in this connection, cumulative testimony in favor of this bill, and as briefly as possible to give my reasons for coming to that conclusion. My colleagues on the committee [Messrs. CALDWELL and EDEN] who have addressed you, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SENEY], in their able arguments yesterday, have exhausted the subject. They have shown conclusively, in my judgment, the great impropriety of the succession as fixed by the present law; for their arguments not only demonstrate that under the act of 1792 doubt as to constitutionality and uncertainty as to person attach to the first appointment of a successor to the Presidency in the contingency sought to be provided for, but also that after the first appointment this infirmity is aggravated by instability of tenure in the appointee by reason of the different constitutional qualifications required in a President, a Senator, and a Speaker of the House, by the appointment of President of the Senate and Speaker pro tempore during the absence or disability of either of these officers, and by the expiration of the term of a Senator or Speaker upon whom the succession has fallen before the expiration of the Presidential term.

When my duty as a member of the committee that reported this bill to the House brought me to a deliberate consideration of its provisions, I confess to a stubborn predetermination not to support that section which repeals the special-election clauses of the act of 1792. I am not betraying confidence when I declare that these were also the views of my patriotic and venerable colleague [Mr. EDEN] from Illinois. I can therefore sympathize with the views of the gentleman from Kansas and others who have scrupled to repeal these provisions.

I did not doubt and do not doubt now that, in case the contingency had arisen, notwithstanding the doubts that have been cast upon the constitutionality of the act of 1792, that act would have been enforced; not, however, because it is a good law, but because that act, but five years younger than the Constitution, had almost acquired in the minds of the people the sanctity of a constitutional provision, and because it was the only protection the country would have had against confusion. The good sense of the American people, as on other occasions, would have controlled the matter to a peaceful settlement. But when the death of two Presidents and one Vice-President within the memory of every man on this floor aroused the public mind, scrutiny was made of a law that had slept on the statute-book without a single awakening from the time of its enactment and its history was considered. It was then found to lack the great essentials of so important a measure, namely, certainty and stability. From 1795 down to the present time this infirmity has characterized it, if Madison and a long line of statesmen are to be considered authority. The vehement contentions in the Senate and House at various times established this. The contention of to-day establishes it, and the passage of this very bill by a co-ordinate branch of the National Legislature by so decided a vote should be most persuasive evidence to the ordinary mind. These all prove the contention to be over existing law. There should be none. To abide within the limits of the Constitution, to divest the succession of all doubt and controversy as to the person and as to the tenure of office, to go as far as that instrument would allow to meet the emergency immediately before us and no further and thus quiet the country—these were the considerations that constrained me to yield up my conclusions on this bill. Without question it answers every present purpose.

It is not pretended that this bill supplies everything we ought to have. It is, however, as perfect as human wit, trammeled by constitutional requirements, can go. We must look to the wisdom of this House to provide proper amendments to the Constitution to supply what is necessary. Some gentlemen on this floor have sought to cloud the judgment of the House by injecting a little more than a suspicion of politics into the debate. Much might be said on both sides. I hope no one advocating the bill will by words spoken afford any excuse for anything of the kind.

Whatever the errors or mistakes of either political party may have been in the past, let us patriotically seek to shun them in the future. It would be a sorry spectacle indeed to the people of this country, anxious and in suspense after the repeated admonitions given by Providence on this subject, by crimination and recrimination to delay this important legislation.

This bill provides for a successor to the present Executive in the event of his death certain as to person, certain and stable as to tenure of office, until the next quadrennial election, of the same political faith, which is in accord with that of the people as expressed at the last quadrennial election, and all clearly within the lines of the Constitution. Therefore I yield it my hearty support.

I now yield a moment to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I sent to the Clerk's desk on yesterday a proposed amendment to the third section of this bill. I understand that a pending amendment to that section was offered, or was proposed to be offered, by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER]. If there is no pending amendment to section 3, then I desire now to offer my amendment to this section and have it considered as a pending amendment; and if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio is pending, then I desire to offer mine as a substitute for his, and I have consulted with him, and there is no discourtesy intended in the motion.

Mr. ERMENTROUT. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WILKINS in the chair). The gentleman has forty-five minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I now feel it to be my duty to call the previous question upon the passage of this bill.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Pending that I have a substitute to offer to the bill, which I send to the desk.

Mr. CALDWELL. It has been suggested to me that the debate has been ample upon the bill, and in order to succeed in getting it through the House before the recess to-day it is proper to call the previous question now.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me offer an amendment, to be pending only.

Mr. CALDWELL. I must insist upon the demand for the previous question upon the bill and all amendments pending.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee demands the previous question upon the bill and the pending amendments.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And I ask him to allow me to offer an amendment to be considered as pending.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have no objection to the gentleman from Ohio presenting an amendment to be considered as pending.

The SPEAKER. It will depend altogether upon the character of the amendments already offered whether another amendment would be now in order.

Mr. CALDWELL. Of course consent is given subject to all points of order upon the amendment.

The SPEAKER. There is a substitute presented by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY] for the bill pending; also an amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] on the part of the minority of the committee.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. And an amendment to that amendment which I have just offered.

The SPEAKER. And that is as far as an amendment can go under the rule, except there be an amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I offer it as an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I must withdraw the consent I have given if it is to lead to any confusion. I want to get action upon the bill promptly. I am convinced that I am justified in demanding the previous question and allow it to have its full scope. I do not want, either by consent or otherwise, to embarrass the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOUK. Do I understand that my colleague demands the previous question now?

Mr. CALDWELL. Yes, sir, you do understand that.

Mr. HOUK. But the gentleman gave notice a few moments ago that he would demand the previous question at 4 o'clock, and I am not aware of anything which has transpired since that time which would cause the House to go into this process of hasty legislation before the hour fixed.

Mr. CALDWELL. I will say to the gentleman this has transpired, that I have changed my mind upon the question, and propose to exercise the right and privilege now that I thought I would exercise at 4 o'clock.

Mr. HOUK. I submit to my colleague further that it is proper, I suppose, and he has the right to change his mind as often as he pleases, but the gentleman has no right to change his mind so as to mislead others.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have no desire to mislead others, and do not think the gentleman has any right to make such a suggestion.

Mr. BURROWS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to know if the previous question shall be now ordered whether it will cut off all amendments to the bill.

The SPEAKER. It will, except those now pending.

Mr. BURROWS. Except those pending. I have an amendment I would like to offer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Tennessee does not admit the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The amendment was offered while I had the floor and after the gentleman from Tennessee had yielded.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Ohio had the floor by permission of the gentleman from Tennessee, and not exactly in his own right.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The gentleman having given permission and the amendment having been offered, I think it is too late to object now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think not. The amendment was offered during the pendency of the demand for the previous question, and could only, therefore, be offered with the consent of the gentleman who asked the previous question. If the House votes down the demand for the previous question, the amendment will then be in order.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire also to inquire if ordering the previous question cuts off debate on amendments.

The SPEAKER. The previous question, if ordered by the House, cuts off all amendments and all debate unless the gentleman having the measure in charge shall have the right to an hour to close debate—a point which the Chair has not decided since the adoption of the present rule.

Mr. BURROWS. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee whether by unanimous consent this bill could not be considered by sections as in Committee of the Whole after the previous question is ordered.

Mr. EDEN. I shall object to that.

Many members called for the regular order.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PERKINS. If the previous question is ordered would a motion after the pending amendments are voted on be in order to recommit the bill?

The SPEAKER. A motion to recommit will be in order after the previous question has been ordered and will be in order when the question is on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, there were—ayes 89, noes 94.

Mr. HOLMAN and others called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CALDWELL and Mr. BURROWS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 132, noes 113.

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand the yeas and nays on ordering the previous question.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 73 members voting in the affirmative.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 146, nays 119, not voting, 59; as follows:

So the previous question was ordered.

Mr. BEACH. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names of members voting.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky. I desire to state that my colleague Mr. LAFFOON is sick in his room. If present, he would vote "ay."

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. PAYSON with Mr. DARGAN, on all questions, for to-day.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. HARMER, for this day.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of New York, with Mr. DUNHAM, until Monday next.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. GOFF, for this day.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. HANBACK, on this vote.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. They are paired on the Presidential succession bill and all amendments thereto. If present, Mr. O'NEILL would vote for the bill and Mr. ADAMS against it.

Mr. STORM with Mr. WHITING, on this bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired on this vote with the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. RIGGS. Having voted inadvertently, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. EDEN. I desire to announce that my colleague Mr. LANDES is detained from the House by sickness in his family.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that Mr. LANDES has leave of absence.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The question is first upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER] on behalf of the minority of the committee. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 4, section 1, insert the words "or whenever the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States become vacant"——

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk is now reporting the amendment. The Chair will hear the gentleman's inquiry after the amendment is read.

The Clerk continued the reading:

Making the paragraph read:
"That in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President of the United States, or whenever the offices of President and Vice-President become vacant, the Secretary of State," &c.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now hear the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. CALDWELL].

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I am not now prepared to make any inquiry.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the Chair to state to the House the order in which the amendments are to be voted upon.

The SPEAKER. The House will first vote upon the amendments to the original bill, so as to perfect the text of the proposition before it; after which the vote will be taken upon the substitute offered by the gentlemen from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], and the amendments to the text will be voted upon in the order in which they have been presented.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I should like to know when the vote will come upon my amendment?

The SPEAKER. That depends upon what portion of the bill it proposes to amend. The Chair thinks it is the next amendment.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I do not care. I simply wish to know the order in which it comes.

The SPEAKER. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] is a substitute for sections 1 and 2 of the bill as reported, and, under the universal practice, the vote will be first taken upon the amendments to those sections so as to perfect them as far as the House sees proper to do so, and then the vote will be upon the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am bound in honor to say that that is not the amendment which I succeeded in getting in before the previous question was ordered. The amendment which I succeeded in getting in is the second amendment offered by me, which was an amendment to section 3.

The SPEAKER. We have not yet reached that. Votes will be taken upon the amendments in their order, and when section 3 is reached the gentleman's amendment will be considered.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to ask whether, after the previous question has been ordered, there is not still an hour left for debate?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will decide that question when it arises. It is a question which the Chair thinks has not been decided since the change of the rules in the Forty-sixth Congress. The gentleman who reports a measure, and no one else, has, under the rules of the House, an hour to conclude the debate; but whether he shall conclude the debate before the previous question is ordered or after it has been ordered is a question which the Chair thinks has never been decided since the change of the rule.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I made the inquiry, Mr. Speaker, because it was understood by those who opposed this bill and the gentleman who has the bill in charge that there would be an hour for debate and that there would be a division of that time, and that understanding has been announced and generally accepted.

The SPEAKER. That is not a question which arises at this stage of proceeding.

A MEMBER. Regular order!

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the minority of the committee, which has just been read.

The question was taken; and the amendment was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 3 and insert: "In the event of the death or constitutional inability of the President-elect, or failure to assume his office, the Vice-President shall act as President the same as if such death or inability had occurred after his inauguration."

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] state what part of the amendment as printed in the RECORD he finally offered?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. My amendment is published on page 679 of the RECORD, and is an amendment to section 3.

The SPEAKER. But the amendment as printed in the RECORD is quite long, and the gentleman stated he did not offer it all, that he did not succeed in getting it all before the House. If he will indicate what part was offered the Chair will have the question taken upon it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. My amendments as printed begin—

Strike out section 1 of the bill and insert the following as sections 1 and 2.

But several paragraphs further down the Speaker will find a separate proposition, beginning—

Strike out from section 3 the words "one-hundred and forty-seven, one hundred and forty-eight, and one hundred and forty-nine."
Add the following as an additional section.

My two separate amendments are printed so closely together in the RECORD that perhaps the Speaker has regarded them as one. But the amendment beginning very near the bottom of the first column on page 679 is the amendment to section 3 which I succeeded in getting in.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it, because that must be voted on before the one which has just been read. The one just read being a substitue for section 3, the text must be perfected before that substitute is voted upon.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from section 3 the words "one hundred and forty-seven, one hundred and forty-eight, and one hundred and forty-nine."
Add the following as an additional section:
Section 5——

The SPEAKER. What the Clerk has last read is not a part of the amendment to section 3. It proposes to add a new section as section 5. The vote will be first taken on the amendment to section 3. The Clerk will read the section as it will stand if this amendment be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That sections 146 and 150 of the Revised Statutes are hereby repealed.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 92, noes 111.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 62 voting in favor thereof.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 113, nays 153, not voting 58; as follows:

YEAS—113.

So the amendment of Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, was not agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. CRAIN with Mr. BINGHAM, on this bill.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. HANBACK, for the balance of the day.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, with Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama, on the Presidential succession bill. Mr. DAVIDSON would vote "ay," Mr. HENDERSON, "no."

Mr. HEWITT with Mr. REED, of Maine, on the Presidential succession bill. Mr. HEWITT, if present, would vote for the bill and Mr. REED against it.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

EVENING SESSION DISPENSED WITH.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the standing order of the House for Friday evening sessions be set aside so far as this evening is concerned. There is not enough business upon the Calendar to justify a meeting of the House this evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] asks unanimous consent that the order of the House providing for a recess at 5 o'clock on Fridays and an evening session for the consideration of pension bills, &c., be vacated for this evening only. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is ordered accordingly.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

The House resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 471) to provide for the performance of the duties of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President.

The question next recurred on Mr. COOPER'S amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of section 3 and insert: "In the event of the death or constitutional inability of the President-elect, or failure to assume his office, the Vice-President shall act as President the same as if such death or inability had occurred after his inauguration."

The amendment was rejected.

The question next recurred on the following amendment, moved by Mr. COOPER, as follows:

Add section 4, as follows:
"Section 146 of the Revised Statutes is hereby repealed."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The question next recurred on the amendment of Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, as follows:

Add the following as an additional section:
"SEC. 5. That section 148 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended so as to read as follows:
"'SEC. 148. The notification shall specify that electors of a President and Vice-President of the United States shall be appointed or chosen in the several States as follows:
"'First. If there shall be the space of thirty days yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, and if the term for which the President and Vice-President last chosen were elected will not expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing said next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, such notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen on said next ensuing day established by law for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress.
"'Second. If there shall not be the space of thirty days yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, or if the term for which the President and Vice-President last chosen were elected will expire either on the 3d day of March next ensuing the date of such notification or on the 3d day of March next ensuing said next ensuing day established by law as the day for a general election of Representatives and Delegates to Congress, the notification shall not specify that electors are to be appointed or chosen.'"

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the result of the vote on the first part of my amendment would render this of no value, and therefore I do not insist upon it being voted on.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his amendment if there be no objection, and the Chair hears none. The question next recurs on the substitute for the bill proposed by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, In case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President of the United States, the President of the Senate, or, if there is none, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the time being, shall act as President until the disability is removed or a President elected. And for the purpose of having a Speaker of the House of Representatives in office continuously, the Congress shall convene at 12 o'clock m. on the 4th day of March next succeeding the election of Representatives in Congress; and whenever a vacancy exists either in the office of the President pro tempore of the Senate or Speaker of the House, the President shall convene the House in which the vacancy exists for the purpose of electing a presiding officer.

SEC. 2. Whenever the offices of President and Vice-President both become vacant, the Secretary of State shall forthwith cause a notification thereof to be made to the executive of every State, and shall also cause the same to be published in at least one of the newspapers printed in each State.

SEC. 3. The notification shall specify that electors of a President and Vice-President of the United States shall be appointed or chosen in the several States, as follows:

First. If there shall be the space of two months yet to ensue between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing, such notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding such first Wednesday in December.

Second. If there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and such first Wednesday in December, and if the term for which the President and Vice-President last in office were elected will not expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing, the notification shall specify that the electors shall be appointed or chosen within thirty-four days preceding the first Wednesday in December in the year next ensuing. But if there shall not be the space of two months between the date of such notification and the first Wednesday in December then next ensuing, and if the term for which the President and Vice-President last in office were elected will expire on the 3d day of March next ensuing, the notification shall not specify that electors are to be appointed or chosen.

SEC. 4. Electors appointed or chosen upon the notification prescribed by the preceding section shall meet and give their votes upon the first Wednesday of December specified in the notification.

SEC. 5. The provisions of this title, relating to the quadrennial election of President and Vice-President, shall apply with respect to any election to fill vacancies in the offices of President and Vice-President, held upon a notification given when both offices become vacant.

SEC. 6. The only evidence of a refusal to accept, or of a resignation of the office of President or Vice-President, shall be an instrument in writing, declaring the same, and subscribed by the person refusing to accept or resign, as the case may be, and delivered into the office of the Secretary of State.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a single minute to state the purport of my amendment, which is in the nature of a substitute to the committee's bill and which has just been read.

Mr. EDEN. I object.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I ask for not more than two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on his objection?

Mr. EDEN. I withdraw it.

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, my substitute preserves existing law as it was made in 1792, and leaves the Presidential succession where we find it in that law; and the only new provision I propose is that we shall never be without a President pro tempore of the Senate and never be without a Speaker of the House of Representatives. And to this end my substitute provides that the Congress shall assemble at midday on the 4th day of March succeeding the election of Representatives in Congress for the purpose of electing a Speaker. And it further provides that in the event of the Speakership or the Presidency pro tempore of the Senate becoming vacant during the recess, the President of the United States shall forthwith assemble the House in which such vacancy exists for the purpose of electing a presiding officer.

It preserves intact the law as our fathers made it, and executes with certainty their purpose and that of the law itself. It avoids the dangerous step taken by the present bill, which takes away from the people of the country, in whom all power resides, the right to fill a vacancy in the Presidency in a certain contingency, that contingency being the death or removal of both President and Vice-President of the United States. I would leave that power with the people, where it properly belongs. I am opposed to any step in the opposite direction. My substitute follows the pathway of the founders of the Government, which, in my judgment, is the path of safety.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MCKINLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HAMMOND. What assurance have we, if we adopt any amendment to this bill, the Senate will concur, or that we will get any law that will meet the present distress?

Mr. MCKINLEY. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Georgia, I have no doubt if we send to the Senate well considered amendments they will receive the attentive consideration of that body. At all events, no matter what the Senate has done and no matter what the Senate may do, it is our business to perfect this bill as best we can. That burden rests upon us. And further, in answer to the gentleman, I would say there is no such emergency as he describes. There is no such lapse. There are two lives next to the President of the United States—the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. CALDWELL. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order of business.

Mr. CALDWELL. The gentleman from Ohio only asked for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. But no limitation was put upon the time.

The question recurs on the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY].

Mr. MCKINLEY and Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 108, nays 159, not voting 57; as follows:

So the substitute was rejected.

On motion of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to move that this bill be recommitted to the select committee.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is now operating. After the bill has been ordered to a third reading, then, under the rules of the House, it will be in order to move to commit with or without instructions, even though the previous question be then ordered or a demand for it pending.

The question now is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. CALDWELL. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to recommit this bill, but first make this parliamentary inquiry: If a motion to recommit without instruction is voted down will it be in order to move to recommit with instructions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. Under the rule but one motion to recommit is in order, whether with or without instructions. The Chair, however, has ruled heretofore that a motion to recommit without instruction is subject to an amendment, so as to instruct the committee.

Mr. PERKINS. I will make a motion to recommit this bill to the select committee from which it came, hoping that it may report a bill that will be satisfactory to the House.

Mr. RYAN addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN], some time during the course of the debate, to say that it was his intention to make a motion to recommit.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to submit that motion now.

Mr. PERKINS. I give way to my colleague to make the motion.

Mr. RYAN. I move to recommit this bill to the committee with the following instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit the bill with instructions to report as a substitute a resolution submitting an amendment to the Constitution providing one or more additional Vice-Presidents, upon whom, in their order, the office of President shall devolve in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of President and Vice-President.

Mr. EDEN. That would not be in order upon this bill.

Mr. COBB. I move to lay the motion on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order.

Mr. SOWDEN. I make the point of order that it is not in order to submit that motion at this time, the previous question having been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House provide that this motion shall be in order at a certain stage of the bill even after the previous question has been demanded or ordered.

Mr. MILLS. But the measure proposed by the motion to recommit is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill; one is to report a constitutional amendment, another is the passage of a bill for a specific purpose. The motion to recommit is not germane.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas and see whether it is germane or not. The Chair thinks on examination that the matter of the resolution which it is proposed to instruct the committee to report is germane to the subject-matter of this bill. It is upon the succession to the Presidential office; and though it may come back to the House in the form of a joint resolution instead of a bill, technically speaking, yet it requires the same proceeding in the House, and is a similar legislative proposition.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the regular order.

Mr. EVERHART. Is it in order to move to amend the instructions?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is; but debate is not in order.

Mr. EVERHART. I submit as a substitute for the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Kansas what I send to the desk.

The Clerk proceeded to read as follows:

That in the case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability——

The SPEAKER (interrupting the reading). That seems to be an amendment to the bill. The pending proposition is to recommit to the committee with instructions.

Mr. EVERHART. This is an amendment to the instructions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, then, does not understand that the gentleman proposed this as a substitute for the whole of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kansas, but to recommit with the instructions embodied in what the Clerk is now reading.

Mr. EVERHART. That is the motion that I desire to make.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that it is not in order, on the ground that the motion to recommit is not amendable. But one motion is in order under the rules, to commit with or without instructions; and if it be held that that motion is amendable it is manifest that we could never come to a conclusion on a bill as long as amendments might be offered by its opponents.

The SPEAKER. That point was made during the Forty-eighth Congress, and the Chair then decided that under the rule of the House one motion to recommit, with or without instruction, and one motion only, was in order, but that from the very nature of the case members upon the floor ought to have the right to offer an amendment to the motion, and for the very obvious reason that an advocate of the pending measure, and therefore an opponent of recommitment, might offer a motion to recommit with such instructions as it was evident the House would not agree to, thereby preventing anybody who desired in good faith to recommit the measure from submitting such a motion. The Chair thought it was a matter of simple justice to those on the floor who desired to recommit with substantial instructions that they should have an opportunity to propose amendments. The motion to recommit is an independent proposition, upon which the previous question may be ordered, and until such order is made by the House the Chair thinks amendments may be proposed as in other cases. The Clerk will read from the Digest the decision made on this point during the last Congress.

The Clerk read as follows:

A motion to commit under clause 1 of Rule XVI, with or without instructions, is subject to amendment under Rule XIX, unless precluded by ordering the previous question on the motion to commit.—Journal, first session Forty-eighth Congress.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the proposed substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

That in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President of the United States, the following persons, if eligible to the office of President, and not under impeachment or indictment at the time being, shall, respectively, in the order and on the contingences hereinafter named, act as President of United States until the disability of the President and Vice-President be removed or a President shall be elected: First, the Speaker of the House of Representatives; or if there be no Speaker, or if there be and he decline, or, as President, die, resign, be removed, or be unable to act as such, then, second, the President pro tempore of the Senate; or if there be no President pro tempore of the Senate, or if there be and he decline, or, as President, die, resign, be removed, or be unable to act as such, then, third, the Secretary of State, having been legally confirmed; or if there be no Secretary of State, or if there be and he decline, or, as President, die, resign, be removed, or be unable to act as such, then, fourth, the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, having been legally confirmed; or if there be no Chief-Justice, or if there be and he decline, or, as President, die, resign, be removed, or be unable to act as such, then, fifth, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, having been legally confirmed; or if there be no Secretary of the Treasury, or if there be and he decline, or, as President, die, resign, be removed, or be unable to act as such, then, sixth, the Attorney-General of the United States, having been legally confirmed: Provided, That when any of the persons above named shall, as aforesaid, become President, he shall not exercise the functions of any other public office of trust or profit while President, and shall, within thirty days thereafter, issue a proclamation to the people of the United States, and direct notice to be given that, in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 1, 1792, electors of President and Vice-President of the United States shall be elected or appointed in the several States.

SEC. 2. That all laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EVERHART] to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN].

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. I offer what I send to the desk as an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CALDWELL. I call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has been recognized and has sent up his amendment. The gentleman from Tennessee now demands the previous question upon the motion to recommit and the amendment thereto. The Clerk will read the proposed amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recommit the bill to the Committee on Election of President and Vice-President with instructions to report the same back to the House with the following amendment:

"Strike out the first section and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"'That in case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice-President of the United States, the Secretary of State shall act as President until the disability of the President or Vice-President is removed or a President shall be elected: Provided, That where the powers and duties of the office of President of the United States shall devolve upon the person named herein, if Congress be not then in session, or if it would not meet in accordance with law within twenty days thereafter, it shall be the duty of such person to issue a proclamation convening Congress in extraordinary session, giving twenty days' notice of the time of meeting.'"

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee now demands the previous question on the resolution of the gentleman from Kansas and the amendment thereto.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the proposition of the gentleman from Kansas to recommit the bill with instructions as read.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 81, noes 115.

Mr. RYAN. I think we ought to have the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 17—not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered, and the resolution to recommit with instructions was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on ordering the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 186, nays 76, not voting 62; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. KING. I move to dispense with the reading of the names.

There was no objection.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, with Mr. HOLMES, on the Presidential succession bill. Mr. HENDERSON, if present, would vote "ay" and Mr. HOLMES "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. CALDWELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. KING, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River be allowed a clerk, and that he be paid the usual compensation for his service.

SUITS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 3849) to provide for the bringing of suits by citizens of the United States against the Government thereof in certain cases; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. BEACH to have printed in the RECORD some remarks on Senate bill 471; and also to Mr. BAKER to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the same bill.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, indefinite leave of absence was granted to Mr. RANKIN, on account of sickness.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON LABOR.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask unanimous consent to offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Labor are hereby authorized to have printed such letters or circulars as they may deem necessary for the obtaining of information for the use of the committee.

Mr. MORRISON. Let that go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Very well.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. COBB. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Memorial of W. U. Richardson, parish superintendent of education, and others, citizens of Louisiana, asking national aid to the States in the cause of education—to the Committee on Education.

Also, memorial of the Louisiana Educational Society, asking an appropriation to aid the cause of education in the States—to the same committee.

Also, memorial of citizens of Caddo and Bossier Parishes, Louisiana, asking that Sale and Murphy Canal, an outlet of Red River, be closed—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, papers to accompany H. R. 964 for relief of Mary J. Cloud, assignee of John W. Smith—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BLAND: Petition of James Bainster, of Missouri, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. C. R. BRECKINRIDGE: Petition of citizens of Beebe, White County, Arkansas, praying for temporary national aid to education—to the Committee on Education.

Also, papers to accompany bill for the relief of the estate of William Wright, deceased—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE: Petition of Thomas B. Ford and other citizens of Frankfort, protesting against the division of Kentucky into two judicial districts—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, papers relating to claim of D. W. Price—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BUCHANAN: Papers relating to claim of William Dalton—to the same committee.

Also, papers relating to claim of James McAnny—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BARRY: Of certain citizens of Calhoun County, Mississippi.

By Mr. ELY: Of George W. Kimball and 190 others.

SENATE.

MONDAY, January 18, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

DISTRICT METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the president of the Metropolitan Railroad Company; which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed:

OFFICE OF THE METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY, NEAR P STREET BRIDGE AND ROCK CREEK,
Washington, D. C., January 15, 1886.

SENATORS: In compliance with the twenty-second section of the act of July 1, 1864, incorporating this company, I have the honor to transmit herewith the return for the fiscal year 1885, and returns for the preceding years of 1879 to 1884 inclusive.

It will be observed that the returns prior to 1885 are not sworn to, as the affairs of the company were during those years under different management and the present officers have not the knowledge that would enable them to make oath to those returns.

It is respectfully suggested for the consideration of the Senate that the present officers of this company are not responsible for the omissions occurring prior to their accession to its control.

Very respectfully,

GEO. W. PEARSON,
President Metropolitan Railroad Company.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President pro tempore U. S. Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Board of Public Works of Cincinnati, Ohio, praying for the location of a national foundry for the construction of ordnance for the Army and Navy at that place; which was referred to the Select Committee to Inquire as to the Capacity of Steel-producing Works in the United States.

Mr. HARRISON. I present the petition of Wallace Foster and 308 other pensioners, who are suffering from deafness, praying the passage of a law increasing the pension for that disability. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the petition of certain citizens of Iowa, praying for the forfeiture of what is known as "the unearned Sioux City and Saint Paul Railroad land grant." The bill providing for this forfeiture having been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE presented resolutions adopted by the Commercial Exchange of Alexandria, Va., favoring liberal appropriations for the United States Signal Service; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COKE. I present the petition of a large number of merchants of El Paso, Tex., praying for the intervention of the Government of the United States in behalf of the Rio Grande border, to which they say a large number of the lawless men in the Republic of Mexico are being attracted by the facilities offered by the Mexican tariff laws and the creation of the Free Zone, the Zona Libre, as it is called, for smuggling. They represent that it is impossible for Americans on the American side of the Rio Grande to do a legitimate business when foreigners can transport their goods and land them on the other side of the Rio Grande free of duty and await opportunities for successful smuggling, a great deal of which, it is said in this petition, is being carried on, greatly to the detriment of the revenues of this Government, as well as that of American traders on this side of the river.

The petitioners claim the establishment of the Zona Libre to be an unfriendly act on the part of the Mexican Government, and ask some relief from this Government, and if it can not be done in any other way, they pray that negotiations be opened with the authorities of the Republic of Mexico looking to some change in the Mexican law which creates a depot on the bank of the Rio Grande, from its mouth to its source, from which smugglers can introduce their goods free of duty into the United States.

I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present the petition of L. J. Bales and 78 other citizens of Iowa, praying that the charge of desertion be removed from the record of Daniel Lasure, late a private in Company G, Fifth Regiment West Virginia Volunteers. This petition is addressed to me personally, but it is evidently intended for the consideration of the Senate. I therefore present it, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be received, if there be no objection, and so referred.

Mr. VANCE presented the petition of Hardy Summerline, of New Hanover County, North Carolina, praying that his claim for supplies furnished the United States during the late war be referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE presented the memorial of Alvah Dolliver and 74 other fishermen of Southwest Harbor, Me., remonstrating against the appointment of a commission to negotiate a renewal of the fishery provisions of the treaty of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition signed by several hundred merchants and ship-owners of New York city, praying for the establishment of a telegraphic line and a signal station at Point Jupiter, Florida. The petition states that—

All vessels from the Gulf of Mexico to ports on the east coast of North America or Europe, and nearly all steamers from those ports to the Gulf of Mexico, pass within signaling distance of that point.

The successful work already accomplished in warning masters of vessels of the approach of severe storms at other points, resulting in the safety and protection of life and property exposed to the dangers of the sea, strongly influences us in making this request.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce, to be considered in connection with the bill introduced by me for this purpose.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL presented a petition of the Board of Underwriters of New York city; a petition of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, and a petition of the merchants and ship-owners of the city of New York, praying for the passages of the bill providing that a telegraph line be constructed, operated, and maintained in connectien with a signal station at Point Jupiter, Florida; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DOLPH presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying that an appropriation be made for the erection of a fish hatchery on the Clackamas River, in the State of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

He also presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying for the enactment of a law setting apart from the public domain as a public park or pleasure ground for the benefit of the people of the United States, and reserving from public sale, settlement, or occupancy townships 27, 28, 29, 30, and the north half of township 31, in ranges 5 and 6, east of the Willamette meridian, State of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon, praying for a survey of the rapids of Link River, and an estimate of the cost of constructing locks and dams and removing obstructions from that river, so as to make the same navigable between the Upper and Lower Klamath Lakes, in Klamath County, Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying that sufficient appropriations be made for the speedy completion of the work being constructed for the improvement of the bar at the mouth of the Columbia River, in Oregon, and Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Leglslative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying that an appropriation of $200,000 be made for a survey of the Siuslaw Bay and the bar, for the construction of jetties at the mouth thereof, and the erection of a light-house near the mouth of that river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying that the use of certain lands appropriated by the United States for the purpose of constructing a canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon, be granted by the Government to the public for the transportation of freight and passengers around the portage by a temporary railway or other suitable means, under such restrictions and regulations as may be deemed necessary to prevent injury to said canal or the obstruction of the progress of the work thereon; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the officers and citizens of Clatsop County, Oregon, praying for the passage of a bill authorizing Clatsop County to construct a bridge across Young's Bay and Skipanon Creek, in that county; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I present the petition of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon, praying that the grants of land to aid in the construction of military wagon-roads from Eugene City, Oreg., to the eastern boundary of the State, and from Dalles City, by way of Camp Watson, Canyon City, and Mormon or Humboldt Basin, to a point on Snake River opposite Fort Boisé, so far as the same has not been patented or listed, may be abolished, vacated, annulled, and declared lapsed; and in case patents have already been issued for all or any part of the lands to any corporation, that suits be authorized in the United States courts to vacate the lists and patents except where lands have been acquired in good faith. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I present a petition of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying that the United States reserve from public sale, settlement, or occupancy townships 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 south, in ranges 5 and 6 east, of the Willamette meridian, State of Oregon, and that the same be set apart exclusively as a public park for the people of the nation. The petition recites that within said limits is Crater Lake, which may very properly be ranked among the wonders of the world, its surface being 6,300 feet above the sea level, and 8 miles long and 6 miles wide, having within it a circular island 600 feet high, containing an extinct crater which is 90 feet deep and 475 feet in diameter, and in another portion a conical-shaped rock perpendicular, and rising 2,200 feet above the water surface. I will state that this is a different petition from the one on the same subject presented by my colleague [Mr. DOLPH], being in addition to it. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon, praying that a portion of the Siletz Indian reservation, in the State of Oregon, be thrown open to settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying that an appropriation be made for the purpose of opening a channel sufficient for navigation up the Umpqua River to a point at or near the town of Elkton, in Douglas County, Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, praying for the passage of the bill known as the "Cullen" House bill No. 7498, Forty-eighth Congress, for appropriating sums of $15,000 for agricultural experiments at the various State agricultural colleges; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GEORGE presented the petition of E. P. Ward, of Benton County, Mississippi, and the petition of Mrs. Angeline Floyd, of Benton County, Mississippi, praying for relief under the provisions of the so-called Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MAXEY presented the petition of Theodore J. Eckerson, major, United States Army (retired), praying an amendment of the law in reference to grades in the military service; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MORRILL presented a petition of the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children of the District of Columbia, praying an appropriation to assist them in their work; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 574) for the relief of Robert Strachan, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 699) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue to George K. Otis duplicates of certain land-warrants lost while in the possession of the officers of the Government, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 764) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue to George K. Otis duplicates of certain land-warrants lost while in the possession of the officers of the Government, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PLUMB. I am also instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 624) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I ask the privilege at some subsequent day to present a written report to accompany the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will have that privilege. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 391) for the relief of A. A. Thomas, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 150) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 518) for the relief of John Alexander, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I present a written report to accompany the bill (S. 149) forfeiting a part of certain lands granted to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of railroads in that State, and for other purposes, which bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands a few days since.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed.

Mr. TELLER from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 620) to grant the right of way through the public lands for irrigation purposes, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 1092) to grant the right of way through the public lands for irrigation purposes; which was read twice by its title.

NAVY REGISTER.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back favorably, without amendment, the resolution for printing the Navy Register, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the Navy Register for 1886 be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska if that is the usual number and the same number that is printed of the Army Register.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have here the resolution with regard to the Army Register, which I shall report when this is disposed of. I will state for the information of the Senator that there is no law or rule which provides for the printing of either the Army or the Navy Register for the use of either House of Congress, and we are compelled either to pass a special resolution in this form or to obtain the volumes from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am aware of that fact, but I was inquiring about the number. I know we have to order them printed every year, but I should like to have some uniformity and regularity in the number that is ordered printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand from the clerk of the committee that a thousand copies is the usual number. The matter is all in type, and the cost will be about $150 for printing that number.

The resolution was agreed to.

ARMY REGISTER.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am also instructed by the Committee on Printing to report, with an amendment, the following resolution:

Resolved, That 800 copies of the Army Register for 1886 be printed for the use of the Senate.

By unanimous consent the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the resolution by striking out "800" and inserting "1,000."

Mr. MANDERSON. That is the recommendation of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the committee will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1, before the word "copies," it is proposed to strike out "800" and insert "1,000;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That 1,000 copies of the Army Register for 1886 be printed for the use of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. From the select committee appointed to investigate and report on the subject of regulating the transportation of freights and passengers between the several States by railroads and water routes I submit a report, and with it I offer a resolution to be referred to the Committee on Printing. I desire also to report a bill upon the same subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution reported from the select committee will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 5,000 additional copies of the report of the Senate Select Committee on Interstate Commerce be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution, under the rule, will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. ALLISON. Does that include the testimony?

Mr. CULLOM. The purpose is to include the testimony.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the resolution be read again.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. CULLOM. I find that the words "and testimony" are not included in the resolution. I should like to have those words inserted, so as to include the testimony.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it read "the report, including the testimony."

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that amendment will be made. The Chair hears none. The resolution as amended will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. CULLOM. I also report a bill on the same subject from the select committee.

The bill (S. 1093) to regulate commerce was read twice by its title.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the bill be recommitted, and that the committee be continued until the subject is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves to recommit the bill to the committee reporting it, being the Select Committee on Transportation by Railroad between the several States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask the Senator from Illinois whether the bill is reported from the select committee or whether it is a bill introduced by the Senator?

Mr. CULLOM. It is a report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the bill be recommitted.

Mr. HARRIS. Before the motion is put, I desire to say that the report of the committee accompanying the bill is somewhat voluminous, and I have not had an opportunity, as a member of the committee, to examine it with the care that I should like to do. While so far as I have examined it I see nothing in it that does not meet my approval, I am not quite prepared to say that I do approve everything which may be found in it, because I have not had an opportunity to examine it all.

In the main I concur in the provisions of the bill reported, but the committee deemed it best to scrutinize the bill a little more carefully before being finally reported to the Senate for its action.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be recommitted.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to include in the motion to recommit that the committee be continued until the subject is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was included in the motion made by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The recommittal of the bill would continue the committee in and of itself, although it is a special committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was included in the order made.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. COLQUITT (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1094) for the relief of Thomas A. McLaughlin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1095) for the relief of Joel A. Billups; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 1096) defining the rights of purchasers at judicial sales under mortgages or deeds of trust of the road and property of railroad corporations organized under the laws of the United States and creating such purchasers a new corporation vested with all the franchises and privileges of the old corporation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 1097) to promote the efficiency of the artillery of the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1098) granting a pension to H. R. Duke; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 1099) to authorize the Mississippi Water Power and Boom Company, of Brainerd, Minnesota, to construct a dam across the Mississippi river; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 1100) to amend the ninth section of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1885; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1101) to provide for allotments of lands in severalty to the Indians residing upon the Round Valley reservation, in the State of California, and granting patents therefor, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 1102) granting an increase of pension to Dr. A. Lanning; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1103) granting a pension to Caroline E. French; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRISON. I introduce a bill to carry out the purpose of the petition which I presented this morning, proposing to increase the pension of soldiers who are suffering from deafness.

The bill (S. 1104) giving to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the war of the rebellion increased pensions for loss of hearing was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (S. 1105) granting the right of way to the Kensington and Tacony Railroad Company through the arsenal grounds at Bridesburg, Philadelphia, Pa.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PIKE introduced a bill (S. 1106) in regard to the conveyance and devise of real estate in the District of Columbia and keeping a record and index of attachments of real estate; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 1107) for the relief of J. G. Fell, Edward Hoopes, and George Burnham on account of Indian depredations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1108) to confirm title to certain private land grants in Arizona Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1109) to confirm the title to that certain private land grant "Tres Alamos," in Arizona Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1110) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 1111) to set apart from the public domain in the State of Oregon as a public park for the benefit of the people of the United States townships 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31, in ranges 5 and 6, east of the Willamette meridian, in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, introduced a bill (S. 1112) granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 1113) granting a pension to Lawrence A. Hudson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORGAN. I am requested by some gentlemen from Dakota to introduce a bill and have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 1114) defining the powers of the Commissioner of the General Land Office in respect to canceling private entries of the public domain and to quiet title to land in the Northwest, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLUMB subsequently said: I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the reference which was made of the bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] a few moments ago. The title of it plainly indicates that it is a bill referring solely to the public lands of the United States; yet it was, on the suggestion of that Senator, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I am not tenacious specially of the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Lands, but inasmuch as that committee now has before it and is carefully considering all the phases of the public land questions which have been brought to its attention with a view to the formulation of a general bill which shall meet the situation according to the conception of that committee, I think that everything of that character ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands and not to other committees of this body not interested specially in such matters.

Mr. MORGAN. I had the same view of the subject, and only asked the reference of the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary because the gentlemen who requested me to introduce the bill said they had taken some opinion of Senators about it, and the Committee on the Judiciary was supposed to be the proper committee. It is a subject that relates to the administration of the public land laws of the United States and might very appropriately go to the Committee on Public Lands. That would be my private judgment about it. I only yielded to the suggestion of those gentlemen.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the reference be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and the Senator from Kansas moves to reconsider that vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was spoken to on the subject that the bill refers to in view of the relief that the people interested wish to obtain, and I told them plainly that I thought the bill ought to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I hope that the Senate will agree to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PAYNE introduced a bill (S. 1115) to increase the pension of Mrs. Isabella H. Silvey, of Richmond, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BOWEN introduced a bill (S. 1116) for the erection of a public building at Pueblo, Colo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. JACKSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1117) for the relief of Emanuel Mason; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 1118) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to the rightful owners the contents of certain boxes deposited in the Treasury Department by the Secretary of War; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 1119) to provide for the appointment of hospital stewards, United States Army, and to fix their pay and allowances; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1120) to authorize the Omaha National Bank, of Omaha, Nebr., to increase its capital stock; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1121) extending patent of Frederick S. Jennings, of Danbury, Conn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. TELLER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1122) for the relief of the heirs of Rudolph Leschot, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 1123) to authorize the Chicago,

Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railway Company to construct, operate, and maintain a pile ponton railway bridge across the Missouri River near or in the vicinity of Chamberlain, in the Territory of Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1124) granting a pension to William Bethuren; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1125) granting a pension to Noah Nelson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1126) granting a pension to William H. Moore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1127) to amend and correct the act approved March 3, 1885, granting a pension to Sarah Hague; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1128) to remove the charge of desertion against Daniel Van Wicklin; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 1129) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Louise Home, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1130) to exempt from taxation all property held by the trustees of the Corcoran Gallery of Art, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 1131) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.," approved March 2, 1885; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 1132) for the relief of Green Arnold, of the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1133) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Hunter Hardie; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1134) for the creation of a commission to distribute the balance of the fund derived from the Geneva award, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1135) to reorganize the steamboat-inspection service and to consolidate the office of Supervising Inspector-General of Steamboats with the Bureau of Navigation, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present, to accompany the bill, a brief statement and explanation of it and its effects. I move that it be printed for the use of the Committee on Commerce and referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced a bill (S. 1136) additional to an act entitled "An act to provide a national currency secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for the circulation and redemption thereof," passed June 3, 1864; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMPTON introduced a bill (S. 1137) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VOORHEES. Pursuant to the act of their Legislature, the people of the Territory of Montana in 1884 held a constitutional convention, adopted a constitution, submitted it to the vote of their people, and it was ratified. They also agreed upon a memorial to be presented to the Congress of the United States praying for admission as a State, and designated a committee of ten persons, eminent citizens of the Territory, to see that it was presented.

I have the honor to present that memorial, and as it is brief I will venture to ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I also present the constitution, which is properly certified by the secretary of state as correct, and ask that it be printed for the use of the Senate, and having done that, I present a bill for the admission of the State of Montana into the Union.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the constitution of the Territory of Montana presented by him be printed as a document. That order will be made if there be no objection.

The bill (S. 1138) for the admission of the State of Montana into the Union was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana asks that the paper referred to by him be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Pursuant to an ordinance adopted by the constitutional convention of the Territory of Montana, begun and held at Helena, Mont., on January 14, A. D. 1884, and concluded February 9, 1884, the undersigned committee have the honor to submit herewith the following memorial adopted by said convention:

"To the honorable the President of the United States and the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

"Your memorialists, the people of Montana Territory, through their representative in Congress assembled, respectfully represent:

"That since the organization of the Territory of Montana we have cheerfully yielded obedience to the laws of the United States and recognized the right of Congress to make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories:

"That we now disclaim any purpose of disloyal action, but renewing our fealty to the Constitution of the United States, and recalling to mind the right of the people to peacefully assemble and by petition represent their grievances to Congress, do further represent:

"That the policy which has so long prevailed of sending strangers to rule over us and fill our offices has become distasteful to us, and is wholly unsuited to our present condition and the growing importance of the diversified interests of our country.

"That within the past few years our population and resources have been largely augmented, whereby the proper administration of our laws demands a more perfect and comprehensive system of government than can ever be attained under our Territorial organization.

"That in order to enlarge our liberties, secure a closer connection with the American Union, and for the establishment and maintenance of a better government, your memorialists, with the consent of the Legislative Assembly, have met in convention, and framed a constitution, republican in form, for the State of Montana, and herewith present a certified copy thereof for your approval; and if, upon consideration of the same, you find it unobjectionable in substance and form, your memorialists pray that the Territory of Montana be speedily admitted into the Union of the United States thereunder; and your memorialists will ever pray."

JOS. K. TOOLE,
Delegate in Congress.
W. A. CLARK,
President of Constitutional Convention.
SAMUEL T. HAUSER,
Governor.
WM. H. HUNT,
E. W. TOOLE,
JAMES H. MILLS,
RICHD. O. HICKMAN,
JOSEPH A. BROWNE,
W. J. McCORMICK,
WALTER COOPER,
Committee.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (S. 1139) to increase the pension of Peter Lennon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1140) granting arrears of pension to Alexander St. Bernard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN introduced a bill (S. 1141) for the relief of the heirs of W. D. Ellis, deceased, late of Atlanta, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 1142) to authorize the Secretary of War to sell certain land of the United States in the city of Saint Louis, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 1143) to direct the Secretary of the Navy to purchase for the United States the right to make and use a certain "improvement in machines for bending metal links," and to provide for the payment thereof; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 30) authorizing the printing of a naval report; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MANDERSON, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the bill (S. 879) for the relief of A. G. Shaw be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. MAXEY, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Maj. Theodore J. Eckerson, United States Army, retired, be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to certain lands in Saginaw Bay, in the State of Michigan, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. PIKE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of Laban Heath & Co. be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims, there being no adverse report.

Ordered, That that the papers in the case of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Rev. Worcester Willey, and Esther Smith be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, there being no adverse report.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Caroline E. French be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions, there having been no adverse report thereon.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, of New York, it was Ordered, That the papers on file in the Senate in the case of Phœbe H. Meech be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Mathilda Victor on file in the Senate be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion of Mr. CONGER, it was Ordered, That the papers in the pension claim of Peter Lennon be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

COMPILATION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. VANCE. I offer the following concurrent resolution for reference to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 1,000 copies of the compilation of the internal-revenue laws of the United States, with a history of the legislation in regard thereto from the organization of the Government to the present time, by D. R. Goodloe; of which 200 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 700 copies for the use of the House, and 100 copies for the use of the Treasury Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. BECK. I think a compilation of that sort, if it is from a private person, ought first to pass under the review of the Committee on Finance, to see whether it is such a matter as the Finance Committee would care to recommend, because we have had several compilations, and unless it is perfectly accurate (and I suppose the Committee on Printing would not have the same opportunity of testing that as the committee in charge of those matters) we should not care to have it. I should like to have the resolution go to the Committee on Finance and let them report back whether this is such a compilation as they would recommend the printing of.

Mr. VANCE. I have no objection to that reference.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from North Carolina is himself a member of the Finance Committee, and I think the resolution had better go there first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the reference of the resolution will be made to the Committee on Finance instead of the Committee on Printing.

PURIFICATION OF POTOMAC WATER.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, instructed to ascertain the practicability of providing the water-works of the District with filterers or other appliances for clearing and purifying the water, and shall report the result of their inquiries, together with estimates of the cost and application of the same.

CALLED BONDS HELD BY NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate what proportion of the $10,000,000 United States bonds called for payment February 1, 1886, are held by national banks as a basis for circulation; and if any are so held, by what banks and the amount held by each.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas whether he thinks the Senate has any right to ask the Secretary of the Treasury for any information concerning matters that are in his Department. I have heard it doubted in the newspapers and so on.

Mr. INGALLS. I presume that the Senator from Vermont is hardly serious.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perfectly so.

Mr. INGALLS. I presume that he is hardly serious in the question that he asks as applied to this resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Or any other.

Mr. INGALLS. I have understood from credible sources that a very large proportion of the $10,000,000 of bonds which have been called for payment on the 1st day of February next is held by national banks as a basis for circulation, and that therefore instead of a payment of $10,000,000 from the surplus funds now held in the Treasury to extinguish the interest-bearing debt of the United States there is to be merely a process of book-keeping by which certain bonds, amounting, I am advised, to nearly $8,000,000 out of the $10,000,000, are to be called from national banks, by means of which a large amount of circulation will be retired and the circulating medium of this country to that extent contracted.

I think it concerns the country materially to know whether there is to be a payment of $10,000,000 out of the Treasury on the 1st day of February or whether by a process of book-keeping we are to have a reduction of the circulating medium of this country to one-half or two-thirds of that amount.

As the Senator from Vermont suggests, I do not know that we have any right constitutionally to call upon the Secretary of the Treasury for information on any point confided to him for execution, but at least we can have the opportunity of ascertaining whether the Secretary of the Treasury thinks that he is authorized to communicate that fact to the Senate and after that to take such action as we may think advisable.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator from Kansas advise me whether the law does not require the Secretary of the Treasury to call in for redemption and payment the outstanding bonds in a certain order, and whether the Secretary can consider or even make any regulation in regard to bonds that are held by the national banks different from bonds held by individuals?

Mr. INGALLS. My resolution makes no implication upon the Secretary; it inquires merely about a matter of fact, whether or not any portion of these bonds, which are called in accordance with law I assume, is held by national banks as a basis of their circulation.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that, but I simply asked the Senator a question. He being on the Judiciary Committee is presumed to know all things, and I asked him if the law did not require the Secretary of the Treasury to call bonds in a certain order.

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly there is no controversy upon that point. My resolution is directed merely to an inquiry of fact, and intends no imputation whatever upon the exercise of the duty or the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury in calling for bonds makes a call for certain designated bonds without regard to whether they are held by national banks or by others.

Mr. INGALLS. I understand so; but I desire that the Senate shall know what proportion of these bonds is at this time held by national banks as a basis for circulation, to the end that we may understand what proportion of the money now held in the Treasury is to be used for the purpose of extinguishing the interest-bearing debt of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the resolution is a very proper one, whether the Secretary of the Treasury has any discretionary power as to what kind of bonds he will call or not.

The point to which I (with a slight attempt at humor, I will say to be careful about it) called attention was to have the Senate vividly sensible of the fact that the public press of the country has latterly given out in pretty large doses apparently the idea that neither House of Congress had a right to know anything regarding what existed in the various Departments; and so, as I wished to vote for this resolution understandingly and with my eyes open, I thought I would open the eyes of others.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the resolution is of sufficient importance to be printed and go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over under the rules and be printed.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That Hon. G. C. Moody, of Dakota, be admitted to the floor of the Senate during the present session.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be printed and lie over. Does it come from a committee?

Mr. HARRISON. No, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me appeal to the Senator from Missouri not to make an objection. The Senator may have forgotten that this is one of the gentlemen who have been elected by the people there who are trying to form a State as Senators, and I remember that in all the former instances for twenty years when a Territory applied irregularly, as we determined in the case of Colorado when it first came up without authority and the Senate rejected their proposition, the person claiming to be elected Senator was permitted as a matter of courtesy to come on the floor just as our friends do. I am sure that it does not recognize any right in those people to form a State to allow this gentleman to be treated as all his predecessors in like circumstances have been.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Missouri will allow a word before he responds. The Senator will notice that the resolution is carefully framed. It does not involve any concession to the movement that has been inaugurated in Dakota; does not describe the gentleman named as a Senator or give him any official appellation at all. I have omitted from the resolution the name of his associate, Hon. A. J. Edgerton, for the reason that, having been a Senator in this body, he is already entitled to the privileges of the floor.

I could call the Senator's attention to a number of precedents upon this subject. In the case of Michigan Mr. Benton, of Missouri, made a little speech upon the subject; and if the Senate will bear with me a moment I should like to read what he said on this subject. It is a brief extract.

In the proceedings of the Senate on December 10, 1835, the following appears:

Mr. Benton presented the credentials of Hon. Lucius Lyon and Hon. John Norvell, elected by the Legislature of Michigan Senators from that State; which were read.

This was before the admission of the State, while the matter was still pending.

Mr. Benton then moved that seats be assigned to Mr. Lyon and Mr. Norvell on the floor of the Senate until the decision of the question of their admission as Senators. This [Mr. B. said] had been done by courtesy in similar cases.

A few days afterward, speaking to this question, he said of his own case—and I call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the courtesy which was extended to the first Senator from Missouri before that State was admitted into the Union:

When a gentleman brought a letter to him from a respectable source he at least asked him to take a seat until he read it; and here (said he) these gentlemen have brought a letter from a State, de facto, signed by a high official functionary, and we are to hesitate before we extend to them an act of common courtesy! * * * But it had been said that the adoption of the resolution would prejudge the case of the admission of Michigan into the Union; that the mere courtesy of asking the gentlemen to sit down was to commit the Senate as to their admission as Senators. Are we of such treacherous memories as not to recollect what took place with regard to the admission of Missouri into the Union? Were the Senators from Missouri not sent back after having had seats assigned them? Was there one single Senator influenced in the vote he gave on that occasion by the fact that seats had been assigned to the Missouri Senators pending the question of their admission? He [Mr. B.] was here as one of those Senators—

Again I ask the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the courtesy extended to the first Senator from Missouri—and was told by that accomplished gentleman and amiable man who then filled the chair [Mr. Gaillard] to take his seat; and he [Mr. B.] had all the incidental privileges of a Senator extended to him. He had the right to frank documents to wherever he pleased, and he had the privilege of using the stationery of the Senate, notwithstanding the question of right was decided against him and he was sent home. As to the question of the admission of Michigan he, for one, remained not only uncommitted but undecided as to the course he should take.

The Senate adopted the resolution a few days afterward extending to the gentlemen from Michigan the privileges of the floor. I have only read so much. I could call up other precedents. It has been regarded as a matter of courtesy in a case like this. Still, if the Senator from Missouri insists on his objection, the resolution must go over for further debate.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is a very unfair statement of the distinguished Senator from Indiana that I was objecting to this or asking it to lie over because I was opposed to it. I am not opposed to it, but there is no necessity for any such hurry and speed about this matter now.

The Senator has had a month in which to present this, and now, because in the absence of my colleague I asked that it lie over, we have got to have a harangue here in regard to what has been heretofore done in these cases and what courtesies have been extended to the Senators from Missouri and other Senators. This distinguished gentleman will not suffer by being kept out of the Senate Chamber until to-morrow. I do not propose to offer any objection to it, but in deference to the wishes of my colleague I asked that it lie over.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator's manner I can overlook, for I know that it does not represent that which is in his heart; otherwise I should somewhat resent the terms which he has used in criticising the remarks I made.

I made no objection to the resolution going over, though the Senator did not disclose his purpose, because I recognize the right of any Senator to ask that any resolution may lie over. I should have said nothing whatever on the subject now except for the fact that the Senator from Vermont had made an appeal to the Senator from Missouri for the present consideration of the resolution. That having been done, I felt called upon to make the brief statement I did make in reference to the precedents. I am glad to hear the Senator from Missouri say that he does not intend when the resolution comes up in an orderly way to offer any objection to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over, under the rules, until to-morrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 471) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 128) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a duplicate certificate of deposit to the People's National Bank of Lawrenceburg, Ind.; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

THE LATE ISRAEL KIMBALL, JR.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, it is a painful duty which I now rise to discharge of announcing to the Senate the death of Mr. Israel Kimball, jr., lately clerk of the Committee on Education and Labor. Last Tuesday morning he was in full health and strength, engaged in the discharge of the ordinary duties of his position, and on Friday morning, after being stricken with illness the day before, he died.

Mr. Kimball was a young man of fine natural abilities, which had been improved by cultivation, and among all his numerous friends he was known as a genial and true-hearted gentleman. He was a man of most endearing personal qualities. He had served this committte and the Senate for several years with conspicuous ability and fidelity. By his sudden death his widow and his little child are left entirely dependent, and the circumstances are such as, if they were fully given to the Senate, would excite the strongest sympathy. They are also such as to call for immediate action on the part of the Senate on this resolution which I now present, following the usual resolution in such cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mrs. Lotta Lapham Kimball, widow of Israel Kimball, jr., deceased, late clerk to the Committee on Education and Labor, the sum of $2,190, being an amount equal to one year's salary at the rate per diem allowed by law to the clerk aforesaid, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. BLAIR. I understand that it is usual in all cases of the death of our employés to pay six month's salary. In this particular case the widow and child are left entirely dependent, and there is this reason for making the amount equal to what is called for by the resolution. It is the usual allowance, except that I have asked the generosity of the Senate to pay one year's salary, and it seems to me that if Senators knew as I know the circumstances there would not be the slightest hesitation in according this.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of this resolution.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall have to object; though I would be willing to consent to its going to the proper committee. I do not know myself what the precedents are, but I should like to have the matter considered by a committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rules require that it be referred.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rules require that it shall be so referred.

Mr. HARRIS. So I remember.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rules, without a motion, the reference would have been made, but that the Senator from New Hampshire asked unanimous consent to waive that rule.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not ask it if there is objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

THE NORTHEASTERN FISHERIES.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas the President in his late message recommends "that the Congress provide for the appointment of a commission, in which the Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be respectively represented, charged with the consideration and settlement, upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis, of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two Governments and their respective citizens on the coast of the United States and British North America;" and

Whereas "the fishing rights" were settled for ten years by a commission appointed under the treaty of Washington at a cost of $5,500,000 paid in money and a remission of duties amounting in the ten years to about $6,000,000 more; and

Whereas the effect of the terms agreed upon by the said commission was further an increase in the Canadian fishing fleet of five hundred vessels and of ten thousand seamen, with a corresponding decrease in our own fleet and sailors, without any appreciable benefits to the people of the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate of the United States, That in the opinion of the Senate the appointment of a commission clothed with such powers ought not to be provided for by Congress.

Mr. FRYE. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That reference will be made unless there be objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to be heard on the subject of this resolution. I have no objection to the reference, and I am glad it has been introduced; but perhaps it ought not to pass without a word in regard to the action that has been taken by the President of the United States in the agreement about the fisheries, as shown by the papers we now have before us, entered into with Her Majesty's Government after the time had expired when, according to the provisions of the law, the whole fishery matter and the customs matter connected with it were absolutely terminated.

I see by the report lately received, which I was just at this moment reading, that it appears to be stated—I speak of it under reserve, because I have only just seen it—that the President of the United States, without any advice or consent of the Senate, has entered into an arrangement with Her Majesty's Government by which citizens of the United States are accorded certain rights in fishing in British waters which by existing treaties and the laws of nations they would not otherwise have, and that British subjects are accorded certain rights in respect of fishing in American waters which under the laws of nations and existing treaties they would not otherwise have.

If that be the correct meaning of this report that is made to us it certainly presents a very grave question of the exertion of executive power in regard to entering into arrangements with other powers affecting the security of property and rights of citizens mutually, in the face of a Constitution which only gives the President power to make treaties by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. It may be said that this is not a treaty; but in respect of the objects it covers and the ends to be obtained it is precisely what a treaty would do and what it has never been supposed, I believe, could be done without a treaty.

But I do not intend to go into this now, because it may be (and I hope it will so turn out) that the nature of this arrangement is of so trivial and slight a character that it would not involve an assumption by the President of a power that the Constitution has not given to him; but I thought it right to call attention to the importance of the subject in that light.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont what right exists under the agreement entered into with the British Government that would not exist independently of that agreement. As I have understood the agreement between our Government and the British Government, there were no rights under it conceded to British fishermen which they would not otherwise have had.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let me read from the report before us:

This agreement proceeds from the mutual good-will of the two Governments, and has been reached solely to avoid all misunderstanding and difficulties which might otherwise arise from the abrupt termination of the fishing of 1885 in the midst of the season. The immunity which is accorded by this agreement to the vessels belonging to citizens of the United States engaged in fishing in the British American waters will likewise be extended to British vessels and subjects engaged in fishing in the waters of the United States.

Now if it be true—which I do not affirm or deny at this moment because I wish to proceed with the greatest consideration toward the Chief Magistrate, whose good intentions I have not the least doubt of—if it be true that the vessels of the United States would have had no authority to fish in British waters without the consent of Her Majesty's Government, which she under her system is competent to give, it is equally true under the treaty of peace of 1783 and the treaty of peace of 1815 that British subjects are under like circumstances not authorized by the laws of the United States to fish in American waters, because the rights are reciprocal, I believe; but I only speak of it now offhand. If that be so, then the President of the United States would have accorded to subjects of Her Majesty by negotiation between him and Her Majesty's Government the exertion of rights which the laws of the United States did not allow them to exert and which they could only exert, as I understand the Constitution, by a treaty or a convention made by the President in the constitutional way. It may be that it will turn out that this is otherwise. I only call attention to the subject now in the best possible spirit that it is important to see that the line be not overlooked.

Mr. MORGAN. It sometimes turns out that even the Senate and Congress of the United States take unfortunate action in regard to public affairs, and in the resolution which we passed here instructing the President to terminate the fishing treaty we happened so to fix the time of its termination as that it should arrive in the middle of the fishing season after the people of the Northeast had equipped large fleets for the purpose of fishing on the mackerel and other fishing coasts of Labrador and other parts of the British possessions. It would have been a very serious inconvenience and injury to those fishing fleets to have been stopped in their operations in the midst of their cruises; and it may be that the President of the United States, in conference with the British authorities, has strained a point in order to accommodate the interest and provide for the welfare of this large class of people who have a large amount of money invested in the fisheries.

That may be; and I shall be prepared on my part at any time to assert the privileges of the Senate of the United States under the Constitution against an agreement of that kind and to bring censure where censure should properly belong. But, sir, in timing our resolution for the termination of this treaty the Senate and the House did not take into consideration the fact that we were requiring it to be terminated in the midst of the fishing season, and there may have been evil inflicted on the people of the United States which the President sought in the best way he could to avoid, which evil lies at the door of Congress and not of the President.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to this matter for a moment——

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator from Maine proceeds will he allow me to state one fact—I do not wish to make a speech—in regard to what has been said by the Senator from Alabama?

I suppose I represent with my colleague very far the largest majority of these fishing interests, and so far as I know or am informed no fisherman agrees with the statement which has been made by the Senator from Alabama that any inconvenience was caused to them by the termination of the treaty and no fishermen of ours desired to have it extended.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator from Maine allow me to say to the Senator from Alabama that there was a year's notice to everybody who went into these waters that all these privileges were to be terminated at a given time, so that there was no occasion to make this agreement on the ground that it came suddenly upon fishermen embarked in the enterprise. A year's notice was given, so that they were perfectly aware of it, and I agree with my colleague that they have not discovered that it was done in their interest at all.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to say a few words touching this, Mr. President. I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to this very singular fact, that while it is claimed in these papers that this recommendation was for the protection of American fishermen and American interests, no American citizen, no American fisherman, ever called the attention of the Secretary of State or of the President of the United States to the danger. It was left to Mr. West, the minister from Great Britain, who on the 12th day of March, 1885, when the Senate was in session, wrote to Mr. Bayard as follows:

If, under these circumstances, the provincial or municipal authorities in Canada were to insist upon their strict rights, and to compel such vessels, on pain of seizure, to desist from fishing, considerable hardship would be occasioned to the owners.

I regard that as remarkable. No owner, no sailor, no citizen of the United States, although the two years' notice had been given, ever saw anything of his interest in jeopardy sufficient to lead him to call the attention of the President of the United States or of the Secretary of State to it; but Mr. West, the British minister, was the gentleman who was protecting the rights of the United States and of her fishermen! Why, Mr. President, Great Britain has been doing this ever since 1783, protecting, forsooth, the rights of American fishermen! And I truly admit that the United States has failed utterly and entirely in this regard during the whole one hundred years of our national life.

I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to one other, as it seems to me, very remarkable part of this agreement entered into at the request of the British minister, and that is that the President of the United States should ask Congress to provide for another commission, which should not only consider but settle all these fishing rights. So we have this very singular combination of affairs, that our Secretary of State, at the request of the British minister and without any expressed wish from any American citizen, makes practically a new treaty or extends the provisions of an old one, and further binds the President of the United States to present a recommendation to this Congress that another commission be appointed not only to consider but to settle, as the President says, these questions. To me this is a most amazing performance, and I fail to see how it can be justified.

The people of New England at any rate do not want anything to do with commissions to settle fishery questions. We had one under the Washington treaty, and I say that the United States paid $15,000,000 without ever receiving one single cent in return. Fifteen millions, I say. I remember the amount which was paid as a matter of course, five and a half millions, but we have remitted six millions of duties in the same length of time and we have opened up our markets to free fish, amounting last year to $3,500,000 worth, while Canada has a duty of 1 cent a pound against our fish. Why, sir, by that settlement Canada has gained immensely; gained in her fleet five hundred vessels; gained in her sailors nearly ten thousand men; Canada has gained an open market for fresh fish to the amount of three and a half millions of dollars annually—more even than she gained by the admission of cured fish to our markets free; and we of the United States have gained literally not one single cent. On the contrary, we have lost five hundred vessels in our fleet, over eleven thousand men, by reason of permitting the Canadians to have our market for their fish. During the whole twelve years of the treaty we did not take in Canadian waters more than seven hundred thousand dollars' worth of mackerel, and they actually cost us nearly a million of dollars.

The Senator from Alabama says that our fishermen would be there in the Gulf of St. Lawrence within the three-mile shore-line of Canada fishing in July and would need this protection. In 1881 there was 1 fisherman there; in 1882 there were 2 there in the month of July; last year and the year before there were not over 20 fishermen in all the British waters conceded to us under the Washington treaty.

I remember that in the treaty of 1783 Great Britain conceded to us the right to fish on the Grand Banks and the Banks of Newfoundland. Wonderful magnanimity on the part of Great Britain! Not one of these banks was within 25 miles of the British possessions, and running from that to 150 miles away; and in a solemn treaty she conceded to the fishermen of the United States the right to fish there. Why did she not concede to us the right to breathe the air of heaven? She had as much right to that as she had to those banks when she made that concession. And in our last treaty she conceded to us the right to fish within the shore-line, and when we went there to fish we found no fish. We have not taken in ten years enough fish within the shore-line and within the bays of Canada to pay two-thirds of the cost of the outfit and of the fishermen's wages. We took some five years ago $56,000 worth of mackerel in the British waters, and it cost $122,000 to take them. There is not a fisherman on the American side who asks any privilege in those waters.

Now, Mr. President, Mr. West can not possibly have wanted to protect our fishermen against Canada, but he did wish an agreement entered into under which a commission should be appointed to make us pay $5,500,000 more. In this same correspondence Mr. West says, and I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the significance of it:

In authorizing me to negotiate this agreement, Earl Granville states, as I have already had occasion to intimate to you, that it is on the distinct understanding that it is a temporary one, and that its conclusion must not be held to prejudice any claim which may be advanced to more satisfactory equivalents by the colonial governments in the course of the negotiation for a more permanent settlement.

Looking for one more chance to get five and a half millions of dollars out of us literally for nothing, and I do not blame the British minister for expecting success, for he got it before when the evidence all showed that we received nothing for the five millions and a half, and as a matter of fact it was simply taken out of what they regarded as an abundant fund given to the United States for their unjust and unrighteous interference with piratical vessels on our commerce in the late war.

Mr. President, the United States ask nothing, the people of the United States ask nothing, of Great Britain in these premises. We desire to send no boat into their waters. They allow us to take fish for bait under the treaty of Washington and say that is valuable to us. Why, Mr. President, it was not worth a cent to us, for when we went in there to take bait we interfered with the natural rights of those people, and they are the most dangerous rights on earth to interfere with, and we found it out in the Fortune Bay case, so familiar to the distinguished Senator from New York. Those people living in these little hamlets on the coast do not have a dollar year in and year out except what they get from our fishermen, paid to them for bait gathered in their harbors; and when one of our vessels undertakes to go there under that treaty and throw out a great seine, gather in all the bait within their little harbor, load it on board, who blames those fishermen for cutting the cables, even in a storm, and letting them go riotously out to sea? It is all they have to live on, and our fishermen gave that up the third or fourth year of the treaty, absolutely gave it up, and never have taken one pound of bait from that day to this, but have bought it of them and paid them nearly $150,000 a year for it—more money than they ever had in any one hundred years before that treaty. Besides, they accord us the privilege of shelter, buying wood, and nothing else. Amazing privileges!

I wished simply to refer this resolution, and did not propose to discuss this question at all this morning, but it is hard to refrain from saying that this agreement or treaty is a most marvelous piece of Britainism on the part of diplomacy that I have ever seen, and there have been a great many marvels in the history of diplomacy in our career. Our fishermen do not ask the British minister to interfere to save them. Our fishermen ask that the United States of America shall be self-asserting, and that is all they ask. Our fishermen ask that this great Republic of 56,000,000 people shall protect her fishermen in their rights, and secure them in seeking particular harbors and ports in Canada as Canada is permitted to seek harbors and ports in the United States of America. Our fishermen demand that, instead of yielding as we have every time to Great Britain, we shall stand for our rights. They know as well as I know that Great Britain dares not to undertake to uphold Canada in any repetition of the history from 1818 to 1826 and from 1866, after the repeal of the reciprocity treaty, to 1871. England dares not uphold Canada in sending out her cutters to seize again, as she has in the past, United States vessels, try them in colonial courts, by colonial judges, and condemn them on evidence of colonial witnesses who stood on the shore, looked out on the sea, and guessed that they were within the three-mile limit.

Why, sir, let this Republic be true to herself, and not tremble at the ghosts of dead treaties, like, for instance, that of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

England has regarded it dead for a quarter of a century, and yet to-day our great Republic, through its distinguished Executive and Secretary of State, is trembling at its ghost and sacrificing our interests. Let us assert ourselves and our power, and there will be no war, but our people here at home and on the Canada coasts will have their rights. That is all that they ask of the American Government—no war. There never was a country in the history of the wide world so under a mortgage to keep the peace with us as Great Britain is to-day. Neither they nor we seek any war.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MORGAN. Before that reference is made I wish to say a word. I confess that I am a good deal astonished at the vigor and zeal with which this question is being argued here and at the principles which seem to underlie the debate. First of all the action of the Government has not been laid before the Senate except in an informal way, has not been brought into this debate at all so that the Senate can now pass any just criticism upon the diplomacy of the State Department or of the President. We have certain assertions made here by Senators which I am not prepared to admit. They may turn out to be true, but they are startling in their nature, and I must ask further time to consider before I will agree to those statements.

It has been stated here that no American citizen and no American fisherman suggested at all that there was any necessity for the informal extension of the treaty agreement, in some of its parts at least, after it had been terminated in the midst of the fishing season by the requirements of an act of Congress. I do not know where Senators get their information from—I am not informed to that extent—that no American citizen and no American fisherman had presented any request to the Government of the United States to consider this subject, and that the request and suggestion came alone from Minister West, who is residing at Washington. I must be informed by the State Department before I can understand or believe that our Government has been actuated only by requests made by the British Government in a matter so important, as was supposed by all the world, to our fishermen along the northeastern shore.

I am equally surprised by the statements the Senators from Massachusetts make that their fishermen really had no beneficial interest in this subject, and they had no desire to have the privileges extended that were guaranteed under the fisheries treaty until the close of the fishing season. It was supposed by the rest of the United States that this agreement was being made entirely for the protection and benefit of our fishermen until they could close out the season upon which they had entered with a large expenditure of capital and the employment of a large number of men, and I confess that I am entirely surprised now to find that that was an intrusive interpellation or injection of authority and power by the Government of the United States when the fishermen on the northeastern shore made no such request, had no such desire, and would not be in any way in the world benefited by it. I do not know whether they thought they could prowl their way along the British coast and take out their mackerel, cod, and other fish, or not.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to say a word?

Mr. MORGAN. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. I beg to inform the Senator that the fish have entirely changed their ground. There is no longer such good fishing on the Canadian shores as there is upon the shores of New England, and the fish caught on the Canadian shores are merely such as are attracted by the bait thrown out by the fishing vessels. It is no longer any object for our vessels to go there.

Mr. MORGAN. That curious habit of the fish of changing their feeding grounds, grounds to which they sometimes migrate in very large schools, seems then to account for the whole of the zeal of the Senator from Maine in regard to this matter. It turns out that the Senators from Massachusetts and Maine have found out that the fishery shores of New England are richer in mackerel and other fishes this season than they were last season.

Mr. HOAR. The fish come from the British to the American side, but the action of the Government seems to go from the American to the British side.

Mr. MORGAN. That is a very fishy way of stating the proposition, to say the least, and one that the Senator from Massachusetts will perhaps find himself embarrassed with hereafter. That evidently is a fish story.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator is desirous of information, and he seems to be in a position of acquiring it for the first time. He intimates that this is a sudden change. This has been known to everybody who was negotiating these treaties for five and a half million dollars for years. There has not existed for ten or twenty years any home or fishing ground of the fish in the British waters at all, and the Senate put an end to the treaty because of that state of facts in 1883. It is no new position at all. It is known to every American who attempts to get fish in the northern waters that there are no fish there except the bait, and our people do not suppose that the British Government desires to exclude them from purchasing bait.

Mr. MORGAN. I had supposed that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] knew something about the interest of the fisheries along the New England coast, and he has just stated that within the last two years mackerel have changed their run so that they now go down to the neighborhood of Boston, I suppose in search of a higher civilization, instead of running up on the coast of Labrador or the coast at the mouth of the St. Lawrence. Now the Senator from Massachusetts says that this thing has existed for several years, that the mackerel changed their habits several years ago, and after all that was our reason for terminating the fisheries treaty.

Mr. President, I think it beggars the Senate to assign any reason of that kind for its action in the termination of a great international convention between ourselves and Great Britain. We have found out, according to the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts, that the fish themselves by some new instinct had commenced floating to our Massachusetts shores, and therefore we found that it was convenient for us and proper for us to change the fundamental law between the United States and Great Britain on the subject of the fisheries. If that is not bringing the Government of the United States down upon its knees in an attitude of humiliation before the other nations of the world I do not understand the subject. I had supposed, when the Senators from the northeastern coast of the United States were here berating this fisheries treaty and complaining of its inequality and of the five millions we had to expend, as they said unjustly, in settling balances in consequence of that treaty, that there was some permanent defect in the law, that there was some wrong about it in essence. Now it turns out that the whole trouble is that the mackerel have changed the course of their run, and that we are now making a bad bargain out of what was formerly a good bargain.

I confess that I am a little surprised that mere private greed and the desire for gain has found its way into the Senate and into the diplomatic action of the Government of the United States to such an extent as that we set aside solemn treaties with foreign powers intended to promote peace between the countries because the advantage in setting them aside, even for a moment, happens to turn on our side, and that too on a question of this character of bait and these fishing arrangements throughout.

The honorable Senator from Maine complains about the results of a commission, and he says that we want no more commissions. Mr. President, it does not follow, because a commission appointed under a preceding administration, who made a bad arrangement, a bad negotiation, and involved us in trouble with preceding administrations, and settled at our expense, unjustly as it is said, to the amount of $5,000,000, that a new commission will repeat their errors or follow in an improper course of diplomatic arrangement with the Government of Great Britain. That does not follow. Upon other topics I have understood that these gentlemen who are now opposing the suggestion of the President of the United States in regard to a commission have been very actively asserting that it was the duty of the Congress of the United States to create commissions. I have understood that we could not have any tariff legislation in this country of any just or sensible character at all unless we first organized a commission to conduct it. But now, because the President of the United States suggests or responds to a suggestion of Mr. West, that a commission between the two governments would be an appropriate way to settle the law for all future time on this important question, the Senator from Maine, forgetting all the precedents under which he has been legislating himself, and which he has advocated heretofore, flares up in a tremendous opposition to intrusting anything at all to a commission.

Now, who are the commissioners to be if they are to be appointed? Citizens of the United States and citizens of Great Britain, who meet in convention and who will consider these questions and refer their conclusions to the respective authorities of their Governments for ratification or for rejection. It may be that it is an unwise thing to recommend a commission; that we had better treat through the diplomatic powers that exist rather than create any new ones on questions of that kind, but that relates merely to the form of procedure or to the agents that we shall employ in the procedure. There is nothing in the fact that a commission may be created that can work prejudice to the people of the United States, for we can deal with this subject just as well through a commission as we can through our foreign ministers or through our Secretaries of State.

I think, Mr. President, this debate having anticipated the whole question, at least having it made to go to the bottom of the whole subject so far as the action of our Government is concerned, it is but proper that I should spread upon the record and ask to have read the letters which passed between our Secretary of State and Mr. West, the minister of Great Britain, upon this question, so that the country may see whether or not the Administration has been thoughtless in regard to the interests of the public, or whether the Administration has preferred for a time to present some arrangement which might keep down strife rather than to venture upon that other arrangement which the Senator from Maine so vividly presents. Whenever you want to speak to Great Britain about any of the rights of American citizens, you must man your ship and load your gun, you must go prepared with your matchlock to set off your artillery before the argument opens, otherwise you will not get your rights. No, Mr. President, there is a good deal in war that is not to be approved, even where justice requires that war should take place. It is an affliction and a trouble to the world, and its evils and its oppressions and its disasters sink into the hearts of men who are not at all responsible for it, and they last for generation after generation, as this country in its recent and present experience is capable of testifying.

I, sir, am for negotiation; I am for agreement; I am for the sway of reason; I am for the influence of justice and truth in preference to war or to anything that looks like war; and proper self-respect on the part of this great Government does not require it to buckle on its armor every time it enters into an argument with Great Britain or any other power. It can go out armed with the power of truth, it can meet its antagonist or its corresponding negotiating power upon an open field under any and all circumstances, without the slightest apprehension that our rights, or the rights of our people, or the cause of truth will suffer any defeat at the hands of other people. There is no occasion for us to commence to bluster the moment we think we have got a right which we can assert in some form through diplomacy. Let us conduct this Government in proper style; and, sir, I do heartily applaud the spirit of the President in the manner in which he has dealt with this question, and I am sure that the people of the United States applaud it also, for if the Senator from Maine could have had his way and if he could have been the conductor of the negotiations between the United States and Great Britain in regard to this subject, which has now had proper repose, he would have commenced with some belligerent demand and have backed it up by this little sham of a Navy that we have got here.

I think, Mr. President, after all, it will be found that when we work out the proposition to its bottom the Senator from Maine will require the rest of us in this country to pay a subsidy to his fishermen, that he will require us to consent that the fishermen shall have a bigger price for their fish than they are getting now, and that he will try to work it out through the instrumentality of a tariff. It is very well to commence quarreling with the Administration because it is an anti-tariff Administration to some extent, and to open this question in this direction. The Senator is entitled to credit for great sagacity in making the assault where he begins it; but when the thing comes to work out and wind up it will be found that this is the avant-courier for a mere proposition on the part of the Senator from Maine, I think, to increase the tariff on fish.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, one word in reply to the Senator from Alabama. He seems to have misunderstood my statement that in my judgment the United States had nothing to leave to a commission. The United States is asking nothing of Great Britain. The United States does not desire to fish in Canadian waters. The United States has not asked anything of Great Britain; and why in the name of common sense should we have a commission when it is only one side that is asking? Canada is the party seeking. Take the Canadian papers and the discussions in the Canadian Parliament and you will find who is seeking for a commission and who is asking for favors. It is the party that has been built up under the last treaty made in 1871 that is seeking its renewal now and not we who suffered from it. I simply put it on the ground that we desire nothing and therefore we must inevitably be the loser by a commission.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator oblige me with a copy of the correspondence? I did not happen to have one on my table, not expecting any debate to arise.

Mr. FRYE. I drew the resolution calling for this correspondence so that it should cover everything; and the Senator will see by reference to it that it requires all correspondence and all information whatsoever touching this extension of the rights and privileges under the Washington treaty, and this is the Secretary of State's reply to that request, and undoubtedly it contains every single thing there is in the case. It does not show anybody on the part of the United States asking for protection or privilege or fishing rights.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator will indulge me a moment. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to incorporate this correspondence in my remarks, so that the country may see what the correspondence is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent to incorporate in his remarks printed in the RECORD the papers he refers to. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be entered.

The correspondence is as follows:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in response to a resolution of the Senate of the 5th instant, a report of the Secretary of State, containing all the correspondence and information in the custody of his Department relative to the extension of certain fishing rights and privileges under the treaty of Washington from July 1, 1885, to January 1, 1886.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, January 12, 1886.

To the President:

In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of January 5, 1886, I herewith transmit a copy of all the correspondence between this Department and the representative of the Government of Great Britain in relation to the extension of certain fishing rights and privileges under the treaty of Washington from July 1, 1885, to January 1, 1886.

As part of this transaction the following paragraph of your late message to Congress seems appropriate for consideration in connection with the correspondence:

"The termination of the fishing clauses of the treaty of Washington, in pursuance of the joint resolution of March 3, 1883, must have resulted in the abrupt cessation on the 1st of July of this year, in the midst of their ventures, of the operations of citizens of the United States engaged in fishing in British American waters, but for a diplomatic understanding reached with Her Majesty's Government in June last, whereby assurance was obtained that no interruption of those operations should take place during the current fishing season.

"In the interest of good neighborhood and of the commercial intercourse of adjacent communities, the question of North American fisheries is one of much importance. Following out the intimation given by me when the extensory arrangement above described was negotiated, I recommend that the Congress provide for the appointment of a commission, in which the Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be respectively represented, charged with the consideration and settlement, upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis, of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two governments and their respective citizens on the coasts of the United States and British North America. The fishing interests being intimately related to other general questions dependent upon contiguity and intercourse, consideration thereof, in all their equities, might also properly come within the purview of such a commission, and the fullest latitude of expression on both sides should be permitted."

Respectfully submitted.

T. F. BAYARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, January 12, 1886.

AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN RESPECTING THE FISHERIES, CONCLUDED JUNE 22, 1885.

Notice.

By direction of the President, the undersigned, Secretary of State, hereby makes known to all whom it may concern that a temporary diplomatic agreement has been entered into between the Government of the United States and the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in relation to the fishing privileges which were granted by the fishery clauses of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain of May 8, 1871, whereby the privilege of fishing, which would otherwise have terminated with the treaty clauses on the 1st of July, proximo, may continue to be enjoyed by the citizens and subjects of the two countries engaged in fishing operations throughout the season of 1885.

This agreement proceeds from the mutual good-will of the two governments, and has been reached solely to avoid all misunderstanding and difficulties which might otherwise arise from the abrupt termination of the fishing of 1885 in the midst of the season. The immunity which is accorded by this agreement to the vessels belonging to citizens of the United States engaged in fishing in the British American waters will likewise be extended to British vessels and subjects engaged in fishing in the waters of the United States.

The joint resolution of Congress of March 3, 1883, providing for the termination of the fishing articles of the treaty of May 8, 1871, having repealed in terms the act of March 1, 1873, for the execution of the fishing articles, and that repeal being express and absolute from the date of the termination of the said fishing articles, under due notification given and proclaimed by the President of the United States, to wit, July 1, 1885, the present temporary agreement in no way affects the question of statutory enactment or exemption from customs duties, as to which the abrogation of the fishing articles remains complete.

As part of this agreement, the President will bring the whole question of the fisheries before Congress at its next session in December, and recommend the appointment of a joint commission by the Governments of the United States and Great Britain to consider the matter in the interest of maintaining good neighborhood and friendly intercourse between the two countries, thus affording a prospect of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America.

Copies of the memoranda and exchanged notes on which this temporary agreement rests are appended.

Reference is also made to the President's proclamation of January 31, 1885, terminating the fishing articles of the treaty of Washington.

By direction of the President:

T. F. BAYARD, Secretary of State.

President's proclamation, January 31, 1885.

1.—Mr. West's memorandum of March 12, 1885.

[Memorandum.—Confidential.]

The fishery clauses of the treaty of Washington of 1871 will expire on the 1st of July next. It has been represented by the Canadian Government that much inconvenience is likely to arise in consequence, unless some agreement can be made for an extension of the period.

When the time comes (1st of July next) American ships will be actually engaged in fishing within the territorial waters of the Dominion. These vessels will have been fitted out for the season's fishing and have made all their usual arrangements for following it up until its termination in the autumn. If, under these circumstances, the provincial or municipal authorities in Canada were to insist upon their strict rights, and to compel such vessels, on pain of seizure, to desist from fishing, considerable hardship would be occasioned to the owners, and a feeling of bitterness engendered on both sides which it is clearly the interest of both governments to avert.

It seems therefore desirable, in order to avoid such possible complications, that both governments should come to an agreement under which the clauses might be in effect extended until the 1st of January, 1886.

If this were done the existing state of things would come to an end at a date between the fishery season of 1885 and that of 1886, and an abrupt transition at a moment when fishery operations were being carried on would thus be avoided.

WASHINGTON, March 12, 1885.

[Memorandum of April 22, 1885.—Personal.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 22, 1885.

DEAR MR. WEST: I have on several occasions lately, in conversation, acquainted you with my interest in the fisheries memorandum which accompanied your personal letter of March 12.

Several informal talks I have had with Sir Ambrose Shea have enabled me to formulate the views of this Government upon the proposition made in behalf of the Dominion and the Province of Newfoundland, and I take pleasure in handing you herewith a memorandum embodying the results. If this suits, I shall be happy to confirm the arrangement by an exchange of notes at your early convenience.

I am, my dear Mr. West, very sincerely, yours,

T. F. BAYARD.

The Hon. L. S. SACKVILLE WEST, &c.

MEMORANDUM.

The legislation passed by the Congress of the United States, act of March 1, 1873, for the execution of the fishery articles of the treaty of Washington, has been repealed by the joint resolution of March 3, 1883, the repeal to take effect July 1, 1885. From that date the effects of the fisheries articles of the treaty of Washington absolutely determine, so far as their execution within the jurisdiction of the United States is concerned, and without new legislation by Congress modifying or postponing that repeal the Executive is not constitutionally competent to extend the reciprocal fisheries provisions of the treaty beyond the 1st of July next, the date fixed by the action of Congress.

Mr. West's memorandum of March 12, 1885, suggests the mutual practical convenience that would accrue from allowing the fishing ventures commenced prior to July 1, 1885, to continue until the end of the season for fishing of that year, thus preventing their abrupt termination in the midst of fishing operations on the 1st of July.

It has been, moreover, suggested on the part of the Province of Newfoundland and of the Dominion of Canada that, in view of the mutual benefit and convenience of the present local traffic, consisting of the purchase of ice, bait, wood, and general ship supplies by the citizens of the United States engaged in fishing from the inhabitants of the British American fishing coast, the usual operations of the fishing season of 1885 should be continued by the fishing vessels belonging to citizens of the United States until the end of the season of that year, and that the local authorities of Newfoundland and of the Dominion of Canada, in a spirit of amity and good neighborhood, should abstain from molesting such fishermen or impeding their progress or their local traffic with the inhabitants incidental to fishing during the remainder of the season of 1885, and all this with the understanding that the President of the United States would bring the whole question of the fisheries before Congress at its next session in December, and recommend the appointment of a commission in which the Governments of the United States and of Great Britain should be respectively represented, which commission should be charged with the consideration and settlement, upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis, of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two governments and their respective citizens on the coasts of the United States and British North America.

The President of the United States would be prepared to recommend the adoption of such action by Congress with the understanding that in view and in consideration of such promised recommendation there would be no enforcement of restrictive and penal laws and regulations by the authorities of the Dominion of Canada or of the Province of Newfoundland against the fishermen of the United States resorting to British American waters between the 1st of July next and the close of the present year's fishing season; the mutual object and intent being to avoid any annoyance to the individuals engaged in this business and traffic and the irritation or ill-feeling that might be engendered by a harsh or vexatious enforcement of stringent local regulations on the fishing coast pending an effort to have a just and amicable arrangement of an important and somewhat delicate question between the two nations.

Public knowledge of this understanding and arrangement can be given by an exchange of notes between Mr. West and myself, which can be given to the press.

3.—Mr. West's memoranda of June 13, 1885.

[Memoranda.]

It is proposed to state in notes according temporary arrangements respecting fisheries that an agreement has been arrived at under circumstances affording prospect of negotiation for development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America.

The Government of Newfoundland do not make refunding of duties a condition of their acceptance of the proposed agreement, but they rely on it having due consideration before the international commission which may be appointed.

[Confidential.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 19, 1885.

MY DEAR MR. WEST: I assume that the two confidential memoranda you handed to me on the 13th instant embrace the acceptance by the Dominion and the British American coast provinces of the general features of my memorandum of April 21, concerning a temporary arrangement respecting the fisheries, with the understanding expressed on their side that the "agreement has been arrived at under circumstances affording prospect of negotiation for development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America."

To such a contingent understanding I can have no objection. Indeed, I regard it as covered by the statement in my memorandum of May 21, that the arrangement therein contemplated would be reached "with the understanding that the President of the United States would bring the whole question of the fisheries before Congress at its next session in December, and recommend the appointment of a commission in which the Governments of the United States and of Great Britain should be respectively represented, which commission should be charged with the consideration and settlement, upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis, of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two governments and their respective citizens on the coasts of the United States and British North America."

The equities of the question being before such a mixed commission would doubtless have the fullest latitude of expression and treatment on both sides; and the purpose in view being the maintenance of good neighborhood and intercourse between the two countries, the recommendation of any measures which the commission might deem necessary to attain those ends would seem to fall within its province, and such recommendations could not fail to receive attentive consideration.

I am not, therefore, prepared to state limits to the proposals to be brought forward in the suggested commission on behalf of either party.

I believe this statement will be satisfactory to you, and I should be pleased to be informed at the earliest day practicable of your acceptance of the understanding on behalf of British North America; and by this simple exchange of notes and memoranda the agreement will be completed in season to enable the President to make the result publicly known to the citizens engaged in the fishing on the British American Atlantic coast.

I have the honor to be, with the highest respect, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

The Hon. L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

[Confidential.]

BRITISH LEGATION, Washington, June 20, 1885.

MY DEAR MR. BAYARD: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your confidential note of yesterday's date concerning the proposed temporary arrangement respecting the fisheries, which I am authorized by Her Majesty's Government to negotiate with you on behalf of the Government of the Dominion of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland, to be effected by an exchange of notes founded on your memorandum of the 21st of April last.

The two confidential memoranda which I handed to you on the 13th instant contain, as you assume, the acceptance by the Dominion and the British American coast provinces of the general features of your above-mentioned memorandum, with the understanding expressed on their side that the agreement has been arrived at under circumstances affording prospects of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America, a contingent understanding to which, as you state, you can have no objection, as you regard it as covered by the terms of your memorandum of April 21.

In authorizing me to negotiate this agreement, Earl Granville states, as I have already had occasion to intimate to you, that it is on the distinct understanding that it is a temporary one, and that its conclusion must not be held to prejudice any claim which may be advanced to more satisfactory equivalents by the colonial governments in the course of the negotiation for a more permanent settlement. Earl Granville further wishes me to tell you that Her Majesty's Government and the colonial governments have consented to the arrangement solely as a mark of good-will to the Government and people of the United States, and to avoid difficulties which might be raised by the termination of the fishery articles in the midst of a fishing season; and also the acceptance of such a modus vivendi does not, by any implication, affect the value of the inshore fisheries by the Governments of Canada and Newfoundland. I had occasion to remark to you that while the colonial governments are asked to guarantee immunity from interference to American vessels resorting to Canadian waters, no such immunity is offered in your memorandum to Canadian vessels resorting to American waters, but that the Dominion Government presumed that the agreement in this respect would be mutual. As you accepted this view, it would, I think, be as well that mention should be made to this effect in the notes.

Under the reservations as above indicated, in which I believe you acquiesce, I am prepared to accept the understanding on behalf of British North America, and to exchange notes in the above sense.

I have the honor to be, with the highest respect, sir, your obediant servant,

L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

Hon. T. F. BAYARD, &c.

6.—Mr. Bayard to Mr. West, June 20, 1885.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 20, 1885.

SIR: I have just received your note of to-day's date in regard to the proposed temporary arrangement touching the fisheries.

Undoubtedly it is our clear and mutual understanding that the arrangement now made is only temporary, and that it proceeds from the mutual good-will of our respective governments, and solely to avoid all difficulties which might otherwise arise from the termination of the fishing of 1885 in the midst of the season.

I understand also that the same immunity which is accorded by this agreement to the vessels belonging to the citizens of the United States engaged in fishing in the British American waters will be extended to British vessels and subjects engaged in fishing in the waters of the United States. Perceiving, therefore, no substantial difference between our respective propositions and these statements as contained in our correspondence on the subject, I shall consider the agreement as embodied in our memoranda and the correspondence between us and as thus concluded; and public notification to that effect will be given in a few days by the President.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

The Hon. L. S. SACKVILLE WEST, &c.

7.—Mr. Bayard to Mr. West, June 22, 1885.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 22, 1885.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request of this morning that I should restate part of my note to you of the 19th, I repeat that the arrangement whereby a modus vivendi on the fishing question has been reached rests on the memoranda and correspondence exchanged; that your memorandum of the 13th instant expressed the understanding on your side that the "agreement has been arrived at under circumstances affording prospect of negotiation for development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America;" that I not only had no objection to such an understanding, but in fact regarded it as amply embraced in our proposal to recommend a commission to deal with the whole subject in the interest of good neighborhood and intercourse, and that the recommendation of any measures which the commission might deem necessary to attain those ends would seem to fall within its province, and such recommendations could not fail to have attentive consideration.

Having thus not only admitted the proviso of your memorandum in your own language, but gone still further and pointed out that no limits would be set, so far as I was concerned, to the proposals to be brought forward in the suggested commission on behalf of either party, I do not see how it is possible for me to give any stronger assurance that the understanding has "been reached under circumstances affording a prospect of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British America."

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir,

T. F. BAYARD.

The Hon. L. S. SACKVILLE WEST, &c.

8.—Mr. West to Mr. Bayard, June 22, 1885.

WASHINGTON, June 22, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your notes of the 20th and 22d instant in regard to the proposed temporary arrangement touching the fisheries, in which you state that it is our clear and mutual understanding that such arrangement is only temporary, and that it proceeds from the mutual goodwill of our respective governments, and solely to avoid all difficulties which might otherwise arise from the termination of the fishing of 1885 in the midst of the season. Also that the same immunity which is accorded by this Government to the vessels belonging to the citizens of the United States engaged in fishing in the British American waters will be extended to British vessels and subjects engaged in fishing in the waters of the United States, and that the agreement has been reached under circumstances affording a prospect of negotiation for the development and extension of trade between the United States and British North America.

As therefore there exists no substantial difference between our respective propositions and the statements as contained in our correspondence on the subject, I shall consider the agreement as embodied in our memoranda and the correspondence between us as thus concluded, and shall inform Her Majesty's Government and the governments of the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland accordingly.

I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, sir, your obedient servant,

L. S. SACKVILLE WEST.

Hon. T. F. BAYARD, &c.

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas the treaty concluded between the United States of America and Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, concluded at Washington on the 8th day of May, 1871, contains among other articles the following, namely:

"ARTICLE XVIII.

"It is agreed by the high contracting parties that, in addition to the liberty secured to the United States fishermen by the convention between the United States and Great Britain, signed at London on the 20th day of October, 1818, of taking, curing, and drying fish on certain coasts of the British North American colonies therein defined, the inhabitants of the United States shall have in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty the liberty, for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this treaty, to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the seacoasts and shores, and in the bays, harbors, and creeks, of the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the colony of Prince Edward's Islands, and of the several islands thereunto adjacent, without being restricted to any distance from the shore, with permission to land upon the said coasts and shores and islands, and also upon the Magdalen Islands, for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish; provided that in so doing they do not interfere with the rights of private property, or with British fishermen, in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose.

"It is understood that the above-mentioned liberty applies solely to the sea fishery, and that the salmon and shad fisheries, and all other fisheries in rivers and the mouths of rivers, are hereby reserved exclusively for British fishermen.

"ARTICLE XIX.

"It is agreed by the high contracting parties that British subjects shall have, in common with the citizens of the United States, the liberty, for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this treaty, to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the eastern seacoasts and shores of the United States north of the thirty-ninth parallel of north latitude, and on the shores of the several islands thereunto adjacent, and in the bays, harbors, and creeks of the said seacoasts and shores of the United States, and of the said islands, without being restricted to any distance from the shore, with permission to land upon the said coasts of the United States and of the islands aforesaid, for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish; provided that, in so doing, they do not interfere with the rights of private property, or with the fishermen of the United States in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose.

"It is understood that the above-mentioned liberty applies solely to the sea fishery, and that salmon and shad fisheries, and all other fisheries in rivers and mouths of rivers, are hereby reserved exclusively for fishermen of the United States.

"ARTICLE XX.

"It is agreed that the places designated by the commissioners appointed under the first article of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, concluded at Washington on the 5th of June, 1854, upon the coasts of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions and the United States, as places reserved from the common right of fishing under that treaty, shall be regarded as in like manner reserved from the common right of fishing under the preceding articles. In case any question should arise between the Governments of the United States and of Her Britannic Majesty as to the common right of fishing in places not thus designated as reserved, it is agreed that a commission shall be appointed to designate such places, and shall be constituted in the same manner, and have the same powers, duties, and authority as the commission appointed under said first article of the treaty of the 5th of June, 1854.

"ARTICLE XXI.

"It is agreed that, for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this treaty, fish oil and fish of all kinds (except fish of the inland lakes and of the rivers falling into them, and except fish preserved in oil), being the produce of the fisheries of the United States, or of the Dominion of Canada, or of Prince Edward's Island, shall be admitted into each country, respectively, free of duty.

"ARTICLE XXII.

"Inasmuch as it is asserted by the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article XVIII of this treaty are of greater value than those accorded by Articles XIX and XXI of this treaty to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, and this assertion is not admitted by the Government of the United States, it is further agreed that commissioners shall be appointed to determine, having regard to the privileges accorded by the United States to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, as stated in Articles XIX and XXI of this treaty, the amount of any compensation which, in their opinion, ought to be paid by the Government of the United States to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in return for the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article XVIII of this treaty; and that any sum of money which the said commissioners may so award shall be paid by the United States Government in a gross sum within twelve months after such award shall have been given.

"ARTICLE XXIII.

"The commissioners referred to in the preceding article shall be appointed in the following manner, that is to say: One commissioner shall be named by the President of the United States, one by Her Britannic Majesty, and a third by the President of the United States and her Britannic Majesty conjointly; and in case the third commissioner shall not have been so named within a period of three months from the date when this article shall take effect, then the third commissioner shall be named by the representative at London of His Majesty the Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary. In case of the death, absence, or incapacity of any commissioner, or in the event of any commissioner omitting or ceasing to act, the vacancy shall be filled in the manner hereinbefore provided for making the original appointment, the period of three months in case of such substitution being calculated from the date of the happening of the vacancy.

"The commissioners so named shall meet in the city of Halifax, in the province of Nova Scotia, at the earliest convenient period after they have been respectively named, and shall, before proceeding to any business, make and subscribe a solemn declaration that they will impartially and carefully examine and decide the matters referred to them to the best of their judgment, and according to justice and equity; and such declaration shall be entered on the record of their proceedings.

"Each of the high contracting parties shall also name one person to attend the commission as its agent, to represent it generally in all matters connected with the commission.

"ARTICLE XXIV.

"The proceedings shall be conducted in such order as the commissioners appointed under Articles XXII and XXIII of this treaty shall determine. They shall be bound to receive such oral or written testimony as either government may present. If either party shall offer oral testimony, the other party shall have the right of cross-examination, under such rules as the commissioners shall prescribe.

"If in the case submitted to the commissioners either party shall have specified or alluded to any report or document in its own exclusive possession, without annexing a copy, such party shall be bound, if the other party thinks proper to apply for it, to furnish that party with a copy thereof; and either party may call upon the other, through the commissioners, to produce the originals or certified copies of any papers adduced as evidence, giving in each instance such reasonable notice as the commissioners may require.

"The case on either side shall be closed within a period of six months from the date of the organization of the commission, and the commissioners shall be requested to give their award as soon as possible thereafter. The aforesaid period of six months may be extended for three months in case of a vacancy occurring among the commissioners under the circumstances contemplated in Article XXIII of this treaty.

"ARTICLE XXV.

"The commissioners shall keep an accurate record and correct minutes or notes of all their proceedings, with the dates thereof, and may appoint and employ a secretary and any other necessary officer or officers to assist them in the transaction of the business which may come before them.

"Each of the high contracting parties shall pay its own commissioner and agent or counsel; all other expenses shall be defrayed by the two governments in equal moieties.

"ARTICLE XXX.

"It is agreed that, for the term of years mentioned in Article XXXIII of this treaty, subjects of Her Britannic Majesty may carry in British vessels, without payment of duty, goods, wares, or merchandise from one port or place within the territory of the United States upon the St. Lawrence, the great lakes, and the rivers connecting the same, to another port or place within the territory of the United States as aforesaid: Provided, That a portion of such transportation is made through the Dominion of Canada by land carriage and in bond, under such rules and regulations as may be agreed upon between the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and the Government of the United States.

"Citizens of the United States may for the like period carry in United States vessels, without payment of duty, goods, wares, or merchandise from one port or place within the possessions of Her Britannic Majesty in North America to another port or place within the said possessions: Provided, That a portion of such transportation is made through the territory of the United States by land carriage and in bond, under such rules and regulations as may be agreed upon between the Government of the United States and the Government of her Britannic Majesty.

"The Government of the United States further engages not to impose any export duties on goods, wares, or merchandise carried under this article through the territory of the United States; and Her Majesty's Government engages to urge the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada and the Legislatures of the other colonies not to impose any export duties on goods, wares, or merchandise carried under this article; and the Government of the United States may, in case such export duties are imposed by the Dominion of Canada, suspend, during the period that such duties are imposed, the right of carrying granted under this article in favor of the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty.

"The Government of the United States may suspend the right of carrying granted in favor of the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty under this article, in case the Dominion of Canada should at any time deprive the citizens of the United States of the use of the canals in the said Dominion on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion, as provided in Article XXVII."

"ARTICLE XXXII.

"It is further agreed that the provisions and stipulations of Articles XVIII to XXV of this treaty, inclusive, shall extend to the colony of Newfoundland, so far as they are applicable. But if the Imperial Parliament, the Legislature of Newfoundland, or the Congress of the United States, shall not embrace the colony of Newfoundland in their laws enacted for carrying the foregoing articles into effect, then this article shall be of no effect; but the omission to make provision by law to give it effect by either of the legislative bodies aforesaid shall not in any way impair any other articles of this treaty."

And whereas, pursuant to the provisions of Article XXXIII of said treaty, due notice has been given to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty of the intention of the Government of the United States of America to terminate the above-recited articles of the treaty in question on the 1st day of July, 1885;

And whereas, pursuant to the terms of said treaty and of the notice given thereunder by the Government of the United States of America to that of Her Britannic Majesty, the above-recited articles of the treaty of Washington, concluded May 8, 1871, will expire and terminate on the 1st day of July, 1885:

Now, therefore, I, Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States of America, do hereby give public notice that Articles XVIII, XIX, XX, XXI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, XXV, XXX, and XXXII, of the treaty of Washington, concluded May 8, 1871, will expire and terminate of the 1st day of July, 1885, and all citizens of the United States are hereby warned that none of the privileges secured by the above-recited articles of the treaty in question will exist after the 1st day of July next; all American fishermen should govern themselves accordingly.

Done at the city of Washington, this 31st day of January, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and ninth.

[SEAL.] CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

By the President:

FREDK. T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. FRYE. Now I desire to answer in a word or two the facetious remarks of the distinguished Senator as to the Senators from Massachusetts and Maine and the habits of the mackerel. I think he is entirely mistaken in his statement of the case. The truth is, the methods of taking mackerel have changed entirely and not the mackerel. They are the same they were in 1860 and 1818, but the method of taking them has changed entirely.

We used to go into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, for instance, in Canadian waters, with six hundred fishing vessels, each one of them with from thirty to fifty barrels of bait, throw that bait on each side of those vessels all around through the waters of the bay, attract all the mackerel there or anywhere around, and that bait scattered in that way from those six hundred vessels would keep the mackerel together there for months, and it was a profitable place to fish in for mackerel undoubtedly. Then the privilege was worth something. That was true twenty to thirty years ago, but about twenty years ago we adopted seine fishing for mackerel, and to-day we commence fishing off Hatteras and we follow the fish up the Gulf Stream on the inside coast of the Gulf Stream. We follow the mackerel up with it may be five hundred fishing vessels from the time they leave Hatteras until they get away up to Cape Cod, and instead of scattering bait, we take those great seines and throw them around a whole school and scoop the school in. A man is kept at the masthead night and day on all these vessels. He sees a school of mackerel a mile or two off. The boats immediately go out with this great net, row it around the school, tie it at the bottom as you tie a silk purse at the top, bring them to the side of the ship, and take them aboard, or rather the vessel goes to them.

The result is that by the time the mackerel have got up in the neighborhood of Cape Cod you have frightened them so they do not go into the shore as formerly, and for the last ten years the fish we have taken on the Canada shores are not worth anything. So that fishery is entirely given up, and I say to the Senator it is absolutely true that we have not a single thing to ask to-day of Great Britain in this matter of fisheries.

As to the increase of tariff, the Canadian tariff against us is twice our tariff against the Canadian fish. Theirs is on fresh fish and salt. There is no tariff here on fresh fish to-day, and under the recent decision of the Secretary of the Treasury you can bring in $600,000,000 worth of frozen fish in refrigerators and keep them in New York and Boston in refrigerators for six months' time and put them on the market at your pleasure. Two-thirds of all the business in fish to-day is fresh fish. We have only a duty of half as much against Canadian-cured fish as they have against ours. We do not ask any increase of duty. We simply ask, as I have heard other people ask before now, let us, for Heaven's sake, alone; keep your hands, and keep Great Britain's hands off, and we will take care of ourselves.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair, 2 o'clock having arrived——

Mr. CONGER. I desire to have possession of the floor when the subject comes up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan will be recognized then. Now it is the duty of the Chair to announce the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 471) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3253) to amend section 1090 of the Revised Statutes relating to interest on judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COIN DUTIES ON IMPORTED GOODS.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be informally laid aside to proceed to the consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky on the silver question, upon which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] has the floor.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted December 18, 1885, by Mr. BECK, relative to the payment of customs dues and the disbursements thereof, &c.

Mr. TELLER. I give notice that at the close of the morning hour to-morrow I shall submit some remarks on the question of silver coinage, if the business of the Senate shall not be disturbed by my doing so.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, in discussing the silver question I experience one serious difficulty, which is that, although I have carefully considered and weighed the arguments presented against the continued coinage of the silver dollar, I am not able to understand the exact position which the opponents of silver coinage occupy to-day. In 1878 their position was clearly defined. Speaking generally, they were gold monometallists. They then advised us that we were taking a leap in the dark; that gold ought to be the exclusive standard of values; that we could not become a bimetallic nation without an agreement with other nations establishing the ratio of silver to gold; that the effect of our then proposed legislation would be to cause our securities held abroad to flood this country; that silver and gold would part company; that gold would be exported from this country; that the inferior silver money would supersede the superior gold money; that our securities would depreciate; and, indulging in every possible prophecy of impending woe, they confidently predicted that universal distress and serious financial disturbance would inevitably result from the legislation which we then proposed to enact.

What was at that time an untried experiment, which invited these gloomy forebodings for those who chose to indulge them, has become an established financial scheme, it is true, only partially developed, yet sufficiently matured to make actual results and actual experience displace mere conjecture, speculation, and prophecy; and we have now to deal with the problem which is presented to us in its most practical form, the law of 1878 having been in active operation for about eight years. We are to-day, in fact and in law, a bimetallic nation. We are coining both gold and silver, and both of these metals so coined are full legal-tender for all private and public debts; and the issue presented for our consideration really is not whether we shall continue or cease to be a bimetallic nation, for, as I understand it, no one has yet advanced that proposition, but to what extent shall we continue to develop and sustain that bimetallic policy already established and acquiesced in both by those who advocate and those who oppose the coinage of the silver dollar.

This acquiescence by the advocates of suspension of the coinage of silver dollars under our present established bimetallic policy is clearly indicated by the fact that neither the President nor the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended that any change should be made in the existing silver dollar, now amounting to 215,000,000; that either its value should be enhanced by recoinage or that it should be withdrawn, or that it should be disposed of in any way. And if it is the dishonest and depreciated dollar which it is represented to be, then it must necessarily be the basis of an unsound, unwise, and disreputable policy, and it is almost incredible that those who seem to be so watchful of the public honor, so solicitous about private credit, and who exhibit such a high moral tone upon this financial question should be willing to occupy the position of sustaining and acquiescing in this dishonest, depreciated, deprecated, and denounced silver dollar.

It certainly can not be possible that the executive department desires any one to believe or to suspect that it is in favor of a bimetallic currency, such as it is, as regards the people; but are in favor of a monometallic currency of gold as regards the Treasury in its dealings with its creditors, for that would be declaring it to be an honest dollar for some and a dishonest dollar for other purposes. Such a policy would be so unpatriotic, unjust, and oppressive in its effects that its adoption and practice can be attributed only to errors of judgment rather than to the dictates of enlightened deliberation.

The Secretary of the Treasury informs us "that ceasing to coin more, our 215,000,000 silver dollars will remain," "and because it is not to be expected that Congress will redeem and melt them and sell the metal," which is not recommended by him, "we can not but be a bimetallic nation."

Although of the 215,000,000 coined there are in circulation, including silver certificates and silver dollars, about 140,000,000, speaking of this amount of coin the President informs us "there is certainly not enough silver now in circulation to cause uneasiness, and the whole amount coined and now on hand might, after a time, be absorbed by the people without apprehension; but it is the ceaseless stream that threatens to overflow the land which causes fear and uncertainty."

Are we to understand that it is right and just and unobjectionable that these two hundred and fifteen millions of dishonest dollars shall be absorbed by the people? Are we to understand that this depreciated silver dollar is an honest dollar when absorbed by the people, but a dishonest dollar when absorbed by the bondholders in their dealings with the Treasury; that it is right and just to maintain among the people the circulation of this dishonest dollar, and that as regards them among themselves it is good enough to circulate as money to liquidate their own indebtedness, to perform all the functions and to fulfill all the requirements of good money; and that the bondholder, after the repeated legislative adjudications upon this question, has a right to tell the executive officers who are charged with the faithful execution of the laws that that same money which the executive department of the Government says is good money for the people is dishonest money for him, and that they accede to this statement? Are we to have a double standard of financial morality, one for the people and the other for the bondholder? And will any department of the Government arrogate to itself the arbitrary authority of establishing such an unjust discrimination against the people, and such an indefensible favoritism to the bondholder?

If the executive department of the Government does occupy this position, does indulge in this practice, it might be properly asked under what theory of fair dealing and equal justice the people will be willing to accept that department as the guardian and protector of their interests.

If we accept as true—and I believe it to be true—the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, that these two hundred and fifteen millions of existing silver dollars are to remain with us unchanged; if we accept as true—which I believe to be true—the statement of the President, that these $215,000,000 might after a time be absorbed by the people, I would ask, what calamity, catastrophe, or cataclysm which have been predicted has really happened up to this date under our present financial system? We have not been informed that by reason of the law of 1878 there has been any unusual exportation of gold from the country, because such is not the fact.

We have not been informed that gold and silver have parted company, but on the contrary we have been informed by the Senator from Delaware, in his speech in favor of suspension of silver coinage, that they have not parted company, and we all know that statement to be true. We likewise know that the prediction as to the depreciation of bonds is falsified, for they are to-day worth more than they were at the time of the passage of that law (1878). We likewise know that we are a bimetallic nation, notwithstanding the statement made that we could not become so without an agreement with other nations; and that silver money has not superseded gold money, as there has been coined since 1878 in gold $381,960,690, and in silver since that date about $215,000,000. So that if it be true, as would seem to be conclusively established, that we have not yet been visited by any of those evils which were predicted would impair our ability to maintain this present bimetallic system, and that no such alarming confusion or apprehended perturbation in our monetary affairs confronts us; but, on the contrary, that neither by reason of any alleged redundancy of our metallic currency nor of any inequality in the market value of the two metals of gold and silver we have any cause for any uneasiness or dissatisfaction with the present condition, then we are certainly entitled to be furnished with definite, positive, and reliable data and information instead of reiterated prophecies which have not been fulfilled, to enable us to appreciate the probable consequences of merely continuing a system already established and acquiesced in by the executive department of the Government.

This demand for serious argument instead of unfounded speculation is not unreasonable when we consider that we are asked to discontinue or reverse an established financial policy. We are not prepared to make to the country the stultifying confession that our legislation has so far been unwise or dishonest, or to accept the gratuitous imputation that we have not the intelligence or the good faith to deal with this question of financial economy and morality; and it is to be hoped that we have the courage and the determination to maintain our convictions, which we propose to surrender only to the force of argument and the empire of reason. It would be an appalling admission to make to the country and destructive of the stability of all interests, if every few years we are to create and destroy a financial policy merely for the reason that others, however high in authority, have chosen to differ from the views which we entertain, and which have found such emphatic expression in the declarations of our legislative will.

Allusion has been made in very disparaging terms to the fact that the Government is coining a silver dollar whose ratio to the gold dollar is not what it is declared by law to be, the ratio under the law being 16 to 1, whereas the market value of the bullion is, say 20 to 1, and that the Government is profiting to the extent of the difference between the market value of silver bullion and the coin value. The market ratio becomes inoperative under limited compulsory coinage, for whatever may be the market value of the bullion the legal ratio determines the value of the coins, whereas under free coinage the market ratio will generally supplant the intended effect of the legal ratio, unless some mutual agreement between nations is sufficiently comprehensive to equalize the market and legal value of the two coins, the desirability of which I do not propose now to discuss. It is this difference existing between a limited compulsory coinage and a free coinage that relieves us entirely from all those complications so difficult of adjustment, which have heretofore vexed the financial statesmen of this country.

This difference between the two systems explains the reason why under previous systems in the history of this country one coin has displaced the other, and why under the present system these two coins have not parted company, as is admitted and asserted even by the opponents of silver coinage. At the time that the coinage of metal money was first proposed in this country, in 1792, establishing the ratio between gold and silver, such eminent statesmen as Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Jefferson, and others, after a careful search to catch the ratio between gold and silver so that the mint ratio would correspond to the market ratio, caught the wrong ratio, and consequently we find that by reason of the free-coinage system which existed in this country from 1792 to 1873 the impossibility of establishing this exact correspondence of ratio between the two metals produced what are known as the silver and gold periods in the history of our financial systems.

From 1792 to 1834 we had a silver period; from 1834 to 1853 and from 1853 to 1873 we had a gold period, and it was for this reason that in 1834 the fineness of the gold dollar was changed, and in 1853 the fineness of the subsidiary coin was changed so that its debasement amounted to nearly 6 per cent. Inasmuch as under our present system this displacement or irrepressible conflict between these two concurrent coins has not occurred, but that they are keeping and not parting company, that they are equally the basis of financial transactions, we can not resist the conclusion that this system, which has avoided all the inconveniences and evils of previous systems, and which has established a perfect interchangeable accord between the gold and silver coin, is entitled to our unlimited confidence and most earnest support.

That the Government should make a profit by buying silver bullion cheaper to-day than it could some time ago it will certainly not be pretended inflicts any injury upon any one, for the moment that the silver dollar leaves the mint whoever gets it receives a dollar which has the same purchasing power and the same debt-paying power as a gold dollar, and those are the only two functions that any man who has any use for money can expect, desire, or require that that money should possess.

We have never proposed, because we know that it is not in our power, to control the market value of silver bullion in London. Its price there is determined by causes outside of our legislation. Nor was it intended or desired that our coin legal-tender money should be subject to or controlled by the varying fluctuation of the price of silver bullion in other countries. It is sufficient for us to say that the present silver dollar contains the same number of grains of silver that it has always contained from 1792 to the present time. Its metallic value may enhance or depreciate, but its legal-tender-power value will not be affected or disturbed by any extraneous causes. To us it is money, coin money, legal-tender money, equivalent to gold money, and money wanted by the people, used by the people, and satisfactory to the people, and nothing more can be or need be said in its favor.

It seems to me, and I say it with due deference to those who differ from me, that every argument that has been presented by the opponents of silver coinage can be refuted by considering the present and past financial condition and system existing in France. Amid the changes of government which have occurred in that country, revolutionary or otherwise, there are two institutions for which the people of France and her public men have always seemed to have had a profound respect, and whose stability they have successfully maintained. One is her financial system and the other is her judiciary. Although burdened with an enormous public debt, she promptly paid a war indemnity of an amount so stupendous that it was believed that under this additional burden she would be crushed and would not be able to recover from this overwhelming financial strain. It was because of the soundness of her financial condition, which we are in this country to-day gradually approaching, that she was able to recover so rapidly from this extraordinary draught upon her resources. It was because of the patriotic response of her people who had silver coin to loan to the Government, as well as those who had gold coin, that she was able in so short a time to free her territory from military occupation by discharging the war indemnity exacted by Germany.

The Secretary of the Treasury informs us that France has to-day six hundred millions of 5-franc pieces, equivalent, say, to $600,000,000. Mr. McLane, our minister to France, makes the same statement officially, and says: "A legal-tender silver coinage of about $600,000,000 in value was maintained in France in September last;" and explains this by the fact that France and other countries suspended the coinage of silver. In addition he informs us that there is in circulation in France of Belgium silver 465,000,000 of francs, and of Italian silver 425,000,000 of francs. Adding these two amounts they represent $180,000,000, which added to the six hundred million of 5-franc pieces makes a total amount of silver coin in France of $780,000,000, which does not even include her subsidiary coinage. So that whatever may be the reason the fact is indisputable that this enormous amount of silver coin equivalent to $780,000,000, is absorbed by the French people and the French Government.

It is incumbent on the opponents of silver dollars, if the absorption of this enormous amount of silver can take place without any uneasiness or disturbance in France, the market value of silver bullion being comparatively the same there and in this country and the metallic value of the American silver dollar being equivalent to the French 5-franc piece, to explain why this same process of absorption could not occur in this country and produce the same results that are exhibited by the financial policy of France, which Mr. McLane tells us, to quote his language:

It is the present purpose of her government and people to maintain, if possible, the two metals in their ratio of 15½ to 1 in domestic circulation and international exchange.

If the people and Government of France, leaving out the question of any embarrassment that might be causad by the circulation of foreign coin, desire to maintain their present policy it is because they are satisfied with it after over eighty years of its experience. Gold and silver have not parted company in France, nor have they in this country. Neither coin has displaced the other there, nor has it here.

France has a large amount of gold, amounting to nearly $600,000,000, although in paying a war indemnity she paid out $55,000,000 of French gold coin. Mr. McLane informs us her 5-franc piece is worth only 4 francs, as we are told our silver dollar is worth only 80 cents in the market; yet he also informs us "that no consideration of future consequences could induce France to adopt a different ratio of gold to silver from that she has"—which we know was established by her monetary law of 1803—"and still less would she adopt any higher ratio to assimilate the present commercial or market value of silver with the value of gold." So that from the highest authority, from our minister to France, who has sought authentic information upon the subject under instructions from his Government, we positively learn that it is neither the desire nor the intention of the French Government or her people to make a single change in the existing financial system of France.

Mr. Cernuschi, a favorite authority with those who oppose further coinage, informs us in his latest work why gold and silver have not parted company in France. He says:

Happily France still possesses more gold francs than silver ones. But for this the gold francs would long have been at a premium.

And if this reason be true, and I assume that it is, what ground is there for apprehending that gold and silver will part company in this country so long as we have more gold than silver? At the present rate of coinage it would take us fifteen years to make our silver coinage equal in volume to our gold coinage, as any one can ascertain by calculation; or, in other words, it would take us fifteen years at the present rate of silver coinage in this country to reach the existing volume of silver 5-franc pieces circulating and in France to-day. This exhibit of the soundness of the present financial system of France when applied to our country derives still greater force from the fact that our population is much larger than that of France, that the commercial activity of our country is much greater, and that we possess larger resources for the absorption and uses of money than exist to-day in France.

It would seem that upon this question of silver coinage, if the arguments and facts I have presented are worthy of attention, we can approximate the condition of France with perfect safety, with unabated confidence, and with full guarantee of future security. It will be only when we reject the wise teachings of her experience and her financial statesmanship that we need fear to encounter those disturbances and conflicts which I will assume we are all equally anxious to avoid and to prevent. There is though one striking point of contrast between the operation of our financial system and that of France, and this may partially account for the smoothness and perfect adaptability of the one and the irregular and unsatisfactory development of the other.

In France all the departments of the Government are in hearty sympathy with the financial policy of the country and actively co-operate with the people to sustain it, because in France "public office is a public trust," while it would seem that in this country that patriotic maxim prevails only to a limited extent when financial questions are involved, if we are to believe the following explicit language used by the Senator from Kentucky in his speech the other day. He said:

I venture to assert that no man will contend that the laws recited in the preamble to the foregoing resolution either are now or have for many years past been obeyed. All sorts of excuses may be and have been offered for their violation; still the fact remains that the laws of the land have been disregarded by our executive officers, and the legislative power has been subordinated to the will of men whose duty it is to submit to them and to execute them as they exist.

In this country the executive department by its practice manifests an unfriendliness to the policy of the legislative department, and consequently we have the results of a policy which has never been fully tested according to its true intent and spirit, but which has been rather retarded by partiality and discrimination, which were not contemplated or intended should be exercised. The executive department would have been in a much stronger position to attack the legislative policy of the Government upon this question if it had been able to show that it had aided and had promoted the full development and unimpeded operation of the financial policy established by Congress, and that under such circumstances it believes such a policy to be a failure.

An effort by the executive department to create the impression upon the people that the legislative department is wrong, and that the executive department is right, might have been entitled to more success and would have commanded more serious attention if the executive department had not discriminated in favor of the bondholders as against the people in executing the financial policy intended and declared by Congress; and it will only be when the executive department can show that without favor, and without favoritism, it has held with a steady and impartial hand the scales of public justice, that it will be in a position to ask us even to consider the question whether or not we should abandon and surrender a financial policy which we claim has never been tested, executed, or enforced according to the true dictates of our legislative intention. I say it will only be when the discrimination in favor of the bondholders, by paying them in gold, shall cease that the executive department or we can be in a position to understand and appreciate the full effects, beneficial or otherwise, of our present financial policy.

But if this disloyal practice of incivism by the executive department, in declaring war against silver coin, which is the coin of the Government, in belittling its usefulness, in deprecating its existence, and in inviting others to believe that it is the deformed offspring of legislative imbecility, is to continue, and the capitalists and bankers of the country are to be encouraged in the belief that the financial views of the executive under this system of agitation and denunciation will ultimately prevail so that the purchasing power of gold will enhance proportionately to proposed limitations and restrictions upon silver currency, then some of those evils which have been depicted may occur. But if they do, their appearance will be attributable not to any vice in our financial system, but to the practices and assertions of the executive department, by which they have sought to disassociate the silver dollar from the gold dollar as unworthy, and thus dishonoring and discrediting the coin which it is their duty to sustain with all the influence and power of their official authority.

As we are informed by the President and Secretary of the Treasury that this two hundred and fifteen million coin silver dollars are to remain with us and might after a time be absorbed by the people, this whole controversy would seem to resolve itself into the simple question whether the American people have the capacity to absorb more than two hundred and fifteen millions of silver dollars. Who are the best judges of that question of their capacity of absorption? I would say the people themselves. And I understand that through their Representatives they have explicitly and emphatically passed judgment upon that question.

Last February by a decisive majority the proposition to suspend silver coinage was defeated in the House of Representatives under very extraordinary circumstances. I am not aware that there exist any data by which it can be ascertained or established that the people desire to reverse that judgment which they rendered through their Representatives in Congress at that time. I am not aware that anything has occurred since that vote except the increased coinage to the amount of a few millions of dollars, which the people knew would occur as a consequence of that vote. Their Representatives did not think proper then to yield to the influence that was exerted or to heed the arguments which were then presented. But by that vote they reasserted their unshaken confidence in our present financial system, established by themselves through their Representatives, and resisted the effort then made to arrest the full development of that policy which they insisted should be maintained.

The prediction that one of the probable results of our policy will be to cause the outflow of gold from the Treasury and an inflow of silver I must confess does not excite my alarm to the extent manifested by those who anticipate such a result. To the people of the United States, so long as there is not an excessive amount of gold exported from this country, and that has not happened, and that can not be truly predicted will happen, I can not see what difference it makes whether there is an outflow or an inflow of any one of these two coins from or into the Treasury, so long as the special redemption gold fund remains intact. And we here again see a distinction made between the people and the Treasury; the people are not interested in having gold coin in the Treasury. They are only interested in having it in the country, and if we honestly believe, as we assert, a silver dollar has an equivalent value to a gold dollar, what possible concern can the people have in the ostentatious parade of accumulation of gold coin in the Treasury.

If silver coinage is not to be suspended, and I earnestly hope and confidently believe that it will not be, and this predicted outflow of gold and inflow of silver from and into the Treasury does occur, and we shall reach that period when bonds and the interest on those bonds can only be paid in silver, it seems to me that it is a much wiser and more prudent course to anticipate that event, said to be inevitable, and to begin to pay our bonds and the interest on those bonds in silver coin as well as gold coin, indiscriminately, while we have gold in the Treasury, thus making such payments voluntarily in compliance with law and in deference to our established policy, and not await the time when we will be compelled to do it under the stress of necessity.

I do not understand that a single payment in silver coin would be a discrimination against gold coin, considering the enormous amount which has been paid exclusively in gold, and it is, for that reason that I advocate the immediate abandonment of that practice which is disapproved by the resolution I had the honor to introduce, in order to have speedily determined by a practical test whether the mere enforcement of a policy which is on our statute-book, and which was adopted after a most exhaustive and diligent investigation of the whole subject, could by any possibility produce the commotion or distrust which interested parties assert will ensue. So far as I am concerned I utterly disbelieve in that threatened disturbance in our monetary affairs.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I would say that in this country, where the people enjoy all the benefits and advantages of education and have the right to dictate their wishes to those who represent them, and where knowledge is so generally disseminated by the press, even upon questions which the people in other countries do not study, we can safely follow the guidance of their judgment. In this country, unlike what occurs in other countries, public opinion is formed neither by intellectual leaders nor by the accident of temporary authority, but has its source in the conservative intelligence of the people, who can easily detect, if any there be, the fallacy of arguments that are presented.

Although this is neither a political nor a sectional question, yet we can not overlook the fact that the vast preponderance of opinion in favor of silver money is expressed in those sections of our country where the larger number of debtors and producers reside. For product and labor the people demand, and they have a right to demand, a just compensation, which they would not receive under a gold monometallic system, or under a bimetallic system which is one-sided, as it is proposed to make ours by the suspension of further coinage of silver. This and cognate questions affect the well-being of the poorest and most humble citizen in our land. To him it means either increased prosperity or increased poverty. Government and society can deal with the problem of dissatisfied heads; but whenever the problem of unemployed or uncompensated labor is presented, then we have to deal with a much more serious question.

If classes are arrayed against classes, and if there exists a serious conflict between certain social forces, it is only because perfection in human government and equality in social conditions are unknown and unattainable. But it is not the less our duty to endeavor to equitably adjust conflicting interests and to retard the threatened approach of those evils which are so dangerously manifested by the condition of widespread distress and deep-seated dissatisfaction. It would be extremely unfortunate if the suspicion should ever find lodgment in the public mind that classes already rich and powerful are desiring or seeking by unjust or insidious legislation to increase their wealth at the expense of the people. And if it be true, as many believe, that there exists an organized conspiracy of capital to render money dearer at the expense of the labor and products of the people, I would prefer to recommend some other form of spoliation, one less calculated to breed discontent and to arouse popular indignation.

JUDICIAL SALARIES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senate resumes the consideration of its unfinished business. The bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], upon which the Senator from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

The amendment proposed by Mr. MORGAN was, in section 1, line 4, to strike out "5" and insert "4;" so as to read:

That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States shall hereafter be at the rate of $4,000 per annum.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, when the Senate adjourned on Thursday in the discussion of this bill I was about to present some remarks made by the Senator from Mississippi on my left [Mr. GEORGE] on the 21st of March, 1884, upon a bill of precisely the same character, in the debate that occurred on that day. The Senator from Mississippi went through the subject with such care, and presented the statistics that bear on this question with so much force and accuracy, that I prefer to have his remarks read rather than to undertake to debate the subject by a mere reference to them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the Secretary will read the quotation from the RECORD presented by the Senator from Alabama.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Public officers, on the theory of our Government, are public servants. This position should never be forgotten and should be kept steadily in view. To be a servant of the public includes the idea to some extent of personal sacrifice. It means serving a master, and not serving one's self. It excludes the idea of such advantages derived from the position as place the incumbent exceptionally in a better condition than those whom he serves. Taxation is restricted to the legitimate wants and needs of the Government; it can not be justly used to enrich officials of any class, or unnecessarily to grant liberal largesses to any class of men.

Our fathers in the beginning of this Government acted on this rule. They did not give these large and enormous salaries. They calculated largely upon the patriotism and public spirit of officials in order to have offices well and properly filled. I have during the last night looked over the legislation of Congress upon the subject of official salaries from the beginning down to the present, and I desire to bring the facts before the Senate.

In 1789, in the very first bill that ever was passed on this subject, a bill approved by Washington, the salary of the supreme judges of the United States was fixed at $3,500; in 1819 the salary was made $4,500; in 1855 the salary was fixed at $6,000. I am speaking now of the salaries not of the inferior judges, but of the supreme judges. At that figure it remained as long as the Democratic party was in power in this country. In 1871 the salaries of the supreme judges were fixed at $8,000, and in 1871 at $10,000, the present amount.

The district judges by the act of 1789 had salaries as follows; The district judge of Maine had $1,000; of New Hampshire, $1,000; of Massachusetts, $1,200 (in 1819 it was raised in Massachusetts to $1,600); in Connecticut it was $1,000, and so far as my researches go the salary of the district judge of Connecticut, fixed by the act of 1789 at the sum of $1,000, was not changed until 1836. In New York the salary, under the act of 1789, was $1,500; in 1819 it was raised $100, to $1,600. In New Jersey the salary was put at $1,000; in Pennsylvania it was $1,600, and when the western district of that State was formed, in 1818, the judge of that district had $1,600. In Delaware the salary was put at $800. Two hundred dollars was added to that in 1795, and in 1819 it was raised to $1,600, and in a subsequent statute the unprecedented thing was done in the history of official salaries that it was reduced $100, so as to put it at $1,500. In Maryland the salary was $1,500; in Virginia, $1,800, and in 1818 a western district was formed for Virginia, and the salary of that district judge was fixed at $1,600. In Kentucky it was fixed at $1,000, and in 1802 raised to $1,500. In South Carolina the salary was fixed at $1,800; in Georgia, $1,500.

These were the salaries under the act of 1789.

North Carolina was not a member of the Union at that time. The salary fixed for the district judge in that State by the act of 1790 was $1,500. Rhode Island, at the same time, came into the Union and had a district judge, and his salary was fixed at $800. Vermont in the same year having become a member of the Union, a district court was established there with a salary of $800 for the judge, $200 being added to it in 1795. In Tennessee, in 1796, the salary of the district judge was fixed at $800, raised in 1802 to $1,500. In Ohio, on her admission into the Union, the salary of the district judge was fixed at $1,000. In Louisiana, in 1803, the salary of the district judge was $3,000, larger than any salary up to that time that had been given to any district judge in the Union. In Indiana, admitted in 1817, the salary was fixed at $1,000, and in Mississippi at $2,000.

And in that very singular piece of judicial legislation performed in the closing hours of John Adams's administration, when a bill was passed, avowedly almost, for the purpose of giving patronage to the Federal party, then in its last hours of life, when I believe sixteen circuit judges were created, the salaries of those officers were fixed at $2,000, except in the sixth circuit, and in that circuit the salary was $1,500.

In 1819 Illinois was admitted into the Union and the salary of the district judge was fixed at $1,000; in 1820 Alabama was admitted with a district judge's salary of $1,500; in 1822 Missouri came in with a salary for the district judge of $1,200.

In 1830 there seems to have been a general revision of the salaries of the district judges by Congress, and in that revision I find that the district judges in the States of Massachusetts, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and the eastern district of Pennsylvania were fixed at $2,500; in North Carolina at $2,000; in Maine at $1,800; in Rhode Island at $1,500; in Delaware at $1,500, being, as I before remarked, a reduction of $100 from the salary of the judge of that district; in Maryland $2,000; in New Jersey $2,500; in Vermont $1,200; in the western district of Pennsylvania $1,800.

In 1836 Arkansas was admitted into the Union and the district judge of that State had his salary fixed at $2,000. In the same year Michigan was admitted and the salary of the judge there was put at $1,500. Texas was admitted in 1845 and the salary there was $2,000, and Wisconsin in 1846 and the salary was $1,500.

Again, in 1855 there seems to have been a kind of general revision of the subject of the salaries of the district judges with this result: In Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Delaware, New Jersey, Iowa, and Wisconsin, the salary was fixed at $2,000 each; in the northern district of Florida it was fixed at $2,250; in the western district of Virginia, in North Carolina, in the eastern and western districts of Tennessee, in the northern and southern districts of Mississippi, in the western district of Pennsylvania, in the western district of Louisiana, in Texas, in Kentucky, in Ohio, in Indiana, in Missouri, in the eastern and western districts of Arkansas, in Illinois, and in Michigan the salary was put at $2,500 each. In Georgia by this same act of 1855, in South Carolina, in the eastern district of Virginia, in the northern district of New York, and the northern and southern districts of Alabama, the salaries were put at $2,750; in Maryland, Massachusetts, the eastern district of Pennsylvania, the southern district of Florida, and the southern district of California at $3,000; the eastern district of Louisiana at $3,500; the southern district of New York at $3,750; and the northern district of California at $5,000.

In 1857 the salary of the district judge of the northern district of Illinois was made $3,500; in the district of Wisconsin it was made $2,500, and in Michigan $3,000. In 1864 the salary of the district judge of the northern district of New York was made $3,500. In 1865 the salary of the district judge of Nevada was fixed at $3,500. In 1867 the salary of the California judge was fixed again at $5,000, the eastern district of Louisiana at $4,500; Massachusetts, the northern and southern and eastern districts of New York, and the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania, Maryland, the northern district of Illinois, the southern district of Ohio, and New Jersey, at $4,000; and all the other districts at $3,500.

The present salaries of these judges is fixed by section 554 of the Revised Statutes:

"SEC. 554. District judges are entitled to receive yearly salaries at the following rates, payable quarterly from the Treasury: The judge of the district of California, $5,000; the judge of the district of Louisiana, $4,500; the judges of the district of Massachusetts; the northern, southern, and eastern districts of New York; the eastern and western districts of Pennsylvania; the district of New Jersey; the district of Maryland; the southern district of Ohio, and the northern district of Illinois, $4,000. The judges of all other districts, $3,500. No other allowance or payment shall be made to them for travel, expenses, or otherwise."

It will be observed on looking at these salaries that Congress in each one of the acts which have heretofore been passed has discriminated in the salaries of the several district judges. This is the first bill that was ever introduced which ignored the difference between the several districts and undertook to have a uniform salary throughout the United States. The former acts to which I have called attention, especially the earlier ones, seem to have been framed upon a careful consideration of all the elements which ought to be taken into consideration in fixing the salaries of judges.

And here let me remark, Mr. President, that it is not the sole or even the most important element in fixing the salary of a judge to determine as to what may be the abstract value of his service. Uniformly up to now the salaries have been regulated with reference to professional gains in the State in which the appointments were made, with reference to the cost of living in the several States in which the judges resided, and by taking into consideration all these things and another one, to which I will allude presently, the Congress has up to now fixed a satisfactory adjustment of these salaries.

The other consideration to which I allude is this: that up to now Congress in fixing the salaries of the district judges has had some reference to the salaries paid by the States in which the judges discharge their duties to their own judicial officers. It has not, up to this time, been the policy of Congress to give to its judicial officers performing local duties inside of the States an invidious advantage over the judicial officers of the States in whose jurisdiction they perform their duties.

I have a list of the salaries paid by the several States of this Union, not to their inferior judges—I could not get that—but to their highest judicial officers, and by a comparison of that list, which I shall read to the Senate directly, it will be seen that to these inferior—because that is the term by which they are designated in the Constitution—judicial officers of the Government of the United States, this bill proposes to give a salary larger than is given in a large majority of the States of this Union to their highest judicial officers. I have made no comparison between similar officers in the States to these—the circuit and district judges who perform nisi prius duties. I have had no means of ascertaining what is the salary paid to those officers in the States, but I have taken the highest judicial officers of the States, the supreme judges, and I find that in only six States is the salary paid to the highest judicial officer higher than is proposed by this bill to be paid to inferior Federal officers. In New York the salary is $7,000, with $2,000 for expenses; in Pennsylvania it is $8,000; in New Jersey it is $7,000; in Nevada it is $6,000; in California it is $6,000; in Massachusetts it is $6,000. These six States are the only States which pay their highest judges a salary greater than is allowed by this bill.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Allow me to say that the judges of the supreme court in the State of Wisconsin receive a salary, the chief-justice and the associate justices of $5,000 a year. The act increasing their salary was only passed a few years ago, so that the Senator may have overlooked that fact.

Mr. GEORGE. So far as the State judges are concerned I have obtained my figures from the American Almanac, prepared by Mr. Spofford, the Librarian. I am willing to be corrected in reference to Wisconsin; but there are yet only six States which pay their highest judges a larger salary than is proposed to be paid by this bill to the inferior judges of the United States.

I find that there are only six of the States which pay their supreme judges a salary equal to the salary proposed by this bill. They are Colorado, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Wisconsin, and Ohio; and Ohio's law does not go into operation as to the present incumbents, only as to the future incumbents, an idea which sustains the proposition contained in the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. There is also support for that amendment in the effort made by Mr. Madison in the convention which framed the Constitution to have inserted in that clause which prohibits the diminution of the salaries of the judges during their continuance in office the further provision that they should not be increased.

I go on. In Missouri the salary of the supreme judge is $4,500.

Mr. FARLEY. Allow me a moment.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. FARLEY. In the State of California the judges of the courts of the State, their salaries being fixed when they enter on the duties of the office, can not be increased or diminished during their term.

Mr. GEORGE. That is in accordance with Mr. Madison's idea. That seems to be the idea embraced in the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Now, Mr. President, I go on further because I want all these statistics to be laid before the Senate and before the country, however dreary they may be. In Missouri the salary of the supreme judges is $4,500; in Connecticut, Rhode Island, Michigan, Minnesota, Indiana, and Iowa the salary is $4,000, less than the amount proposed to be paid by this bill to the judges of the inferior courts of the United States sitting in the same State and administering a part of the same jurisdiction as the State supreme judges do. Maryland, Mississippi, South Carolina, and Texas pay their supreme judges $3,500—$1,500 less than is proposed by this bill to be paid to the inferior judge of the United States district court who holds his court within the limits of the State. In Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Maine, Virginia, and Kansas the salary of the supreme judges is $3,000; in New Hampshire it is $2,700; in Georgia, Nebraska, Vermont, and North Carolina it is $2,500; in West Virginia, $2,250; in Oregon, $2,000; and in Delaware, $2,000.

A recapitulation of this will show that there are three States that pay a salary of over $5,000, four which pay a salary of $6,000, seven which pay a salary of $5,000, one of $4,500, seven of $4,000, four of $3,500, six of $3,000, one of $2,700, four of $2,500—just one-half of the amount to be paid under this bill to this inferior judge of the United States—one of $2,250, and two of $2,000.

But, Mr. President, that is not all the difference; it lacks a great deal of being all the difference in favor of the Federal judge against the State judge. The difference of tenure is great. I find in looking over the tenure of the judges of the supreme courts of the various States that they range about six and twelve years. One State has twenty-one, Pennsylvania; in New York it is fourteen years, and in New Jersey seven, but all of them have limited terms, very few going over nine years, some of them going as low as two years as in Vermont, and one, a very remarkable tenure in Rhode Island where they hold their office until a joint resolution shall pass both houses of the Legislature removing them from office or asking them to resign.

These Federal officers have the advantage in tenure, and it is a very great advantage that they have security in their position. They are appointed during good behavior, which is tantamount to an appointment for life. That seems to be the practice of the Government, though from the little reflection I have given to that subject I am satisfied that there is a mode, if adopted, by which they can be got rid of without impeachment when they become inefficient. That is not all, Mr. President; when one of these inferior judges has served ten years and arrived at the age of seventy he can resign his place and draw his salary for the rest of his life. That is the law; but in practice, owing to the difficulty of getting them out of their places, if one of them becomes inefficient before he reaches the age of seventy years and before he has served ten years he will be invited or authorized to resign his place by an act of Congress giving him his salary to the end of his term, as was done in the case of Judge Hunt. I believe that is the only case, but it is the precedent set, and it will be followed whenever and wherever one of these judges, before the expiration of his tenure of service and before his arrival at the age of seventy, shall become disqualified in any way to discharge the duties of his office. There is no reason why it should not be done in a case of that sort the same as it was done in the case of Judge Hunt; and so, sir, I may say that it is the accepted doctrine that a Federal judge may resign his place under the authority of a special act of Congress at any time that his health will not permit him to discharge the duties of his office and draw the salary to the end of his life. No such privilege is allowed to any State judge.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have laid these extensive extracts from the speech of the Senator from Mississippi before the Senate because I could not have more clearly stated the statistics that he has furnished us with after his valuable labors, and I consider that they are very important in their bearing upon this question.

We see from the array of facts presented by the Senator from Mississippi how gradually we have proceeded in increasing the salaries of the different judges of the United States. Congress has evidently attempted to accommodate the salaries to the ability of the country to pay taxes and also to the requirements made upon these judges for their time and for their talents in the discharge of their public duties.

From 1873, the time of the adoption of the Revised Statutes, to 1886, thirteen years, we propose to raise these salaries $1,500 each throughout the United States, giving to fifty-six judges an increase of $1,500 a year salary. It seems to me that that is progressing entirely too fast. When we come to consider the fact that after we put this statute on the book it is irrepealable, that the Constitution holds it there beyond the power of Congress to modify it, I think we are going entirely too fast in the increase of these salaries.

Now, take the sum of money which would be necessary to produce $5,000 at 5 per cent. interest per annum. It is $100,000. Under this bill we set apart $100,000, secured in the Treasury of the United States, upon which interest at 5 per cent. is to be payable annually to the judge during his natural life. No matter how old the man may be, nor how disabled he may be, he and his family can rely upon that annuity without any sort of apprehension that it will ever fail them. That sum of money ($100,000) put in a bond of the United States bearing 5 per cent. interest would be worth to-day about 20 or 25 per cent. premium, taking the average life of a judge of the district court of the United States as the time the bond was to run.

So we are making a provision in the nature of a certain support for the judges by setting apart out of the Treasury of the United States or out of the credit of the people a sum of money which I think is entirely excessive. There is no reason when we take a lawyer from his practice and put him on the district bench of the United States why we should call upon the people of the United States to set apart for that man $100,000 in perpetuity, at least during his life, the interest of which at 5 per cent. per annum is to be paid to him.

There is a great deal of strain upon public sentiment, at all events, in allowing the judges of the United States district and circuit courts to hold their offices during good behavior. It seems to be the opinion of many excellent lawyers that the term "good behavior" is one that can not be controlled otherwise than by a regular impeachment brought by the House and tried by the Senate; that we have no power to pass a statute defining what is good behavior; and that we have no power to retire a judge from his office because he may be inefficient, or because his health may fail, or from any other cause except some high crime or misdemeanor in office or some act which would render him obviously unfit to preside in a court of the United States. If that is the true construction, and really I do not know how to combat it, we are in a condition that when a man is put upon the bench he is put there practically for life; it makes but little difference what his course of conduct may be, it is almost impossible ever to rid the country of him.

Looking over the bench of the United States as it exists to-day, is there any occasion for rewarding the judges who are upon that bench by setting apart practically an annuity for life to them which will yield $5,000 per annum, which, as I have said, at 5 per cent. would be $100,000? I do not recognize the justice of it. It is too great a sum.

More than that, it puts the officers of the United States Federal courts in an attitude of social supremacy over the officers of the State courts. We find that the judges of the supreme courts of the different States by no means receive anything like so large salaries as are provided under this bill; and we find that the terms of their offices are brief, ranging from two years to I believe fifteen or sixteen years. In my own State the judges of the supreme court are elected for six years; and it is considered a great honor for a man to get upon that bench and receive as chief-justice of the State $3,500 a year. Yet the judges of that State, I can say without any improper boastfulness, are the equals at least of the district judges of the United States. I can say without venturing very much that they are the equals of the judges of the Supreme Bench of the United States in their learning and in their abilities. They are not dissatisfied with their offices, and yet they hold them for but six years, at a salary of $3,500 for the chief-justice, and $3,000 for the associate justices. I grant you that that is hardly a sufficient salary, and if the State of Alabama felt able to pay larger salaries than that in her present condition, I have no doubt the Legislature by a vote of two-thirds, as it may, would increase their salaries perhaps to $4,000 each, which I believe is the limit that we have ever gone in the State of Alabama.

Here is that State government and here are other State governments that stand next to the people, that administer the laws in which the people are most interested, that try men for their lives, that have jurisdiction of questions involving character and property and liberty, and those judges under the State governments having shorter terms are content with their offices; they are not breaking away from their offices in order to go back to the bar all over the country; and I can see no reason why we should aggrandize out of the national Treasury the judges of the United States district courts in comparison with the judges of the various State courts.

What is this country after all but a community of people organized under State governments, and when they give expression to their opinions, as we see they have done in the laws which have been quoted in the extract read from the speech of the Senator from Mississippi, showing the rate of salaries which the highest judicial officers who deal with these delicate questions in the States receive, where is the occasion for Congress to overstep these boundaries by $1,500 at a single step and to raise these salaries, which are to be perpetual, from $3,500 to $5,000 a year? Not because I believe it is just, not because I believe it is demanded by public sentiment, but because there seems to be an impression among the lawyers of this body that there ought to be some general increase in the salaries, I am willing to vote a salary of $4,000 a year, but I can not consent to go beyond that sum.

I have not opposed this feature of the bill because I desire to cast any reflection upon the bench or upon the legal profession, but I have done it because I believe it is an unjust thing to give every judge of the United States the sum of $5,000. If some of them work sufficiently to earn that amount of money we know that others perhaps do not work twenty or thirty days in the year.

In this bill we depart from a principle which we have observed from the foundation of the Government, which is that we will discriminate in the salaries of the judges according to the requirements of the service, the amount of service that they perform, and in accordance also with the ability of the respective communities where they are located to pay money. It is true this comes out of a common treasury, but when you measure in Congress the salary that a district judge of the United States ought to receive in the State of Alabama you lay down a very high precedent, to say the least of it, in respect of your own opinions as to what the people of Alabama should do with their own judges. Our people have frequently had this subject under consideration, and it would be, I think, impossible to get a majority even of the Legislature of Alabama to raise the salaries of the supreme court judges of that State from the present amount to $5,000.

Mr. HOAR. Will my honorable friend allow me to ask him whether he thinks that the same reasoning would not cover the case of Senators and Representatives, that Congress should pay the Senators or Representatives from a commercial State more than those are paid from Alabama, or that they should be paid in accordance with the amount of work they have to do by reason of the size of their State?

Mr. MORGAN. Congress does pay Senators and Representatives who come from distant States more than it pays those who come from Maryland in their mileage accounts. Congress undertakes to compensate every Senator on this floor and every member of the House, not for his actual expenditures, but for supposed expenditures, in his mileage accounts.

Mr. HOAR. I am not speaking of mileage, which is intended as compensation for traveling; I am speaking of the doctrine which the Senator advances, that the official who represents a community which is not commercial and not wealthy should be paid less in the United States Government than the official who represents a wealthy and commercial community. I do not see why the doctrine would not lead to a conclusion which I suppose none of us would accept.

Mr. MORGAN. The judge of the district court of the United States who presides in Nevada never tries an admiralty cause. He has very little work to perform of any kind. I expect it would task the district judge of Nevada to find twenty days of honest work in a year in his office, whereas the judge of the district court who presides in Boston has continued employment; he presides in a wealthy seaboard State and one that has a large admiralty practice; he is more employed, he renders more service to the Government, and the discrimination is made on that account. I do not pretend that the salaries fixed by the States ought to be a rule for the United States in fixing the salaries of the district judges; but I say it ought to have some influence upon the vote of a Senator here. The State of Massachusetts is perhaps not one-third as large as the State of Alabama. However, the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, representing a rich community, is not expected to do three times as much work as I do in this body, and I dare say he does not do it. If the judges who are in Nevada and in other States that I could mention could have the duties imposed upon them, and could perform the services to the country that are rendered by the judges in Philadelphia, in New York, and in Boston, then we might have some excuse for making their salaries equal. But there ought to be some correspondence between the amount of service rendered by every man, or the amount of duty devolved upon every man, and the compensation which he receives. We have statutes here also which are not enforced, providing that where a Senator is absent from his place in the Senate it is the duty of the Secretary of this body to dock his pay every day that he is absent. Why do we enact a law of that kind as against Senators? It is to compel them to the performance of public duty. It is to compel them to exercise the opportunities furnished to them by law and the Constitution for serving the whole Government here.

We have a system now that discriminates between judges. We have a system to pay a judge an extra allowance when he is called from one district to preside in another. I maintain that the bill as now offered, which equalizes the salaries of the judges throughout the country, is a total departure from the present state of legislation and from that state of legislation which has existed since the foundation of the Government.

Now, I have said about this all that I choose to say, all that I think is necessary, perhaps a great deal more. I regret that I am put in an attitude where I have to controvert the Committee on the Judiciary about their recommendation, but I do not believe that this bill will recommend itself to the judgment of the American people; I am sure that it would not recommend itself to the judgment of the people of Alabama; and so I have antagonized it thus far by the amendments which I have had the honor to offer.

I should like very much, indeed, that the Senate would stop and consider again a proposition which I have advanced several times in debate here, which is that these increased rewards ought not to be given to the men who are on the bench now. They ought to be given to men who will come out and risk their offices if they choose to ask for the higher salary, because this is an opportunity which, when it escapes us, will never recur. When we have placed the salary at $5,000 and then find inefficient judges, judges against whom the Committee on the Judiciary have discriminated here because of the fact of their impropriety of conduct, which is denounced in this very bill—when we find them fastened upon us with salaries of $5,000 a year, we shall never get rid of them. I appeal to the good sense and sound judgment of this body that now is the right time to interpose some difficulties and obstructions to men getting higher salaries under this proposed law. If they feel that they have honestly and faithfully and with ability discharged their duty as judges, let them rely upon the good will and the good sense of the American people for a renewal of their term of office. Let them come here and say, "I am willing to resign my office and a pay of $3,500 in order to get the $5,000 pay that you offer me under this new bill, and I am willing to have my conduct investigated by the Senate of the United States and by the President of the United States, so that it may be determined whether I am a good and faithful officer." No man ought to object to that. No man who is upon the bench of the United States to-day ought to be willing to receive this salary without submitting his claim to the executive department of this Government and to the Senate in respect of his ability and his fidelity in the discharge of these public duties. I have dwelt upon this because I feel that an opportunity is passing us now that we ought to seize upon. When this bill becomes a law it is gone, and gone forever.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, inasmuch as a bill substantially like the one under consideration passed the Senate during the last Congress by a large majority, I was in hopes that this bill would be permitted to pass without an extended discussion, and, although greatly interested in it myself, I had not intended to take part in the debate; but inasmuch as the opponents of the bill seem disposed to discuss it, I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments.

I believe this measure to be a wise one, and I hope the bill will pass without further amendment. It seems to me that an increase in the salaries of the district judges, as proposed by the bill, is demanded upon the principle of equality. So far as my observation extends I think the district judges perform quite as much labor and are quite as able and experienced as the circuit judges, who receive $6,000 per annum, and when the salaries of the district judges are increased to $5,000, as proposed by the bill, they will only be placed on an equality as to salary with members of Congress, although the judges as a rule are employed the year round, while, as we know, Congress is in session less than half the time. If we compare the salaries of the district judges with the salaries of the officers, civil and military, in the Executive Departments of the Government, it will be found, I think, that after the salaries of all the district judges shall be increased to $5,000 per annum they will be still less liberally compensated than the officers of relative importance in the Executive Departments. Equality is equity, and inasmuch as Congress has the fixing of the salaries not only of its own members but of the officers of the judicial and executive departments it ought to be careful to do exact justice. I think it has been the aim of Congress to do this whenever judicial salaries have been the subject of legislation heretofore, but since the salaries of district judges were fixed as they now are the business in most if not all the judicial districts has greatly increased.

Section 554 of the Revised Statutes now regulates the salaries of the district judges, but as a matter of fact they were fixed long prior to that time. Even since the revision of the statutes the growth in population and business of the older States has been rapid and continuous and in some of the Western States it has been phenomenal. I think the salaries of the district judges should now be fixed with reference to the increased business in the several districts.

When the bill which passed the Senate at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress to increase the salaries of the district judges was under discussion the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] presented some statistics, which have been read at the desk to-day, to show how the salaries of the Federal judges had been increased since 1797, when the first act upon the subject was passed, and which fixed the salaries of the Supreme Court judges at $3,500 and the salaries of the district judges at from $1,000 to $1,600, to the present time when the salaries of the Supreme Court are fixed at $10,000 per annum, the salaries of the judges of the circuit courts at $6,000 per annum, the salary of the district judge of Louisiana at $4,500 per annum, the salaries of the district judges of Massachusetts, of the three districts of New York, of the two districts of Pennsylvania, of the districts of Maryland and New Jersey, of the southern district of Ohio, and the northern district of Illinois at $4,000 per annum, and the salaries of the other district judges at $3,500 per annum. But it will be observed that this increase was not all made at one time. It seems to have kept pace with the growth of the country, with the increase of business in the several districts and the increased cost of living. In my judgment, so far from those statistics showing that the district judges are now amply rewarded for their services they afford a sufficient reason why the salaries of the district judges should be increased as now proposed.

It appears to have been the policy of Congress under all administrations to take notice of the growth of the country and the increase of business in the several districts, and to regulate the salaries of the judges of the several courts accordingly.

Besides (and I make the statement without a recent examination),

I think the salaries of district judges have remained unchanged for a longer period than at any other time since the courts were organized. One case I have in my mind, with which I am entirely familiar, and that is the case of the district judge of Oregon, who came upon the bench when Oregon was admitted into the Union in the spring of 1859 at a salary of $3,500, which has remained unchanged for a quarter of a century, although the business of his district has more than doubled every ten years. The rapid growth of this country in wealth and population, the rapid settlement of our public lands under new and varied laws, the great increase of our commerce, domestic and foreign, the increase of the number of questions of jurisdiction between the States and the Federal Government to be decided by the Federal courts, the multiplication of transportation lines and of corporations, State and Federal, under special charters and general laws, with the numerous questions which are constantly arising between corporations and their stockholders, their creditors and the public—in a word, the vast increase in the number of cases to be heard and considered and determined by the Federal courts and the great and constantly increasing number of decisions of State and Federal courts to be examined whenever a new question arises for consideration in my judgment have more than doubled the labor of the judges of all the Federal courts within the last twenty years.

The Federal courts are also intrusted with the decision of great and delicate questions. They hold the scale of justice between the General Government and the States, to restrain each within their constitutional limits, between the legislative department and the people to enforce the restrictions contained in the Federal Constitution which have been provided for the protection of the people's rights, between the executive department and the people to restrain and redress illegal and arbitrary acts and to enforce the laws; and in the first instance, as our judicial system is now constituted, these questions are largely heard and passed upon by the district judges. Intrusted with power over these great, important, and vital questions regulating the vast machinery of the Federal Government, I think that the judicial department is second in importance to no other department of the Government.

Besides, a judge's salary ought not to be determined alone by the amount of labor he performs nor by the responsibility that devolves upon him. The law is a jealous mistress, and he who attains to eminence in the profession must have devoted long years of patient and unremitting study to it, and the preparation and experience necessary to fit a man for a district judge represents an amount of time, labor, and capital which would have enabled him to have achieved success in any calling. The method for the selection of Federal judges prescribed by the Constitution are admirably adapted to secure the best men. I for one should like to see the salaries of all the Federal judges fixed at such an amount as would induce the best lawyers in the country to seek the positions.

There is another matter to which I allude with some hesitation. I do so not so much because I think any utterances in the debate on this measure call for criticism, as because what I have in my mind to say can be better said at this time than at some time when the occasion for it is more marked. In fact, if I thought any utterances during this debate in regard to the judiciary deserved criticism I should not be the one, with the profound respect I entertain for the opponents of this bill, to undertake to answer them. I think that our Federal judges as a rule are men of integrity, ability, and of painstaking industry, and worthy of commendation; and I am sorry that it should have ever been thought necessary by any member of this body on this floor to make any suggestion to the contrary. I regret to say that I have heard, on a few occasions since I have been a member of the Senate, criticisms of the judicial department of the Government, of the executive department, and even of this body, which I believe unjust and uncalled for. There may be no rule of this body and no law that prevents the severest criticism of a co-ordinate branch of the Government at all times, without any information before the Senate to warrant it, but I think there is a law of the fitness of things which prevents it, a law not found in the statutes, a law not to be found in judicial precedents, but a law which we all of us ought to be none the less willing to obey.

The case would be different if the heads of the Departments and the judges of the courts could appear on this floor in their own vindication; but situated as we are here, relieved from liability for our utterances, without fear of denial or contradiction, it appears to me whenever we undertake to criticise the co-ordinate departments of the Government it ought to be done with moderation and justice. Besides, sir, I believe that any general adverse criticism of the judicial department of the Government is undeserved. You may search history and examine the judicial systems of all civilized countries from the time when Moses undertook to devolve upon his associates some share of the responsibility and labor of governing the children of Israel to the present time, and there is not and there never has been, in my judgment, in any country a purer or abler judiciary than we have in this country to-day, Federal and State. It is true that there have been men upon the bench in the State and Federal courts who have been unworthy of their positions, who have prostituted their high offices for unworthy ends, but the examples of incompetency and corruption upon the bench in other countries have been quite as numerous and conspicuous as in our own. I will go further: in my opinion the men who to-day occupy the position of judges of the Federal courts, Supreme, circuit, and district, for integrity, ability, learning, and industry will compare favorably with the great lawyers who have filled similar positions since the courts were organized, many of whose names we to-day venerate.

There is another suggestion which I desire to make in this connection. Every adverse criticism of the judiciary is calculated to weaken the respect of the people for our laws and for the administration of justice. This is an age of unrest. The times are out of joint. As we were told the other day by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], there is a spirit of dissatisfaction and insubordination abroad, not only in Europe but in the United States. It manifests itself in denunciation of the laws that are necessary for the protection of life, liberty, and property; in unjust and ignorant criticisms of officials in every department of the Government; in distrust of the lawmakers, both Federal and State; in criticisms of our courts of justice and the manner of conducting the judicial business; in flagrant violations of the laws by mobs under the pretense of administering justice. What is more to be deprecated is that such unlawful acts are frequently approved by considerable portions of the communities in which they take place and are often commended by portions of the public press as being either necessary or more fitting means for redress of supposed public wrongs than the lawful methods provided by the people themselves.

Such a sentimant imperils the existence of the Government. Government is organized society. It is intended for the protection of life, liberty, and property. It is intended to secure the power of the whole community for the protection of each individual. It is apparent to me that whenever we weaken the security designed to be afforded by civil government and remit individuals to their own unaided efforts to protect their rights, we are retrograding in the scale of civilization. Every adverse criticism, every unjust criticism of a department of the Government, every charge or insinuation of wrongdoing against an officer of this Government made upon this floor is caught up and heralded upon the wings of lightning to the four quarters of the globe, and has a tendency to weaken the respect of the people for the laws which they have made, for the officers they themselves have chosen, for the institutions they have established, and for republican government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I know how useless it is to attempt to oppose any measure in this body which proposes to increase salaries. I have been here too long not to have learned—I should have been a very dull scholar if I had not learned—that there is great liberality on the part of members of the Senate as well as the other House, and that almost every proposition to increase salaries prevails. Nevertheless I have had to meet this very question of the increase of the salaries of judges on several occasions, and invariably I have voted against the increase, as I shall do now, not because I do not suppose there are some of the district judges who earn by the services performed not only $3,500, but $5,000; but the proposition is to raise the salaries of over forty judges, some of whom do not earn by any service rendered to the Government anything more than they are getting to-day. If we could have an adjusted scale and pay gentlemen according to the services they render, I should be perfectly willing to pay some of the district judges even the sum of $5,000 a year. But when you make a proposition to pay on a straight line every district judge of the United States the sum of $5,000, I can not vote for it, because I believe the services they render the Government do not entitle them to it. The sum of $4,000, as proposed by the Senator from Alabama, is a very liberal compensation when you take into consideration that that is a salary for life, not only while they are performing duty on the bench, but as long as they draw the vital breath they are to receive that sum. I think it is a liberal compensation in many of the districts for the services the judges render. I shall, therefore, vote for the amendment. If that amendment does not prevail I shall not be able to vote for the bill as it is reported, because I believe the compensation provided for in the bill is more than ought to be given indiscriminately to all the Federal district judges.

Mr. President, I have voted against the proposition before and I shall vote against it again, not because, as I say, I am opposed to paying men the full value for the services rendered, but from a conviction that the bill proposes to pay certain district judges more compensation than they earn by their services to the Government, and I am not for making any of the Federal judges or any other Federal officers mere gratuities.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the distinguished Senator who has this bill in charge, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, or the Senator from Massachusetts, equally distinguished, whether or not the committee considered the question of an adjustment of these salaries?

Mr. HOAR. I stated that some days ago, but I will restate in answer to the Senator from Maine. The committee tried to find some principle by which they could make such a scale. They sent to every district judge in the country and obtained answers as to the extent of the business in each district. The committee got statistics from either the judges or the clerks as to the number of cases in the various courts. They became satisfied it was entirely impracticable. They became satisfied also that the opinion of a large majority of the Senate was against that view, the most experienced lawyers of the Senate. One ground is this: The judge of the United States district court who does the least work may have a most important cause in his district at any time, a cause involving the holding of some great railroad, a giant corporation, in the grasp of the law, and requiring not merely the quality of integrity and ability, but requiring the profoundest public confidence in the integrity and ability of the judge who presides in the court in order to have the public feel that the law is administered without respect of persons.

The judge who spends but fifty or one hundred days in the year in court must hold his whole year at the command of his office. He is not permitted to practice law, is not expected to engage in any other business. It would be regarded as indecent for a judge to be engaged in speculation or in any general business, the interests of which might be affected by judicial decision, as it would be for a Secretary of the Treasury, who is prohibited from doing it by law. Therefore it seemed that this salary, a high one it is true in some few portions of the country, but generally a moderate income of an average respectable and able lawyer, was not too high.

I quite agree that the judge is not to be compensated in proportion to the vast earnings which good lawyers make in great commercial cities or the great railroad lawyers of the country. There are certain vocations in life, the vocation of a clergyman, the vocation of the college professor or president, the vocation of the legislator, and the vocation of the judge, where unquestionably the dignity, the public respect, the permanence of tenure go very far to eke out a moderate salary; but I do not think that in fixing this sum of $5,000, the same sum which we fix for own salaries—a sum less by a thousand dollars than that fixed for the salary of the judges of the circuit court—we are transgressing that principle.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I have listened with a good deal of interest to the observations of the Senator from Alabama on this subject. I can fully sympathize with him from his standpoint in the views he entertains. There have been members of the Federal judiciary, and especially in that portion of the country, who are not only not worth what they are getting now, but not worth anything at all. They have been obstacles to the administration of justice rather than ministers of justice. But while sympathizing to this extent with the Senator from Alabama, I turn to look at the condition of the State I in part represent on this floor, and I feel impelled by every sense of fair dealing and public interest to support the bill as it has been reported by the Judiciary Committee.

The State of Indiana has over two millions of people in it. There are over 6,000 miles of railroad in the State, embracing every county but two within its borders. The Federal litigation is necessarily large; I might say enormous. There are four courts held by the district judge for the district of Indiana—one at Indianapolis, one at Fort Wayne, one at New Albany, and one at Evansville. He pays his own expenses of travel and of hotels. The only criticism I have upon this bill is that for such a man as occupies that bench at this time, performing such services as he does, it is really not enough. I should be glad if there could be some method, and yet I do not see that there can be, by which discriminations can be made as to labor or merit on the bench in the salaries which we shall pay judges.

Mr. MORGAN. I would like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the present system is a discriminating system. Ten judges get $4,000, one judge gets $4,500, one judge gets $5,000, and forty other judges get $3,500. That is a discriminating system.

Mr. VOORHEES. There is no measure presented, I believe, of that kind here.

Mr. MORGAN. I have not thought it worth while to present anything of that kind now.

Mr. VOORHEES. When a measure of that kind is introduced and comes up for consideration, I will give it a careful examination; but as the measure stands now, I feel impelled by the considerations which I have stated to support the bill. I am not alarmed about the cry of large salaries when the men who get them earn them by faithful service and by conspicuous ability.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish it to be observed that I am grateful to the Senator from Indiana for the sympathy he has expressed for the people of my State. That is due to them also. But if the district judgeship in Indiana were to become vacant, I expect I should have a chance to reciprocate the sympathies of the Senator from Indiana, for I suppose there would not be less than one hundred very admirable Indiana lawyers who would be applying for it at $3,500 a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 43; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Berry,	Colquitt,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Call,	George,	Ransom,	Walthall.
Cockrell,	Harris,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	Maxey,	Vance,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. I offer an amendment to come in as an additional section.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That any judge of the United States district or circuit court who shall from any cause be disabled permanently from the performance of the duties of his office may be retired on his own application, and his salary of $3,000 a year shall be paid him unless he shall afterward be removed by impeachment; that when an application shall be made by any judge for retirement under this act the Attorney-General shall file an information before some judge of the circuit court of the United States, setting forth the application of such judge for retirement under this act on account of disability to perform the duties of his office, and it shall be the duty of such circuit judge to cause witnesses to be examined as to the condition of such judge and the disability alleged, and to certify the evidence, with his decision thereon, to the President of the United States, who is hereby authorized to retire such judge under this act if he approves the decision of the judge of the circuit court, and to nominate another person to be judge of said district or circuit court in place of the judge retired under the provisions of this act.

Mr. CALL. I suppose, sir, there can be no controversy or question that a judge who is disabled from performing the duties of his office ought to be retired. That is a proposition too manifest to admit of any kind of question, and it is a great evil in the judicial system of this country that men who render themselves incapable of performing their judicial duties by habits of intoxication, by notorious drunkenness, or who are disabled from any cause, whether innocent or vicious, should remain upon the bench for a lifetime, an obstruction to the administration of justice, an evil example to the community, and in every respect failing to perform the duties for which they were appointed. I introduced an amendment to this bill, in which I proposed a proceeding by quo warranto to determine whether or not the condition on which a judge received his appointment had been performed, and the condition of a proper use of his office and the discharge of his functions should be judicially ascertained, and if decided adversely to him, that he should be retired on a salary. It met with no sympathy from the Committee on the Judiciary nor from the majority of the Senate and no support, and yet unless there be some such proceeding as that there is no remedy for the case. It is laid down in Blackstone and in all the law books that it is an implied condition upon which a man receives his appointment that he shall perform the duties of the office. Blackstone lays it down:

Estates upon condition implied in law are where a grant of an estate has a condition annexed to it inseparably from its essence and constitution although no condition be expressed in words. As, if a grant be made to a man of an office, generally without adding other words, the law tacitly annexes hereto a secret condition that the grantee shall duly execute his office, on breach of which condition it is lawful for the grantor or his heirs to oust him and grant it to another person; for an office, either public or private, may be forfeited by misuser or non-user, both of which are breaches of this implied condition: 1. By misuser or abuse; as if a judge takes a bribe, or a park-keeper kills deer without authority. 2. By non-user or neglect; which in public offices that concern the administration of justice, or the commonwealth, is of itself a direct and immediate cause of forfeiture.—Blackstone's Commentaries, volume 2, page 152.

The Constitution provides that the civil officers of the United States may be removed on impeachment for high crimes and misdemeanors, but drunkenness, disability produced from bad habits or from overwork in the faithful discharge of his duties, are neither crimes nor misdemeanors, and if that construction be maintained, that there is no other mode of removing a man save by impeachment, his appointment is a sinecure, a permission to him to do anything and everything either of non-user or misuser of his office within the limits of a high crime and misdemeanor, that alone excepted, he may fail to perform every single duty of his office. But there is a difference of opinion, and the judicial tribunals of the country, jealous of their own rights, have looked in the direction in their decisions that the removal by impeachment was the only proceeding to which a judge was amenable, and therefore I have asked this amendment to the bill in which a judge on his voluntary application may be retired, the fact of his disability being ascertained by a judicial proceeding.

I hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment. It will open the way for the retirement of some men who are upon the bench who ought not to be there and who do not perform and can not perform the condition upon which they received their appointments.

The amendment does not impute wrong to any man. He may apply for retirement for disability, and that disability being judicially ascertained he retires on an adequate salary for his life, which is far better for the public interest and for the people over whom he presides than that he should continue pretending to perform duties which he does not perform and receiving a salary for wrongdoing or for being incapable of performing his duties instead of the administration of his office.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the amendment, although well intended I am sure, ought not to be adopted. The Senate has been, and the other House of Congress as well has been, extremely reluctant in old times to go as far as the law now goes in respect of retiring civil officers on salaries; but after a great deal of discussion and trouble we fixed the law allowing a judge to retire at seventy years of age after ten years of service. This amendment opens it to the will of anybody who may be appointed to-morrow to retire the next day, with the assent of the President, with his salary. Therefore it would appear to me—and I think I am safe in speaking for the committee in that respect—that it would not be wise to adopt this amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer another amendment. In line 4, after the word "States," I move to strike out the words "shall hereafter" and insert "who shall be appointed hereafter;" so as to read:

That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States who shall be appointed hereafter shall be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

Mr. HOAR. We voted on that once.

Mr. CONGER. Would an amendment to that be in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be.

Mr. CONGER. I move to insert after the word "appointed" the words "during this administration."

Mr. MORGAN. I am glad the Senator from Michigan is convinced that the only chance to get an honest judge is from a Democratic administration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Michigan will be read.

Mr. CONGER. Let it be read so that I may hear how it sounds.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "appointed" in the amendment it is proposed to insert "during this administration;" so as to read:

That the salaries of the several judges of the district courts of the United States who shall be hereafter appointed during this administration shall be at the rate of $5,000 per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. I would ask the members of the Committee on the Judiciary if, when an evil of this kind is presented to them of an incompetent or a disabled judge who does not perform the duties of his office at all, of a judge who has rendered himself or has innocently become incapable of performing them, they do not propose some remedy for it? The Constitution is plain. Drunkenness is not a crime or a misdemeanor, nor is disability or the failure to perform the duties of an office or incapacity, and I ask the Committee on the Judiciary, who seem to control the Senate on this subject, if communities are to be afflicted for the whole life of an incapable judge who refuses to perform his duty openly, wantonly refuses to do it, or who has become disabled by an act of Providence, if there can be no remedy provided for that?

Mr. HOAR. I have, of course, no authority to speak for the Judiciary Committee in regard to the question which has been proposed by the Senator from Florida; but speaking for one, I believe that drunkenness, incapacitating a judge for the performance of the duties of his office, or so habitual and open as to be scandalous, even if it does not give public scandal or offense or shock the sense of the community, is an impeachable misdemeanor, and that the remedy is open by impeachment in the case which the Senator suggest. And it is not a new question. More than once in the history of the United States a judge's impeachment has been proposed in such cases and the judge has resigned to avoid it; and I have no doubt that would operate on any judge if the state of case the Senator from Florida supposes were true.

I will say to that Senator again, having no authority to speak for the committee but only speaking for one, that if he will send to the Judiciary Committee any resolution or bill seeking to protect the public against such a scandal as he suggests, it shall have my own most careful and prompt consideration, and I have no doubt it will have that of the whole committee; but of course I can not make promises for anybody but myself.

Mr. CALL. I am very glad to hear that, because I propose to ask the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary to the existence of this evil in the country. There may be a case of paralysis or incapacity, waiving the question whether or not that is a crime and misdemeanor which is not so declared by law, which I do not think it is. I do not think anything can be a crime or a misdemeanor until the law has so declared it to be, and certainly the law can never declare that to be a crime which is a mere incapacity, such as paralysis, such as physical weakness, mental or physical incapacity, rendering a man incapable of performing the duties of the office.

There is not only one, but there are numbers of cases of this description within the knowledge not only of Senators on this floor but of judges of the Supreme Court of the United States who have been personal witnesses of the fact of men being upon the bench sitting in the trial of causes who are certainly incompetent, disabled both in mind and body from performing the duties of a judge, and who for years have been in this condition, and something ought to be done to avoid not only this wrong to the public but this disgrace to our laws.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me for one moment?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I believe that the statement to the House of Representatives on his personal responsibility of such a fact by any respectable citizen of Florida or anywhere else would secure the attention of that House and would result in an examination to see whether the fact alleged was probably true, and if they found the fact sustained, it would result in an impeachment of the officer or in his resignation in consequence of the proceeding.

Mr. CALL. I do not wish to make any charge against any judge or any particular person. I am not here to charge the judge in one district or another with wrongdoing or with incapacity; but I am alluding to the existence of an evil which can be readily ascertained, whether it is in one part of the country or in another. But I do not see how you could convict a man by impeachment for being habitually intoxicated in the performance of the duty of a judge, or how you can convict for being disabled either mentally or physically, because neither is a crime or misdemeanor in the language of the Constitution until it is so declared by the laws. These two words have a technical and legal meaning in the laws of England and those of our country. And by all the principles of our law you can not punish a man for an act before the law has declared the act to be criminal and forbidden by the law. It is said misdemeanor means misdemeanor in office; but you can not give it this meaning, because it is a criminal proceeding in which a man is to be punished for a "high crime or misdemeanor," and by our law he must be advised before committing the act that it is criminal. "High crimes or misdemeanors" mean greater and smaller crimes, and these words can properly have no other meaning.

Mr. President, I only wished to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the existence of this condition of the law. A man may under this construction of the Constitution never perform a single duty as judge; he may accept the office and draw the salary and never do anything else; and yet there is no mode known to the laws as they now are by which he can be gotten rid of. He can not be impeached; and unless it can be judicially ascertained (which I believe it may be by a proceeding of quo warranto) and a forfeiture declared, there is no way that such a judge can be removed or retired. Even if there should be crimes and misdemeanors impeachment is almost impossible and practically useless.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I should be sorry, as late as it is, to have this observation of my friend from Florida go without any reply, because it would be a reproach to the administration of this Government for now a century if it was supposed to be necessary to have a statute law in order to make it a high misdemeanor under the Constitution of the United States for a judge to be intoxicated or affected by the use of intoxicating liquors while sitting on the bench, because it is a public scandal, an obstruction to the administration of justice, a reproach to the whole administration of justice, and therefore I believe it to be just as impeachable as if he had committed murder or as if he had taken bribes—more than as if he had committed murder in fact and as if he had taken bribes.

Mr. BUTLER. There are numbers of instances where judges have been tried on such allegations in the State tribunals.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And I was going to add, as my friend from South Carolina suggests, that there have been instances in the States where judges have been tried and removed from office for that very offense, and, if I do not misrecollect, in the earlier history of this country there was a case, I think from Pennsylvania—certainly from some State—where a district judge was tried and disposed of on that ground. Certainly there can be no doubt in my mind of the fact that intoxication on the bench of a court of justice is a high misdemeanor in the sense of the Constitution.

Mr. DAWES. There was an early case of a district judge of the United States in New Hampshire who was impeached and removed. The articles of impeachment embraced two charges. One was of incapacity and one was of drunkenness. He was convicted without specifying for which, and was removed from office.

Mr. CALL. I do not desire to detain the Senate, but I do not see how you can attach to misdemeanor a criminal meaning unless the law has previously declared that the act shall be a criminal offense and what misdemeanor shall be. The language of the Constitution is used in its legal and technical sense when it speaks of crime. I do not know how you can make a crime except by law.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator understand that if a judge should take a bribe, there being no statute law against taking a bribe by a judge, he could not be impeached?

Mr. CALL. I understand this, that you can not make a crime except by the lawmaking power, whether it be the taking of a bribe or whatever it may be. There is no power competent to make an act a crime except the law-making power, and a statute must create a crime in our country. When it is so declared in the law it becomes criminal. But what of the incapacity to which my amendment refers, the disability? It may be a perfectly innocent incapacity, a perfectly innocent disability which has overtaken the man. That, so far as the public is concerned, is the essential feature, whether produced by drunkenness and scandalous conduct or by some innocent cause. It is the incapacity to perform the duties of the office; and how are you to get rid of that by impeachment as a high crime and misdemeanor? There is evidently a necessity for some legislation on the subject such as I have proposed.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. ALDRICH. I desire to announce that I am paired generally with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], but understanding that he would vote for the bill if he were here, I vote in the affirmative.

The result was announced—yeas 43, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—43.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Payne,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Platt,
Blair,	Evarts,	Logan,	Sewell,
Bowen,	Frye,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Brown,	Hale,	Mahone,	Spooner,
Butler,	Hampton,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Harrison,	Miller of N. Y.,	Teller,
Chace,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vest,
Conger,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Voorhees,

Eustis,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,	Wilson of Md.

So the bill was passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VOORHEES introduced a bill (S. 1144) for the relief of Col. Daniel McClure; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask leave to present at this time with the bill the memorial of Col. Daniel McClure, assistant paymaster-general United States Army, praying for relief in the settlement of his accounts with the United States. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs to accompany the bill just introduced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels it his duty to call attention to the fact that the memorial is long, and it is rather unusual to print memorials without the special order of the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is a matter of grave importance, and I think the committee would prefer that it be printed for their use.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana moves that the memorial just presented by him be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest to the Senator from Indiana that he leave that to the committee to which he refers the memorial. It can have it printed if it deems it necessary, and I suggest to him that there is no necessity for an order of the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well; for the present let it stand in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (S. 1145) for the government and control of the Saint Mary's Falls Canal, Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KENNA (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1146) for the better government of the Light-House Establishment; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 1147) providing for the retirement of wagon-masters; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1148) providing for the construction of an iron pier at Fortress Monroe, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1149) allowing discharged officers of the Army one year's pay and allowances; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1150) for the relief of P. L. Ward, widow and executrix of William Ward, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to give notice to the Senate that on Friday next I shall call up for consideration the bill for the admission of Dakota. I name that day because I am advised by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] that he desires some little time with a view of submitting the views of the minority of the committee. If the business of the Senate will admit, on Friday I shall call up that bill.

LAND-GRANT WAGON-ROADS IN OREGON.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer the following resolution, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate copies of all maps, papers, and documents on file in the Interior Department showing the location of wagon-roads in the State of Oregon under the provisions of grants made to said State to aid in the construction of military wagon-roads, and the time when such locations were made; of all papers and documents filed as evidence of the completion of said roads and compliance with the conditions upon which said grants were made by private corporations to whom said grants were transferred by said State; and a statement of the number of acres of land to which said companies became, or would have become, entitled to upon compliance with the conditions of such grants, the number of acres within the limits of each of said grants surveyed to this date, the number of acres selected and listed by each of said companies, and the number of acres heretofore patented to each of said companies, together with copies of all papers showing or tending to show a failure on the part of said State or said private corporations to comply with the conditions upon which such grants were made.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 10, being Senate bill No. 9.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business No. 10, being the bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, January 18, 1886.

The House was called to order at 12 m. by the Clerk, Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr., who directed the reading of the following communication:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 18, 1886.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives:

I hereby designate Hon. WILLIAM M. SPRINGER to act as Speaker pro tempore during my absence this day.

JOHN G. CARLISLE.

Mr. SPRINGER accordingly assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by Rev. S. K. COX, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MOFFATT, a member of the committee having in charge the Presidential succession bill, was debarred from expressing his views on that bill by the ordering of the previous question, and I now ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to print those views in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON ELECTIONS.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections have leave to print the testimony and all other papers relating to the several contested-election cases referred to said committee, and that said committee also be authorized to have printed for the use of said committee such documents and papers as it may deem necessary in connection with subjects considered by said committee.

Resolved, further, That said committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker, is that resolution presented for immediate action?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is. The resolution simply provides for printing the record in contested-election cases. It is the usual resolution upon that subject.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state for the information of the chairman of the Committee on Printing that this is the usual and necessary order which has always been made, and always made by unanimous consent.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask that the resolution be again read.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I will not raise the point of order upon the resolution in view of the statement which has been made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

The resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, Mr. BENNETT and Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, were granted leave to print in the RECORD remarks on Senate bill 471, the Presidential succession bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This being Monday, the Chair will proceed to call the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions for reference to appropriate committees. Under this call joint resolutions and memorials from State and Territorial Legislatures will be in order; also resolutions calling for information from the heads of Departments.

GUSTAV SCHUFFERT.

Mr. MARTIN introduced a bill (H. R. 3850) granting a pension to Gustav Schuffert; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM P. SHELTON.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 3851) granting a pension to William P. Shelton; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE W. KENNARD.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 3852) for the relief of George W. Kennard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COOSA RIVER.

Mr. FORNEY introduced a bill (H. R. 3853) to authorize the Talladega and Coosa Valley Railroad Company of Alabama to erect a bridge across the Coosa River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SCHOOL FUNDS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. FORNEY also introduced a bill (H. R. 3854) to increase the school fund in certain townships of the State of Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Education, and ordered to be printed.

THE BRITISH BARK VISCOUNT CANNING.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, introduced a bill (H. R. 3855) to remit the forfeiture of the British bark Viscount Canning, and to refund the proceeds of the sale thereof to her owners, Edward D. Morris and C. R. Morris; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES A. TORBERT.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, also introduced a bill (H. R. 3856) for the relief of the legal representatives of James A. Torbert, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS AT LAW OF FRANCES HOLMAN.

Mr. MURPHY. I ask that this bill be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The proper reference seems to be to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. MURPHY. This bill has been before the Committee on Private Land Claims, and also before the Committee on Public Lands; but the parties interested think it more properly belongs to the Committee on Mines and Mining. It pertains exclusively to the matters over which that committee has jurisdiction, and they would be pleased therefore to have it so referred. I have no interest in the matter myself, and simply introduce the bill by request. It occurs to me that would be the proper committee to which it should be referred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill does not propose to dispose of any portion of the public domain.

Mr. MURPHY. No, sir; it is a question that pertains to mining rather than to anything else, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that the bill, under the rule, should go to the Committee on Private Land Claims. But the gentleman may ask unanimous consent for a different reference.

Mr. MURPHY. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

EQUALITY OF GOLD AND SILVER DOLLARS.

Mr. WADSWORTH submitted the following resolution:

Whereas by the fourteenth section of the act of Congress of February 12, 1873, now section 3511 of the Revised Statutes, the gold dollar of the United States of 25.8 grains standard fineness is made the unit of value; and

Whereas the President, on his accession to office, found each and all of the full legal-tender gold and silver and paper dollars of the United States equal in value to 25.8 grains of standard gold in all transactions within the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That it became the duty of the President to use all lawful means in his power to maintain this equality in value of such dollars, and that in the opinion of this House he has hitherto faithfully and properly endeavored to discharge that duty.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that this resolution should be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. BLAND. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Coinage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will be so referred unless the gentleman from Kentucky desires to submit a motion for a different reference.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was under the impression, as it involves simply a question as to whether the President had or had not violated the laws, that therefore it should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I ask that reference.

Mr. DINGLEY. The bill does not refer at all to coinage.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Not at all to coinage. It simply declares the opinion of this House that the President of the United States has faithfully and properly hitherto discharged his duty in endeavoring to maintain the equality in the value of our legal-tender money.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Can the resolution be again reported?

The resolution was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that this resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BLAND. I think it had better be referred to the Committee on Civil Service Reform, as that seems to be in the line of the recommendations it embodies; and I think it belongs properly to the duties of that committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. The Committee on Civil Service Reform will take care of such subjects as properly come within its jurisdiction. I am satisfied this properly belongs to the Committee on Coinage.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to refer this to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Would a motion be in order in the shape of an amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks not, except to refer to another committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. This is simply a declaration on the part of the House as to its belief that the President has executed the law. It is a judicial question, and not one of coinage.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I desire, if it be in order, to move its reference to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair thinks that motion is in order; and the question will be first taken on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 90, noes 54.

Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum has voted.

Mr. BLAND. This resolution refers exclusively to coinage, and it ought to go to that committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not debatable.

The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, and Mr. WADSWORTH were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 120, noes 59.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The motion as amended was agreed to; and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a resolution authorizing the printing of 25,000 extra copies of the President's message for the use of the House, have had the same under consideration, and have instructed me to recommend its passage. The estimated cost of printing the message, as recommended, is $612.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there be printed and bound 25,000 extra copies of the President's last annual message and accompanying documents for the use of the House.

The resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DOCUMENTS FOR APPROPRIATION COMMITTEES.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to make another privileged report from the Committee on Printing. That committee, to whom was referred a resolution with regard to the printing of documents for the several appropriation committees, have instructed me to report the same back with a recommendation that it be adopted.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That all committees having jurisdiction of general appropriation bills be authorized to have printed and bound for their use such documents as they may deem necessary in connection with subjects referred to them during the present Congress.

The resolution was considered and adopted.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. REUBEN ELLWOOD.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the hour of 1 o'clock on the 28th day of the present month be fixed as the time for considering the resolutions heretofore offered respecting the death of my esteemed predecessor in this House, Hon. REUBEN ELLWOOD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MESSENGER FOR COMMITTEE ON RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the following resolution of Mr. WILLIS—

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper be, and he is hereby, requested to employ a messenger for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors at a salary of $——, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House—have considered the same, and offer the following as a substitute, and ask its adoption:

"Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ a messenger for the Committee on Rivers and Harbors until the end of the present fiscal year, with compensation at the rate of $1,000 per annum, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House."

The question being taken on the adoption of the resolution reported by the Committee on Accounts as a substitute, there were—ayes 92, noes 29.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. DOCKERY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House adjourn.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion to adjourn the Chair desires to correct some erroneous references.

The bill (H. R. 2179) proposing to grant a pension to Lena Kebler for military services of her husband prior to the late war should have been referred to the Committee on Pensions instead of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 2763) for the relief of Hiram Haskell was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions when it should properly have gone to the Committee on Accounts.

The bill (H. R. 3647) for the relief of Joseph Walton & Co., was improperly referred to the Committee on War Claims instead of the Committee on Claims.

If there be no objection the references in these cases will be changed and the bills properly referred, as just indicated by the Chair.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] has moved to adjourn, and, as the Chair understands, does not withdraw the motion.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the motion to adjourn should not prevail what would be the next business in order?

The SPEAKER. The call of committees for motions to suspend the rules, this being the third Monday of the month.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw the motion to adjourn?

Mr. MORRISON. What does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] propose?

Mr. NELSON. I desire to report from the Committee on Indian Affairs a joint resolution for the relief of some starving Indians in Montana.

Mr. MORRISON. I yield for that purpose.

RELIEF OF NORTHERN CHEYENNES IN MONTANA.

Mr. NELSON, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs a joint resolution (H. Res. 91) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to use certain unexpended balances for the relief of the Northern Cheyennes, in Montana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRISON (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.). I now renew the motion that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 86, noes 75.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The question was taken; when 34 members voted in favor thereof and 134 in opposition, the affirmative vote being more than one-fifth of the total number.

Mr. HAMMOND. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. MORRISON and Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, were appointed tellers.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to fritter away the time of the House, and as there is an evident disposition on the part of a considerable majority to adjourn, I will therefore withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The demand for the yeas and nays is withdrawn.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I sympathize with gentlemen who are afraid to go on record anyway.

Mr. MORRISON. We have a record already that is satisfactory.

So, no further count being demanded, the motion of Mr. MORRISON was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Also, petition of Thomas N. Allison, administrator of James L. Allison, praying reference of his claim to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. WILSON: Petition of Theophilus Moore, for a special act for pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers relating to the claims of Henrietta M. Waugh, and of the trustees of the Elk Branch church, of Jefferson County, W. Va.—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claim of William M. Morrison—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, petitions of Robert Lawson; of Edward Tearney, administrator of Samuel Ridenour; of George H. Beckwith; of Mrs. E. C. La Rue; of George H. Small; of Thomas H. Hysarg; of William B. Daniels; of Isaac W. Hutton; of William Lloyd; of S. W. Wysarg, executor; of J. J. H. Straith; of John Burns, and of Thomas B. Moore, administrator of Lydia Miller, praying that their several claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WISE: Petition of Robert F. Williams, for refund of taxes—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WOODBURN: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of Nevada, praying for an appropriation to erect a school building in that State for the education of Indian children living therein—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The following petitions, praying Congress to place the coinage of silver upon an equality with gold; that there be issued coin certificates of one, two, and five dollars, the same being made a legal tender; that one and two dollar legal-tender notes be issued, and that the public debt be paid as rapidly as possible by applying for this purpose the idle surplus now in the Treasury, were presented and severally referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures:

By Mr. T. M. BROWNE: Of Jacob Fender and 38 others, of Wayne County, Indiana.

By Mr. BURNES: Of 128 citizens of Ebony, Mo.

By Mr. LYMAN: Of citizens of Mills County, Iowa, and of C. E. Dinwiddie and others, of same county and State.

By Mr. NEECE: Of Richard J. Cabene and 46 others, of Alexis, Ill.

By Mr. O'DONNELL: Of 44 citizens of Calhoun County, Michigan.

By Mr. RYAN: Of S. H. Rhodes and others, of Pomona County, Kansas, and of William J. McMillan and others, of Osage County, Kansas.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Of 90 citizens of Palmer, Ill., and of citizens of Sangamon County, Illinois.

By Mr. W. J. STONE, of Missouri: Of J. E. Hard and 223 others, citizens of Barton County, Missouri.

By Mr. TOOLE: Of the Board of Trade of Helena, Mont.

By Mr. J. B. WEAVER: Of J. G. Ellis and 100 others, citizens of Kansas; of S. A. Holcomb and 100 others, of Oregon; of J. J. Wesline and 60 others, of Pennsylvania, and of W. S. Pelham and about 100 others, of Iowa.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 19, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of Francis R. Crone and other citizens of York County, Pennsylvania, praying for an amendment of the tariff act of 1883 relative to the importation of tobacco; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BECK presented the petition of Samuel Ceas, of the District of Columbia, praying that his claim for supplies furnished the Army of the United States be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Franklin County, Kentucky, remonstrating against the division of the State into two judicial districts; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the memorial of C. R. Cowley, O. H. Keith, Charles Collins, and other citizens of Wyoming, Genesee County, New York, remonstrating against the suspension of silver coinage and favoring the unlimited and indefinite coinage of that metal; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SPOONER presented the petition of T. J. Spear and other residents of Vernon County, Wisconsin, praying for the passage of a law forfeiting absolutely the Sioux City and Saint Paul Railroad land grant in Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Eau Claire, Wis., praying that an appropriation be made for the erection of a public building at Eau Claire; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a memorial of the board of supervisors of Saint Croix County, Wisconsin, favoring a return to the tariff of 1846, and remonstrating against any reduction or repeal of the tax on whisky; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, presented the petition of Mrs. N. C. Cushman, widow of the late Commander Charles H. Cushman, United States Navy, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of citizens of Armada, Nebr., praying national aid to education; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of hospital stewards in the United States Army, praying for an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HARRIS presented a resolution of the Memphis (Tenn.) Cotton Exchange, asking increased appropriations for the support of the Signal Service in the cotton States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 491) to provide for an American register for the steamship Caroline Miller, of Baltimore, Md., reported it with an amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 390) for the relief of H. A. Myers, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 94) for the relief Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Holroyd, widow and administratrix of the estate of John Holroyd, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 223) to regulate the promotion of graduates of the United States Military Academy, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 806) granting a pension to Mary B. Holmes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

SENATE SEAL.

Mr. INGALLS. The Committee on Rules, by a resolution of the Senate adopted on the 31st of March last, were directed to procure a seal for the use of the Senate. They have discharged that duty, and I now place the seal in the custody of the Senate with a written report, and a resolution for adoption which I ask may be reported at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Rules report a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary shall have the custody of the Great Seal, and shall use the same for the authentication of process, transcripts, copies, and certificates whenever directed by the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I will ask that the resolution may lie upon the table and, with the report, be printed. The committee were not clear that it was desirable, and they are very sure it is not necessary, that the seal should be used for the authentication of all the process and proceedings of the Senate. There is no existing authority whatever for the use of a seal under any circumstances, and how far authority should be given for the use of the seal hereafter is a matter for somewhat serious deliberation.

The resolution that I have offered is in accordance with the views of the committee, but inasmuch as it may require further consideration I will ask that it may lie over and I shall call it up at a subsequent day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution and report will lie upon the table and be printed if there be no objection.

MANAGER OF NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. HAWLEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a joint resolution (S. R. 31) appointing John F. Hartranft a manager of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution if there be no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length for information.

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, That General John F. Hartranft, of Philadelphia, in the State of Pennsylvania, be, and he is hereby, appointed a manager of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to fill the vacancy in the Board of Managers of said Home caused by the death of the late General George B. McClellan.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. Does that come from a committee?

Mr. HAWLEY. It comes from the Military Committee, to which was referred a formal notification of the death of General McClellan.

Mr. HALE. It is then upon the report of a committee?

Mr. HAWLEY. Yes.

Mr. HALE. That I did not understand.

Mr. HAWLEY. A communication was addressed by the chairman of that board to the presiding officer of the Senate notifying the Senate of the vacancy and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, by which I was directed to report this joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMPILATION OF SENATE ELECTION CASES.

Mr. HOAR. The Committee on Privileges and Elections were directed at the spring session of the Senate to cause to be compiled the Senate election cases from the beginning of the Government and to report the compilation to the present session. I now lay before the Senate that compilation in print. It has been made by the clerk of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, George S. Taft, who has devoted almost entirely the whole summer with great labor and fidelity to the work, and I think I am warranted in saying that it is a most admirable compilation and will be of very great convenience to the Senate. I offer the following resolution, which I ask may be considered at the present time.

Resolved, That there be printed for the Senate 500 extra copies of the compilation of Senate Election Cases; 250 of the same to be bound in cloth and 250 to be bound in "half Turkey morocco."

We have an estimate from the Government Printer. The number mentioned in the resolution can be printed within the limitation of the statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if that is not a document of sufficient value to justify the publication of a greater number of copies.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution provides for 500 copies, of which 250 are to be bound with brown leather backs and the others in cloth. I propose hereafter to introduce a joint resolution or bill to go to the Committee on Printing for a larger number.

Mr. COCKRELL. All right.

The resolution was agreed to.

CUSTOMS FRAUDS AT NEW YORK.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance are hereby authorized to employ a stenographer and such clerical assistance as may be necessary to comply with the resolution of the Senate of December 21, 1885, directing said committee to make an investigation of the frauds and abuses alleged to exist in the collection of the customs revenue of the Government at the port of New York; and they are hereby authorized to make further investigation on the same subject at any other collection port in the United States. The expenses incurred in complying with the provisions of this resolution shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon the approval of the committee or of the subcommittee.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 1151) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected either in the counties of Clay and Jackson, in the State of Missouri, or in the county of Clay or Platte in said State, and the county of Wyandotte in the State of Kansas, and to make the same a post-route; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 1152) granting a pension to Sarah E. Bassett; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 1153) to prevent frauds upon the customs revenue; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 1154) to authorize the city of Newport, R. I., to use the site of Fort Greene as a public park; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 1155) for the relief of Samuel B. Flowers and A. T. Fitzhugh, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 1156) granting an increase of pension to Ann Atkinson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 1157) for the relief of the legal representatives of James A. Torbert, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CONGER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1158) relating to contracts of common carriers and to certain obligations, duties, and rights in connection with the carriage of property; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MAHONE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 1159) for the relief of William Rutherford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PIKE introduced a bill (S. 1160) authorizing the retirement of Lieut. Adolphus W. Greely with the rank and pay of colonel; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 32) providing for the indexing and sale of public documents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Ann Atkinson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That the papers now on the files of the Senate relative to the restoration of cadets to the naval service be taken therefrom and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion of Mr. VANCE, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of J. S. Clark & Co. be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. WALTHALL, it was Ordered, That all papers now on file with the Secretary of the Senate pertaining to the bill (S. 419) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to Louisiana State University and Agricultural College at said place be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of Capt. Samuel B. Horne be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, no adverse report having been made thereon.

RIVER IMPROVEMENTS IN OREGON, ETC.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit to the Senate a full and complete copy of the annual report of Maj. W. A. Jones, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, on river improvements in Oregon and Washington Territory for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, in form as originally submitted by him to the Chief of Engineers, under date of July 27, 1885, together with full copies of all statistics originally included in or attached to such report.

LAND GRANTS IN OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Whereas it is alleged by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon in Senate joint memorial No. 6, recently adopted by that body and now before the Senate, that the companies succeeding to the land grants made by act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Eugene City, in the State of Oregon, to the eastern boundary of the State, and by an act of Congress approved July 5, 1866, granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon-road from Dalles city, Oreg., by way of Camp Watson, Canyon City, and Mormon or Humboldt Basin, to a point on Snake River opposite Fort Boisé, have in no manner complied with the conditions of said grants, but, on the contrary, have failed, neglected, and refused to build or repair any roads along the routes over which they should have constructed them in accordance with the intent and meaning of the acts of Congress aforesaid and of the acts of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon in reference thereto; and

Whereas it is further alleged in such legislative memorial now presented to Congress that by means of false and fraudulent representation and evidence of such compliance said corporations have already obtained and are obtaining patents and lists for large portions of said land, and by means of similar false and fraudulent evidence are about to obtain patents and lists for other large amounts of said lands, and under a claim of privilege and right of selection of lieu lands within six miles limit on either side of the routes of said pretended roads are withholding other large amounts of land in fraud of the Government and to the great detriment and injury of the State of Oregon and its inhabitants: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the truth of each and all of said allegations, and if found to be true, to report to the Senate, by bill or otherwise, what, if any, action can or should rightfully or properly be taken by Congress in the premises.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it had better be printed, it is so long, and go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the order to print will be entered, and the resolution will lie over under the rule.

SILETZ INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, at its late session, by joint memorial to Congress, respectfully represented that the northern portion of the Siletz Indian reservation, in the State of Oregon, from a line commencing at the point on the coast of the Pacific Ocean where the northern extremity of the Siletz Bay enters said ocean, and running eastward to the eastern boundary of said reservation, embraces an area of country equal to four or five townships; that said northern portion of the said reservation is separated from the remaining portion of the reservation by natural barriers, which render intercourse therewith very difficult; and further, that the said four or five townships are permanently occupied by only fourteen Indians, old and young; that their improvements are very meager, and a small sum would fully compensate them for such improvements; that there are abundant lands on the remaining portion of said reservation for the occupancy of all the Indians thereon; and that if the lands north of such line were thrown open for settlement many white settlers could be accommodated with homes and grazing lands, and no injustice done the Indians, and memorialized Congress to take such action as will effectually accomplish such purpose: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the propriety of such legislation, and to report at an early day by bill or otherwise.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Chair will submit the resolutions which came over under objection from yesterday. The first resolution will be read.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. HARRISON was read, as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. G. C. Moody, of Dakota, be admitted to the floor of the Senate during the present session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I was unavoidably absent from the Senate yesterday morning when this resolution was called up. I am fully aware of the fact that it will be adopted. It is a part of the programme agreed upon by the majority of the Committee on Territories, and it will be ratified by the Senate.

A great deal has been said in regard to the courtesy involved in this proposition. I concede to no man living for myself any greater personal courtesy to a political or personal opponent than I am willing to grant upon all proper occasions; but there ought to be a reciprocity of courtesy in all cases. The gentleman whose name is mentioned in the resolution and his colleague and the people whom they propose to represent have not exhibited that courtesy to the Senate of the United States or the Congress of the United States which entitles them to any such action as is now proposed. I say this deliberately. The records of the Senate show that during the last Congress a bill was reported from the Committee on Territories, by its chairman, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], which enabled the people of Southern Dakota to form a constitution for the purpose of being admitted into the Union. That was the deliberate expression on the part of the Senate of the proper course to be pursued in regard to this matter. The bill was passed, sent to the House of Representatives, and not acted upon by that body. Proper respect for the Senate of the United States ought to have convinced these gentlemen in Dakota that they should at least show deference to this public expression of opinion, coming as it did from their own friends upon this floor, conspicuously from the Senator from Indiana.

But they were not willing to await any action on the part of Congress; they trampled under their feet this expression of opinion on our part, and they said to the world and to the Senate, "We propose to act in this matter against your deliberate parliamentary action and take this matter into our own hands and judge of it for ourselves." They proceeded then, in what I have declared and what I now believe to be anillegal and revolutionary manner, to divide this Territory of Dakota, to form a State constitution, to elect officers; and they send two gentlemen here now purporting to be Senators from a State de facto and de jure. I deny that this is proper courtesy upon the part of any portion of the people of the United States to this Senate or to the Congress.

Further than that, sir, I deny absolutely, and I wish now to hear some Senator upon either side of this Chamber state that he believes, that this so-called State of Dakota is a State either de jure or de facto. I pause for a reply to that proposition. I do not think that any Senator can be found who will state that any portion of the people of the United States have the right to establish a State without the consent of Congress, or that they can exist as a State without the action of Congress. I know it is said that they come here and offer to us a constitution, and that this is simply a proposition for their admission into the Union. Mr. President, we have the right to judge of this matter, as of all other matters, by contemporaneous facts and evidence. I can produce here the discussions of that convention, in which a very prominent member—a gentleman already alluded to in a former debate, Judge Campbell—declared that these people had the right to make a State without consulting Congress; that they were, so far as the constitution of the State was concerned, above and beyond the jurisdiction of Congress; and after a debate between that gentleman and Judge Edgerton, a former colleague of ours, and now one of the so-called Senators from Dakota, who assumed the other side of that proposition, Judge Edgerton was voted down by an overwhelming majority. In that debate it was asserted over and over again by members of the convention that that body was equal to Congress and had a right to form a constitution without our consent and without any consultation with us. That proposition can meet with no assent, I take it, from any Senator on this floor; and I understood from the debate yesterday, as I saw it in the RECORD, that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] both denied that proposition, or at least failed to assert it or give it any sort of countenance here.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana saw proper yesterday to allude to what Mr. Benton, my distinguished predecessor in this Chamber, said in regard to the admission of Michigan, and he indirectly, if not directly, sought to establish a sort of analogy between the admission of Missouri into the Union and this proposed admission of Dakota. In 1818 Missouri applied for admission into the Federal Union. In 1819 the Congress of the United States passed an enabling act. That act was passed as the result of what is known as the first Missouri compromise, which prohibited the existence of slavery north of the degree of 36° 30′. This enabling act, giving to the people of Missouri the right to form a State constitution, was acted upon by that people. They formed a constitution by a convention, of which David Barton, the first Senator from Missouri, was chairman. That constitution was brought to Congress, presented to the Senate and to the House of Representatives, and in it was found a provision that no free negro should be permitted to come into the State, and calling upon the Legislature to pass laws for the purpose of enforcing that enactment.

Upon that single provision sprang up the celebrated debate, the debate on what is known as the second Missouri compromise, which finally resulted in the resolution of Mr. Clay, forming a committee of thirty, upon whose report it was resolved that Missouri should be admitted into the Union under this constitution, provided the clause to which I have alluded should be stricken out. A popular and erroneous impression has existed that Mr. Clay was the author of the line of 36° 30′ north latitude. The author of that proposition was a member of the House of Representatives from the State of New York, and Mr. Clay was simply the author of the second Missouri compromise, under which the State was finally admitted into the Union.

The position of Missouri from the time that the enabling act was passed and the State constitution adopted by the will and through the authority of Congress was an anomalous one. It was a State by the consent of the highest legislative authority; it sent here David Barton as its first Senator. He was invited to a seat upon the floor which he did not take, for he refused, as did Mr. Benton, who was elected a year afterward. Both declined to take seats upon the ground that they were regularly elected Senators from that State. It is true Missouri, while she was in this anomalous position, a State under the enabling act and yet not a State admitted into the Union, undertook to cast her electoral vote in the Presidential election which immediately ensued, but that vote was not counted except upon the condition that it did not affect the result of the Presidential contest.

Is there any analogy between a case of that sort where a constitution was formed under an enabling act of Congress and the case now before the Senate in which the Senate deliberately declared that these people of Dakota should be enabled to enact a State constitution and where they disregarded the action of the Senate and undertook of their own will to fix the boundaries of the State, adopt a constitution, and send Senators here for admission?

Mr. President, I know that this resolution will be adopted. I desire to state that I do not propose to be guilty of any personal discourtesy to the gentleman who is named in it; but for historical accuracy I have made the statement which I have submitted here. The Senator from Indiana quoted yesterday some expressions of Mr. Benton. Mr. Benton discharged his duty, and it was a very distinguished one as Senator from the State of Missouri, but his declarations upon this floor and his official action are not binding upon me or upon my judgment. Illustrious as was his career, I did not agree with him always when he was alive, and I do not agree with him now. I had great admiration for many of his characteristics. The State of Missouri takes great pride in his illustrious public service. But I do not hold myself committed to declarations which he made at a time of great party excitement and when he had committed to him, as the Senator from Indiana has now committed to him, a party measure, the admission of Michigan to the Union, which came in as a Democratic State, Mr. Buchanan having committed to him by the Democratic party at that time charge of the bill for the admission of Arkansas.

But Mr. Benton even made declarations in regard to this matter which I commend to the people of Dakota at this time. What said Mr. Benton—I quote from the Congressional Globe of December 22, 1835—when the identical question which is now pending before the Senate was pending in regard to giving seats upon the floor to two gentlemen claiming to be Senators from the State of Michigan, and when, as in this case, one of them had been a member of the House and was thus entitled to the privileges of the floor, and the resolution therefore applied to only one of these gentlemen as does the resolution now pending? What said Mr. Benton?

He left it to gentlemen whether it would not be better, under all circumstances, to follow up the old precedent set in the case of the Tennessee Senators, and allow these gentlemen to come into the Senate Chamber, and listen to the debates interesting to the diagram of country (he would not speak of Michigan as a State), the diagram of country they came to represent. It was a matter of substance to them to have this privilege; they might hear something in debate interesting to the country they came from, that they would be able to answer, and they might thus be enabled to furnish some Senator with the answer to make for them. He thought it would be better to furnish the gentlemen with chairs, as was done in the case of the Senators from Tennessee.

In reply to this, said Mr. Hendricks of Indiana:

The Senator from Missouri had spoken of precedents, and had instanced those of Tennessee and Missouri. But the Tennessee case conferred no greater privilege than that already enjoyed by Hon. Lucius Lyon, one of the gentlemen in question, in virtue of his having been a Delegate in the House of Representatives, and no greater privilege than that proposed by his amendment to be conferred on the other, Hon. Mr. Norvell. The precedent of Missouri! And is there any similarity between the case of Missouri and that of Michigan?

The Senator from Indiana has quoted my distinguished predecessor; now I quote his:

Surely none. Missouri was a State known as such to our laws. She had formed her constitution in pursuance of a law of Congress. She was a State de jure, as well as in form and in fact. She presented a constitution unexceptionable. There was no question of boundary—no question about her right of admission as a State. The only question was one involving the power of Congress to attach a condition after her right to admission had become perfect. Here, in the case of Michigan—the question of State or no State has yet to be settled, as well as the question of boundary, involving as it does the integrity of one or more of the States. In relation to other States, where there were no difficult preliminary questions to settle, he believed that no special comity had been shown to the Senators who presented themselves. He referred to the admission of Ohio, Louisiana, Indiana, and other new States, where the Journals showed no resolutions of courtesy to the Senators in attendance before they were sworn as members of the body. He well recollected that the Senators from Indiana did not obtain seats until the joint resolution of admittance had passed both Houses and obtained the appropriate signatures. The precedents which the practice of the Senate in these cases afforded were against the application in the present case.

And here in the case of Dakota—

I read this to show that there is not the line of uninterrupted and unbroken precedent which was spoken of yesterday. I grant that in the case of Colorado a different practice obtained. I understand now that there is no claim that this action of the Senate admits for a single instant that these are Senators from a State either de facto or de jure, and I have said what I have to supplement and add to that expression my unfaltering and unhesitating adherence to the doctrine that no portion of the people of the United States without the action of Congress can segregate a part of the public domain and assume to represent the sovereignty of a State. Suppose this doctrine should not obtain, and gentlemen from Utah should apply here for seats on this floor as a matter of courtesy to a State constitution republican in form! If that should occur, it would be a little interesting to see the application of this principle, and I should be very much astonished if precedents did not give way to opinion in regard to the institutions of that State known to exist; and I should be utterly astounded if any such persons were permitted to remain in this Chamber by consent of the Senate, even with the poor privilege of sitting in the galleries.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the resolution now under consideration be read at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. G. C. Moody, of Dakota, be admitted to the floor of the Senate during the present session.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] seems to find it difficult to discuss any proposition that relates, even by indirection, to Dakota or her people without indulging in references that are, in my judgment, unjustifiable. What right had the Senator from Missouri to say that the introduction of this resolution was part of a programme determined upon in committee? The resolution was offered by me upon my own responsibility, without any consultation in committee or anywhere else with the members of the committee.

The other day when this matter was under discussion in a preliminary way the Senator from Missouri took occasion to refer contemptuously and to use opprobrious references toward two gentlemen who have been connected with this movement for Statehood in Dakota, one of them the distinguished gentleman whose name is mentioned in the resolution now before the Senate. The Senator is not only unfortunate in dragging in these personal allusions, but unfortunate in his facts.

He alluded to Mr. Moody as one who had, upon the bench, made a decision against the validity of the Yankton County bonds. It is not true. The Senator was misinformed. Judge Moody, though upon the bench in Dakota, never, at any time, passed upon the question of those bonds. He was not upon the bench at the time that question was tried; he was a practicing attorney and represented the county of Yankton in the litigation as an attorney; and yet, Mr. President, the Senator was willing to put into the RECORD, upon insufficient information, this unjust reference to a gentleman who I undertake to say is, in all respects, the peer of any one who sits on this floor for character and integrity. He was a distinguished soldier from my own State, serving in the Seventh Indiana Regiment, and for more than a year upon the staff of that captain who won so largely the affections of the American people, General George H. Thomas.

The Senator indulged in references to another gentleman whose name was only before us as a signer to the communication transmitting these documents, Hon. Hugh J. Campbell, of Dakota, and spoke of him as having some unsavory relations to the electoral-count business in Louisiana. Mr. President, I do not need to speak for Judge Campbell. He has spoken to a wider audience than this for himself.

Now the Senator says there is something discourteous in the method by which these men as the representatives of Dakota and by which the people of Dakota themselves have come before the Senate. I deny it. I do not desire here, upon this resolution, to open for discussion the line of precedents upon this subject, but I do now say that time and again, in the cases of States of this Union where enabling acts have been proposed and have passed one House of Congress and have not passed the other, the people themselves have initiated just such a movement as the people of Dakota have here, and these proceedings have been overwhelmingly ratified by the votes of both branches of Congress. When such movements for Statehood paused when the organization was complete, and by a constitutional provision staid all exercise of governmental functions by the State government until Congress admitted the State, it was never before said that such an attitude was disrespectful to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, these people of Dakota come here as the people of nearly one-half of the States admitted since the original Union was formed have come. Having initiated a movement for a State government, formed a constitution, they quietly stay their hands while they ask of Congress admission as a State.

The Senator from Missouri says that Missouri was a de facto State when Mr. Benton was admitted, as he has told us, to a seat in this Chamber, and not only to a seat, but to the exercise of the franking privilege as a Senator, and to the privilege of a Senator in the use of the public stationery of the Senate. Do I understand the Senator from Missouri to claim that at that period of time the State of Missouri was a State in the Union? Congress had passed an enabling act, and under it the people had formed a constitution; but that constitution was yet to be submitted to Congress for its judgment whether it met the requirements of the enabling act, whether it contained the compact which was required in the law; and until Congress had passed the act accepting that constitution Missouri was no more a State of the Union than Dakota is to-day, neither one of them having received the sanction of Congress. Congress had in the case of Missouri authorized these initial proceedings. Missouri had sent her constitution here, objection was made to it, and Congress had refused to accept it. Does the Senator from Missouri claim that Missouri was then either de facto or de jure a State in the Union? If he should make such a claim he would abandon that proposition which has been the foundation of all his discussion of this question. But, sir, the Senator does not feel bound by this precedent in the case of his own State. He admires Mr. Benton; but yet, admiring, differs with him, differed with him in life, and now that he has gone to his rest and his fame only survives, still ventures to differ with him. Mr. Benton declared that he, as a Senator from Missouri, had been allowed in the Senate these privileges as a Senator, and I affirm that his State was then no more a State than Dakota. It was waiting the passage of a law by Congress to recognize the constitution which it had formed.

Mr. President, this is not the only precedent. In the case of Michigan, as the Senator from Missouri knows, Mr. Benton actually laid before the Senate the credentials of the gentlemen from Michigan nominated in those credentials to be "Senators from the State of Michigan," and those credentials were respectfully received by the Senate and appropriately referred. Pending his motion that those gentlemen be admitted he made the remarks to which I referred yesterday, stating in the strongest terms that it had nothing to do with the question of the final admission of the State of Michigan, any more than it had in the case of Missouri; that it was a simple act of courtesy extended to gentlemen who came here with what purported to be a high official communication from the people of a part of this country. The resolution I have proposed simply admits to the floor of the Senate a gentleman who has been chosen by the proposed State of Dakota to represent Dakota upon this floor when Congress shall have ratified her constitution and given her a place among the States.

Mr. President, the 263,000 American citizens who have united in this movement in Dakota are entitled to the respect of the Senators here who represent the States. There is nothing in their institutions, there is nothing in their history, that should justify any Senator in coupling Dakota with Utah. There is not an institution that has life in Dakota, there is no practice among her people, that is not consonant with the best impulses and the best civilization.

I do not care to follow the Senator from Missouri through these cases. I have with some care discussed them in the report which I have submitted in connection with the bill for the admission of the State. I am willing to leave the case to the unbiased and non-partisan judgment of Senators when that bill is up for discussion, and if I am not then able to convince any one who has not shut his ears to argument that the proceedings taken by Dakota are conformable to precedent and have had the sanction of the ablest men of both parties in this country and the sanction of Congress by overwhelming majorities, then I shall surrender this debate.

Why, Mr. President, it is not new that the people of part of a Territory should organize by a popular movement for admission into the Union as a State. In the case of California there never was even a Territorial government. California was a part of the great domain we had acquired from Mexico. Congress had never marked out its bounds as a Territory even; it had never given it any sort of a civil government; it was governed by a military governor. Congress had been appealed to to give it a Territorial government and failed. Congress had been asked to admit it as a State and failed. The movement for the formation of a constitution in California began by a proclamation from the military governor, General Riley, which was attested by the late General Halleck, then a captain in the Army, as secretary of state. The whole movement was popular, and in the face of the fact that Congress had refused even a Territorial organization. The constitution was brought here by the Senators-elect and submitted to Congress, and the State was admitted. Congress had given no intimation as to what were appropriate boundaries for California.

Iowa initiated proceedings for admission as a State and formed her constitution without any enabling act. She proposed certain boundaries, and in her original constitution the northern boundary of Iowa went up to a point near Saint Paul and followed the Mississippi River down to its present southern boundary. Congress declined to accept that constitution and proposed to the people of Iowa another boundary. That was submitted to vote, and the people rejected it, and then again by a popular movement, initiated by an act of the Territorial Legislature of Iowa, a new constitution prescribing new bounds to themselves was prepared and submitted to Congress and accepted.

I undertake to say that so far from lacking precedent, so far from involving any taint of rebellion or disrespect to Congress, the precedents in our legislation go entirely beyond the necessities of Dakota. The precedents in the case of Michigan, in the case of Tennessee, in the case of California, all go entirely beyond the necessities of Dakota.

In the case of Tennessee President Washington, in transmitting that constitution, makes an argument to show that Tennessee had a right to organize a constitution and State government without any enabling act on the part of Congress, and he puts it upon the ground that the ordinance of 1787 expressly stipulated that when there were 60,000 free inhabitants they should be entitled to form a State government. The ordinance of 1787 had by statute been extended to the Southwestern Territory, called Tennessee. As I show in my report, this ordinance has also been extended to Dakota; but the committee did not deem it necessary to rest its argument there and was entirely willing that the other rule should be applied to Dakota, namely, that she should be shown to have a population equal to the unit of representation in the House of Representatives, which I undertake to say is the highest limit of population that has ever been demanded even in those times of hot party strife growing out of slavery over the admission of States; that is the highest number of people that has ever been insisted upon in debate in either branch of Congress as essential to the admission of a State.

But, Mr. President, I did not intend to allow this debate to be precipitated upon us at this time. The resolution which I propose does not mention Dakota, except as it is alluded to as the place of residence of the gentleman to whom we propose to extend the courtesies of this floor. Of course it is not concealed that the reason this is done is because a matter is to be debated here in which that gentleman has a personal interest, the question of his admission to this floor with the full rights of a Senator, and because there is to be debated here a question in which his people are interested, and, as Mr. Benton says in the remarks which the Senator from Missouri read, it seems to be but common and scant courtesy to allow one thus interested to be upon the floor of the forum in which the debate is to be conducted, even though his mouth is closed so that he can not participate in it. I hope that on Friday of this week this whole subject will be before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. President, I call upon Senators on the other side to bear witness that I have avoided from the beginning, ever since this matter has been in my charge, anything that would be calculated to array parties upon the question. The Senator from Missouri has said he excuses the remarks of his distinguished predecessor in the Senate, to which I called attention yesterday, on the ground that Mr. Benton was in charge of the pending bill and it was a party question. Mr. Benton was anxious to get in a Democratic State, I suppose the argument is, and therefore was willing to extend to the representatives of a Democratic State the courtesy which he might not have been willing to extend if the politics of the State had been different.

Mr. President, I hope not. I believe in the case of Mr. Benton and I believe in the case of my associates here on the other side of this Chamber that we can look upon this question, as he did, entirely disconnected from the question of the admission of Dakota. We can admit this gentleman to come upon the floor of the Senate and listen to our debates for and against this measure without in any way committing any of us in our votes upon the proposition when it shall finally be voted upon, and in this way, instead of treating with contempt these people lately citizens of our States, lately in their own States in the full exercise of all the rights of American citizenship, we can through their representative extend to them our courtesy and give them this evidence that we propose to discuss their claim for admission and the steps they have taken toward that end in a calm, dispassionate, and fair manner, and settle the grave questions which are involved upon principles other than those of mere party advantage.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire before there is any further discussion to offer the following amendment to be added to the resolution of the Senator from Indiana:

But the courtesy hereby extended shall not be construed as indicating a recognition of any right of Dakota to admission as a State into the Union.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it was not my purpose to precipitate a debate—certainly not my purpose to get into any personal controversy. I never alluded to any citizen of Dakota whose name was not brought in here on his own motion. Mr. Campbell came up as the regularly constituted chairman of a committee appointed by the constitutional convention. I had a right to criticise the communication which he made to the Senate. I had a right to allude to his public career, as he has a right to allude to mine. I have never alluded to Judge Moody except in a respectful way, and in regard to his connection with public transactions in the Territory of Dakota. I thought that he had been the judge who delivered that opinion, and that is my impression yet. I recollect distinctly when the question was before the Senate some three years ago, and when the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] stopped the bill for the admission of Dakota on the ground that they had denied their honest indebtedness, so adjudged by the Supreme Court of the United States, I was under the impression then, and it still remains, that Judge Moody gave the decision in the Territorial court. Whether he did or not is an immaterial question.

If I chose to put a personal aspect upon this case, I could show columns of vituperation, blackguardism, and abuse of myself from almost every one of the petty papers in Dakota that would shame a fish-woman in Billingsgate, but they amount to nothing. Let them go. This is a public question, and should be determined without any sort of insincerity upon the grounds that should influence the Congress of the United States in regard to the admission of new States.

I deliberately assert that there is no such case on record in the United States as the people of Dakota have made for themselves. California never in the face of the action of the Senate of the United States undertook to divide up a Territory, hold an election in one-half of it, and then come here in the face of the deliberate action of Congress and claim admission as a State. It is true that California organized under a military governor and offered herself as a State to the Union, but never after the Senate had pointed out the way in which she should come to these halls asking for the sovereignty of a State. Tennessee did not do it. Michigan even did not do it, because Michigan organized as a Territory. It was first a Territory, and then, under the leadership of the Territorial governor, Mr. Mason, organized itself as a State and claimed to exist without the consent of Congress; but not one of the illustrious statesmen who then discussed that question admitted for a single instant that it had any claim as a matter of right to exist as a State. I never claimed that Missouri was a State before she was admitted into the Union. I spoke of the anomalous condition of the people of Missouri. They had organized under an enabling act of Congress. Whether it was an inchoate and imperfect State or in a Territorial condition seems never to have been determined. It was called the State of Missouri; her Senators came here as from the State of Missouri, and for two years and a half they waited admission on account of the interminable and exciting debate upon the subject of slavery.

I know, Mr. President, this resolution will be adopted. I have not the slightest objection to the Senate filling up these halls with gentlemen as spectators from any of the Territories if the majority of the Senate think it proper. I simply wished to give my opinion of the historical precedents and my opinion of the propriety of such a measure.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, when the resolution of inquiry in regard to the proceedings of the convention which framed the constitution for Southern Dakota was before the Senate, I desired to briefly submit as a matter of historical interest what had been done by the Territory of Oregon under similar circumstances. But at the suggestion of the chairman that the resolution should go to the committee, I deferred what I had to say to a more appropriate time. I crave the indulgence of the Senate for a few minutes simply to give the facts in regard to the admission of Oregon.

The constitution of Oregon was framed by a convention of sixty delegates chosen on the first Monday of June, 1857, by virtue of an act of the Territorial Assembly of December 12, 1856. The constitution was adopted by the convention September 18, 1857, and ratified by a vote of the people of the Territory November 9, 1857. Section 6 of article 18 of the schedule provided: "If the constitution is ratified an election shall be held on the first Monday in June, 1858, for the election of members of the Legislative Assembly, Representative in Congress, and State and county officers," and that the Legislature should convene at the capital on the first Monday of July, 1858, "and proceed to elect two Senators in Congress, and to make such further provision as may be necessary to the complete organization of a State government."

The Legislature was elected, and met on the 5th of July, 1858. On the 7th of July, 1858, Joseph Lane and Delazon Smith were elected United States Senators. On July 8, 1858, the votes for governor were canvassed, and John Whiteaker was declared duly elected governor. Whiteaker took the oath of office and delivered an inaugural address. State officers were elected in June, 1858, as follows: John Whiteaker, governor; Lucian Heath, secretary of state; John D. Boon, State treasurer; La Fayette Grover, member of Congress, whose term expired March 4, 1859. The State was admitted into the Union February 14, 1859. Messrs. Smith and Lane were present with their credentials, and one on the motion of Mr. Pugh, of Ohio, and the other on the motion of Senator Gwin, of California, were admitted to their seats and sworn in the same day that the act was approved admitting Oregon into the Union.

As a matter of historical interest I will ask the Secretary to read a brief quotation from the speech of Mr. Clark, of Missouri, which fully states the grounds upon which Oregon claimed admission into the Union and justified the course which was taken in regard to the organization of the State government.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, * * * No gentleman should attempt to interpose obstacles to the admission of a State which has a population sufficient in numbers, and which, having been clothed with authority, has formed a republican constitution, and established its institutions in its own way. In my judgment such opposition is a high breach of power, unauthorized by the Constitution of our common country.

I now approach the objections urged against the admission of Oregon. One of the objections made in debate here, and which we had to meet in committee, is, that Oregon has not sufficient population. I take the ground that Oregon is entitled to admission into the Union with her present population, if it be sufficient, in the opinion of the House, to enable her to organize a practical community for State purposes.

I claim that Oregon has a right to come in under the ordinance of 1787, and that it is the duty of Congress to admit her on the same principle and according to the same rule established in that ordinance for the Northwest Territory. Sir, if gentlemen will read the organic act of Oregon they will find that it is provided in that act that she shall be entitled to all the privileges and subject to all the limitations contained in the ordinance of 1787. That ordinance provided that when there should be 60,000 inhabitants in those Territories, they should have a right to be admitted as States. If, then, you take the ordinance of 1787, and the organic act of Oregon, you can not escape the conclusion that you must admit Oregon when she has a population of 60,000. That portion of the ordnance of 1787 to which I refer, providing for the admission of these States, is as follows:

"ART. 5. There shall be formed in the said Territory not less than three, nor more than five, States; and the boundaries of the States, as soon as Virginia shall alter her act of cession, and consent to the same, shall become fixed and established as follows, to wit: The western State in the said Territory shall be bounded by the Mississippi, the Ohio, and Wabash Rivers; a direct line drawn from the Wabash and Post Vincents, due north, to the Territorial line between the United States and Canada; and by the said Territorial line to the Lake of the Woods and Mississippi. The middle State shall be bounded by the said direct line, the Wabash, from Post Vincents to the Ohio, by the Ohio, by a direct line drawn due north from the mouth of the Great Miami to the said Territorial line and by the said Territorial line. The eastern State shall be bounded by the last-mentioned direct line, the Ohio, Pennsylvania, and the said Territorial line: Provided, however, And it is further understood and declared that the boundaries of these three States shall be subject so far to be altered, that, if Congress shall hereafter find it expedient, they shall have authority to form one or two States in that part of the said Territory which lies north of an east and west line drawn through the southerly bend or extreme of Lake Michigan. And whenever any of the said States shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein, such State shall be admitted, by its Delegates, into the Congress of the United States, on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, and shall be at liberty to form a permanent constitution and State government: Provided, The constitution and government so to be formed shall be republican, and in conformity to the principles contained in these articles; and so far as it can be consistent with the general interest of the confederacy, such admission shall be allowed at an earlier period, and when there may be a less number of free inhabitants in the State than 60,000."

Mr. HOWARD. I would ask the gentleman if he considers Oregon a part of the old Northwest Territory?

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. No, sir; but by the organic act of Oregon the provisions of the ordinance of 1787 were extended to that Territory. Now that ordinance provided that the Territories within the original Northwestern Territory should be admitted as States when they had 60,000 inhabitants, and the organic art of Oregon having extended to her all the privileges and limitations of that ordinance gives her the right of admission according to the terms of that ordinance, which will appear by the following portion of said act:

"And be it further enacted, That the inhabitants of said Territory shall be entitled to enjoy all and singular the rights, privileges, and advantages granted and secured to the people of the Territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio by the articles of compact contained in the ordinance for the government of said Territory on the 13th day of July, 1787; and shall be subject to all the conditions and restrictions and prohibitions in said articles of compact imposed upon the people of said Territory."—Congressional Globe, part 1, second session Thirty-fifth Congress, 1858-'59, page 968.

Mr. DOLPH. Inasmuch as there has been some criticism on the address adopted by the constitutional convention of Dakota, I ask the Secretary to read an extract which I have marked from the inaugural address of Governor Whiteaker, which, it will be remembered, was delivered on the 8th day of July, 1858, and Oregon was not admitted into the Union until February 14, 1859. Mr. Whiteaker will be remembered as the gentleman who was elected to the Forty-sixth Congress and made the then quickest trip on record across the continent to be here at the organization of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the paper referred to will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

You are assembled here to-day under the provisions of the fundamental law of the State. The people by their own act called a convention; that convention framed a constitution, the people ratified it, and to-day we put on the habiliments of the full-grown man and emerge from Territorial vassalage into State sovereignty. It is worthy of note that while the people of Oregon were preparing for a State organization the Government of the United States was menaced and greatly imperiled by the acts of a sister Territory while framing for itself a constitution preparatory to entering the Union. It is a matter of gratification that no such lawless conduct and violation of rights characterized the people of our young and fair State while preparing to become one of the members of this great confederacy, and it is attributable to the fact that Oregon was peopled by a high order of citizens—a people possessing a due sense of their moral and political duties to themselves, and a spirit of forbearance one toward another.

The transition from a Territorial existence to that of State sovereignty is always attended with more or less disorder and delay; but when we consider the changes that Oregon has passed through, the people, when but a handful, organized and successfully maintained a provisional government, which government was superseded by an organic act, and General Lane sent here as our first governor, the people readily accommodated themselves to the government and to his authority; and now they declare that they are ready for another change, and assume State sovereignty.

Oregon goes into the Union under the most favorable auspices—a Democratic administration at Washington standing by the Constitution of the Union, a full and hearty indorsement of that administration by the government and people of this State, a Representative-elect in Congress fully committed to the policy of that administration, and Senators known to be ardent in their support of the same. We feel warranted in saying that the interests of our State will be ably and successfully represented in the Congress of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. BUTLER. I am not going to detain the Senate with any remarks. I simply desire to say that regarding this resolution simply as a matter of courtesy to a distinguished gentleman from the Territory of Dakota, I shall vote for it. I hope the Senator from Indiana will accept the amendment moved by the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not feel like assenting to the amendment. There is no reference in the resolution, as the Senator from South Carolina will notice, as I offered it, to any connection of this gentleman with Dakota or a State movement in Dakota. He is simply mentioned by name.

Mr. BUTLER. That may all be perfectly true, and yet——

Mr. HARRISON. I think it is entirely a work of supererogation to declare that, when we do not allude to Dakota as a State in the resolution or to the movement, we should declare that we do not mean something that the resolution can not by any possibility mean.

Mr. BUTLER. If the resolution does not mean that, it does not mean anything. While it does not refer in terms to the State movement there, it is thoroughly well understood that this gentleman is here claiming to represent Dakota—I will not call it State or Territory—on the floor of the Senate. I understand it to be simply a matter of courtesy to him, which I am quite willing to extend. I have no doubt he is a thoroughly worthy gentleman, of talent and position in Dakota. On that account I am quite willing that he should come upon the floor of the Senate. I do not mean thereby to commit myself in the slightest degree to the bill which the Senator from Indiana has in charge, which I shall discuss at the proper time, and I think I shall be able to show that some of the positions taken by the Senator are untenable.

Mr. HARRISON. In bringing in this resolution I thought I had abated something of that which these gentlemen had a right to insist upon. When I drew the resolution I did not follow the precedents. I did not, as Mr. Benton did in the case of Missouri, describe these gentlemen as Senators-elect from the State of Dakota. I did not present any credentials that would in any event involve a recognition of their right to be Senators at all. I purposely avoided all that, and I have framed this resolution just as I might in behalf of any other distinguished gentlemen who made no such claim at all as Dakota is claiming here, or not connected with any such movement, to whom we would extend the courtesies of this floor.

I am sure if the Senator from South Carolina will reflect a moment he will see that my resolution has been carefully worded so that by no possible implication could any one say that we had committed ourselves at all even though they were given seats on the floor by name. I have avoided all that, simply mentioning one name, and I trust the Senator, whose kindly remarks I appreciate, will let it go as it is.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not the slightest objection to the resolution as it is; but I thought out of caution it might be very well to guard it by the amendment which the Senator from Delaware offered. I have not the slightest objection to the resolution as it stands. We have a right to invite whom we please on the floor of the Senate, and therefore I have no objection to this courtesy being extended to this gentleman. It was only out of caution, so that there might be no misunderstanding in the future about it, that the amendment of the Senator from Delaware met the approbation of my judgment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. There is no question that the extension of the courtesy proposed by the Senator from Indiana to Mr. Moody from Dakota is proposed because of the fact that he comes here claiming to represent that people. Whatever may be intended by the Senator from Indiana by his resolution, the construction put upon the resolution by the people of Dakota and the people of the country would be that there was an impression in the Senate that that Territory was entitled to admission as a State. My amendment was simply to exclude such an idea, that we might deal with that question unprejudiced by any impression which might be made from the fact that we had extended the courtesy of a seat in this Chamber to a gentleman coming here who claims to be Senator from Dakota. It certainly can do no harm to exclude such an idea that might attach to the resolution on the part of the people of Dakota. I am perfectly willing that this gentleman shall come into the Senate Chamber and have a seat on this floor; but in awarding him that seat, I do not want the impression to go out that we have prejudged the question that is hereafter to be discussed, or that we have expressed indirectly any opinion upon it. That was the reason I offered the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. The State of Colorado had an enabling act in 1864, but the people by a very decided majority voted not to come into the Union then. In 1865 the people of that State by a popular movement, without the authority of Congress or without the authority of the Territorial government, organized a State constitution, elected a governor and all the State officials. Their Legislature convened and elected two gentlemen and sent them here to represent the State in the United States Senate. On the 8th of February, 1866, the Senate appears, without objection, without comment, to have adopted a resolution as follows:

Ordered, That the Senators-elect from the State of Colorado be admitted to the privileges of the floor.

Thereupon the Senators-elect had the privilege of the floor for about two years. The State was not admitted under that constitution; it was admitted under another constitution adopted in accordance with the provisions of an enabling act passed some four years later.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON], who is necessarily absent to-day. I do not know which way he would vote on this particular question, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. PALMER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] on this question. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] on this question.

Mr. INGALLS. I am paired with the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] on this question. If he were here, I should vote "nay" on the amendment.

Mr. HAWLEY (after having voted in the negative). I recall the fact that I am paired to-day with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Beck,	Cockrell,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Coke,	McPherson,	Vest,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Brown,	George,	Morgan,	Walthall.
Butler,	Harris,	Payne,
Call,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,

NAYS—29.

Allison,	Frye,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sherman,
Bowen,	Harrison,	Pike,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Hoar,	Platt,	Stanford,
Conger,	Logan,	Plumb,	Teller,
Cullom,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dawes,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Dolph,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Evarts,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,

ABSENT—25.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Blair,	Gorman,	Jones of Florida,	Vance.
Camden,	Gray,	Jones of Nevada,	Van Wyck.
Chace,	Hale,	Miller of Cal.,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Oregon,
Edmunds,	Hawley,	Morrill,
Fair,	Ingalls,	Palmer,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CALLED BONDS HELD BY NATIONAL BANKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS].

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate what proportion of the $10,000,000 United States bonds called for payment February 1, 1886, are held by national banks as a basis for circulation; and if any are so held, by what banks, and the amount held by each.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to amend and modify the resolution by omitting the last clause, after the semicolon, in the words "and if any are so held, by what banks, and the amount held by each?" I do this at the suggestion of some gentlemen who have advised me this morning that, being interested in national banks, the bonds held by their institutions as a basis for circulation have been called for payment on the 1st day of February, and the publication of that fact might interfere with them in some way or perhaps impair their credit. I therefore ask, as I believe I have a right, the yeas and nays not having been ordered, to amend by omitting the last clause of the resolution, and as amended I ask its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has a right to modify the resolution. The resolution as amended will now be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4, after the word "circulation," strike out the words:

And if any are so held, by what banks, and the amount held by each.

So as to read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate what proportion of the $10,000,000 United States bonds called for payment February 1, 1886, are held by national banks as a basis for circulation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

THE NORTHEASTERN FISHERIES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the next resolution in order.

The CHIEF CLERK. A resolution of Mr. FRYE in relation to the appointment of a commission charged with the settlement of the fishing rights of the United States and Great Britain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the reference of the pending resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so referred.

Mr. CONGER subsequently said: I stated yesterday that on the fisheries resolution which would come up in the morning hour to-day I should desire to submit some remarks to the Senate. I supposed that the resolution would come up in the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Although the Senator from Michigan was not present, it was the duty of the Chair to lay the resolution before the Senate, and it was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Does the Senator from Michigan desire to move to reconsider the reference.

Mr. CONGER. I requested the gentleman who offered the resolution to hold it a day or two until I had an opportunity to make some remarks, but if it is deemed improper that I should do so at this time I can wait until some other time.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will hear me before he strikes, the Senator from Maine was not present when the reference was made. If he had been, he would have informed the presiding officer that the Senator from Michigan proposed to make some remarks upon it.

Mr. CONGER. It might not have done any good, for the Senator from Michigan had himself personally stated yesterday that he desired to make some remarks upon that subject, that it was then too late to enter upon them, but he would do it at some future time. I suppose the Chair had forgotten that, or else it was not of importance enough.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair remembered it distinctly, but he remembered also that it was his duty at the moment to lay the resolution before the Senate, and if the Senator was absent the Chair could not himself, according to the customs of the Senate, make a motion to postpone its consideration.

Mr. CONGER. Is it proper to move to recall the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be proper to move to reconsider the action of the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Then I shall hope on some occasion, when there is a little more time than there will be this morning in the morning hour, to have an opportunity of presenting some remarks on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Maine, who offered the fisheries resolution, which I asked to have reconsidered and brought back to the Senate, has informed me that he desires to have it go before the committee so that some gentlemen who are in waiting here may be heard before the committee, and that when the resolution is reported from the committee there will be an opportunity for remarks from Senators, of which I was not aware. With that view I ask unanimous consent that the motion to reconsider be set aside and that the resolution be sent back to the committee as it was ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks the unanimous consent of the Senate for leave to withdraw the motion to reconsider. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution stands referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. PLUMB. Some days since I introduced a bill (S. 800) to authorize Dr. C. E. Price, assistant surgeon United States Army, to receive pay for discharging the duties of physician to the Hoopa Valley Indian reservation, such services having been performed at the request of the proper officers of the Interior Department, and had it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I have been requested by the gentleman who prepared the bill and at whose request I introduced it to ask to have the reference changed to the Committee on Claims. I presume that either committee will be entirely proper, but if there be no objection I will ask that the reference be changed to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas report the bill from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not report it back. I ask consent that the reference be changed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Military Affairs will be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it will be referred to the Committee on Claims if there be no objection. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PURCHASE OF SILVER BULLION.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask leave, out of order, to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the Senate what amount of silver bullion has been purchased for coinage in each month since July 1, 1885, in what market the same has been purchased in each case, and from whom, and the price paid; also whether in any instance all bids have been rejected, and, if so, for what reason; and in what money or currency the payments for such silver bullion have been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

MAILING OF LOTTERY ADVERTISEMENTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is now in order under the eighth rule. The Secretary will call the first case on the Calendar.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 260) to prohibit the mailing of newspapers and other publications containing lottery advertisements and prescribing a penalty for the violation of the same.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. JACKSON] is detained from the Senate to-day, and sent me a request to have the pending number on the Calendar passed over until to-morrow. I therefore make that request, at the same time suggesting that the bill retain its place on the Calendar and be passed over informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made. The bill will retain its place on the Calendar and go over under the rule. The next case on the Calendar will be called.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. DAWES. The unfinished business before the resolution came up yesterday was the bill for opening a part of the Sioux reservation. Where has that gone?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no unfinished business of the morning hour. The cases will have to be taken up in their order. The Senate will no doubt reach the bill indicated in a short time.

Mr. DAWES. Just what is the parliamentary situation of that bill which was commenced and partly finished?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is No. 34 in the Order of Business, two or three numbers ahead. It is on the Calendar.

Mr. DAWES. Is it necessary to make a motion in regard to it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not necessary for the Senator to call it up. It will be reached in order shortly.

Mr. DAWES. I do not desire to call it up to-day, because there is but little time before 2 o'clock, but I should like to inquire what is necessary to bring it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reached in its order in a few minutes, if the Senator will wait.

ADMISSION OF DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 967) to provide for the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union and for the organization of the Territory of Lincoln was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the bill be passed over, as I have given notice that I shall call it up on Friday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be taken. The two next cases on the Calendar have been reported adversely, and will be passed over under the rule without being called.

SIOUX RESERVATION IN DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 52) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This is the bill to which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] referred.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] gave notice yesterday that he would desire to address the Senate at 2 o'clock today, and I ask that this bill may be the unfinished business for tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over under the rule without displacement in its order.

Mr. DAWES. I desire that it may go over and stand precisely as it does now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the order made in regard to it. The next business on the Calendar will be stated.

CHURCH AND STATE.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A resolution, by Mr. MORGAN, in relation to the appointment of officers of the United States to participate with the officers of any church in the joint conduct and administration of the spiritual or temporal affairs of such church," &c.

Mr. MORGAN. That may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. FRYE. When the presiding officer says "it goes over under the rule," is it intended that it shall go over and maintain its position on this Calendar or go on the General Calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That it shall go on the General Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. FRYE. That is what I supposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless the Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent to have it go over without prejudice.

Mr. MORGAN. I was not aware that that would be the result of sending the resolution over, inasmuch as it has never been before a committee or reported upon. Then I prefer to have action taken upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama desire to have the resolution go over without prejudice?

Mr. MORGAN. Without prejudice was my request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be adopted if there be no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Alabama think the resolution can be disposed of under the five-minute rule?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; I suppose so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Alabama as desiring to have the resolution go over under the rule, which would carry it over under Rule IX.

Mr. MORGAN. No, sir; that was not my purpose.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing and binding of 25,000 extra copies of the President's last annual message and accompanying documents for the use of the House; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

JOSEPH W. PARISH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next bill on the Calendar will be announced.

The bill (S. 241) for the relief of Joseph W. Parish was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be considered as before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Is there a report in that case?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a report. It will be read.

Mr. HOAR. The report consists of a good deal in the way of statistics, figures, and other matters that the Senate could not very well follow in the reading. I think the Senate would prefer to have me make a brief statement of the case, and then determine whether they desire to have the report read or not. But as that statement would be interrupted in about sixty seconds, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered 2 o'clock now for purposes of business, so that the pending bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will announce the unfinished business of yesterday. The Chair hears no objection.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill may be laid aside informally in order that I may address the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to lay aside the pending order informally, with a view to taking up the resolution offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. That order will be made unless there is objection.

COIN DUTIES ON IMPORTED GOODS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted December 18, 1885, by Mr. BECK, relative to the payment of customs dues and the disbursements thereof, &c.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Presldent, the importance of the questions which have been under discussion, somewhat irregularly perhaps, is I think a sufficient excuse for my obtruding myself upon the Senate at this time. I shall not attempt to address myself as particularly and specifically to the pending resolution as to the general questions which have been discussed in its consideration.

A free commercial interchange between the different nations of the earth can only be had with the use of one or both of the money metals, and gold or silver is as indispensable for commercial transactions among the people at home as between the nations of the earth. Without a sufficient amount of money with which to do business, the energies of the people are depressed and in time destroyed. A scarcity of money means a lack of production, dull times, stagnation in business, low wages, or none at all, poverty, want, and general distress. The people who live on fixed incomes suffer the least, and the laborer the most.

With a sufficiency of money with which to do business, commerce will flourish, manufactures will be stimulated, and productions of all kinds increased. The laborer will be worthy of his hire, and, what is of equal importance to him, will receive it. Capital will stimulate the energies of the people to produce; production is wealth. Individual and national prosperity will follow. We all know the difference between periods of business activity and financial depression, and no one will deny that the people are happier when business is good than when bad. It is the money-loaner, the bill-discounter, and pawnbroker that flourish in the hour of financial distress. So the question comes home not only to the statesmen and capitalists, but to the poorest laborer in the land, what shall we gain by the destruction of the money faculty of silver? Can the business of the commercial world be transacted with gold and paper money based on gold?

If the last question is answered in the affirmative, then we may well consider the advantages and disadvantages of the use of gold alone, but if we answer it in the negative, we may cut short our inquiries and cease our investigations. To determine whether we can dispense with one of the money metals and do the business of the world with the other necessitates the inquiry as to the amount of the metal to be discarded as well as the amount to be retained. The amount of gold and silver in circulation as money or in existence in such a state as to be converted into money, if the interests of trade require, has been variously estimated. At the best, all estimates must be largely a matter of speculation. Statisticians, writers on political economy and finance, have, in order to ascertain the amount in circulation, attempted to determine the amount of the world's production, and especially the production since the discovery of America. But when we realize that the most enlightened nations of the earth kept little or no account of the production of their mines, their mintage, imports, and exports until within the last century, it will be apparent how difficult the task.

Soetbeer estimates the world's production since the discovery of America up to 1875 in round millions as follows: Gold, $4,643,000,000; silver, $6,159,000,000. If we now add the production since 1875, estimated as gold $1,000,000,000 and of silver about the same, $1,000,000,000, we have a total of $12,802,000,000; or gold $5,643,000,000, and silver $7,159,000,000. This estimate is one-fourth too large according to some and one-fourth too small according to others. It doubtless presents very nearly, if not quite, the relative amounts of gold and silver produced in the world since the discovery of America.

When we consider the character of the two metals, taking into consideration the large amount of gold used in the manufacture of personal ornaments, its loss by use, &c., in comparison with the loss of silver in the same way, it is quite apparent that if the original production of gold and silver was equal the silver must now be largely in excess of the gold. What has been the world's production of gold—and silver is of no importance, except that it may enable us to determine the amount still in existence—available for circulation? This at first sight might not appear to be a difficult matter, but when we commence our investigations in that direction we shall find the same difficulty, although in a lesser degree, that we found in determining the world's production.

Mr. Burchard, late Director of our Mint, in his report for 1884, page 486, gives a table of the amount of coin and bullion in the principal countries of the world in round millions as follows:

Gold	$3,293,000,000
Silver	2,754,000,000

This estimate includes silver of full and limited legal tender.

Mr. Burchard has given his authority for most if not all of his estimates, so we may form our own conclusions as to the correctness of his figures.

In this table he estimates the amount of silver in India at $1,037,000,000. Mr. Chapman, before mentioned, estimates the silver circulation in 1881 at $1,250,000,000.

The amount given by the Director of the Mint for India is but a little more than the net imports into that country within the last twenty-seven years, and no account is made of the silver that has been pouring into the country for the last two hundred years.

No estimate is made of the silver in China, Java, Persia, Siam, and other Asiatic countries, and as these countries must contain a large amount of silver in circulation as money, it is evident that the estimate of $2,754,000,000 is too small. I submit a table of estimates from the recent work of Soetbeer, showing the amount of gold and silver in the principal countries in the world at the end of the year 1884. This table was kindly furnished me by the Director of the Mint.

Countries.	Gold.	Silver.	Gold and silver.
Great Britain	$575,246,000	$92,820,000	$668,066,000
British colonies, without India	95,200,000	14,280,000	109,480,000
The Netherlands	14,042,000	64,022,000	78,064,000
France, Italy, Belgium, and Switzerland	1,065,050,000	833,000,000	1,898,050,000
Austria-Hungary	47,600,000	71,400,000	119,000,000
Germany	374,136,000	212,296,000	586,432,000
Scandinavian countries	27,370,000	10,234,000	37,604,000
Russia	136,850,000	57,120,000	193,970,000
United States	585,480,000	276,080,000	861,560,000
Other countries in Europe and America	194,684,000	451,486,000	646,170,000
Total	3,115,658,000	2,082,738,000	5,198,396,000

It will be observed that Soetbeer has omitted India, which he estimated in 1881 as having over $1,000,000,000 of silver. If this is added to his total of silver in other countries his estimate will be in the neighborhood of three hundred million more than the estimate of Director Burchard for 1884.

In 1876 Mr. Seyd estimated the gold of the world at $3,750,000,000. Mr. Chapman, of India, in a letter addressed to the late monetary conference, estimated the gold at very nearly twice that amount, estimating the gold and silver of the world at £2,800,000,000 or $14,000,000,000. About one-half of this amount is supposed to be gold; that is, $7,000,000,000.

Our minister to France (Mr. McLane) estimates the total silver coin in France at about $980,000,000, which includes foreign coins as well as French coins, but all circulating as the equal of gold.

I have another table (kindly furnished me by the Director of the Mint) of the world's stock of gold and silver. It will be observed that in this table the stock of gold in the United States is put at $609,000,000, instead of $610,500,000, as estimated by Director Burchard.

It will also be observed that the estimate of Soetbeer of the gold in the United States is about $25,000,000 less than Burchard's; but whether we take Burchard's or Kimball's estimate of 1884, we must add the imports of gold since the close of the fiscal year 1884 over the exports to the present time. The excess of imports of gold over the exports of that metal from July 1, 1884, to July 1, 1885, was $18,213,804, and the excess of imports over exports to the 1st of October, 1885, was two and a half millions, making the total of $20,500,000 in round numbers; this, without allowance for our production, would give us $631,000,000 according to Burchard, and a million and a half less according to Kimball. With our own production, it is safe to say we have a stock of gold of at least $650,000,000. Kimball gives our silver stock at $283,000,000, which of course comprises our legal-tender silver as well as subsidiary coin and bullion.

Stock of gold and silver coin and bullion in the principal countries of the world.

*Estimated by the Director of the Mint. †Wahrung's Politik, 1884. ‡Bank reserves only.

The $594,900,000 doubtless represents French coins only, and does not include the foreign coins in circulation in that country.

Whatever may be the amount of gold and silver in circulation, it is evident that hitherto the two metals have not sufficed as a circulating medium to meet the demands of the business of the world, and all civilized nations have been compelled to resort to paper to make up for the lack of gold and silver. This paper money must, by the laws of trade, bear a certain proportion to the amount of gold and silver held as the basis of its issue.

We can not have forgotten in this country the large issue of the national notes during the war, without any considerable amount of gold and silver in reserve, either in the hands of the people or in the vaults of the Government. Its rapid depreciation was not from a want of faith in the Government ultimately paying these notes, but because it was apparent that the Government could not then pay in coin. In the nature of things, a paper currency not based on gold or silver will not circulate beyond the territorial limits of the nation issuing the same; but make it exchangeable on demand for coin, and its value will be substantially the same throughout the commercial world, the difference being only the cost of the exchange.

The experience of all nations that have resorted to the use of paper money, when destitute of gold and silver, has been the same as our own, and we may regard it as a fixed rule in finance that such issue must always have reference to the gold and silver available for the redemption of such paper. The paper currency then issued is but the representative of money, a promise that the paper dollar shall be exchanged for the real dollar. Such exchange must be on demand without trouble or expense to the holder, or else the note depreciates. With both gold and silver in circulation as money, the principal nations of the earth have issued more paper money than either the silver or gold in circulation, or about $3,943,000,000.

The business of the world can not be transacted as it was fifty or one hundred years ago. The activity in all kinds of business largely brought about by the discovery of gold in California and Australia demands much more money for daily use than was required previous to 1848. We need all our money metal and all the paper issued on it for the convenience of trade. If we destroy one-half of the money metal we must curtail the paper issue in the same proportion.

If, then, it has been found impossible to do the business of the world with the gold and silver in circulation, what reason have we to suppose the gold alone will suffice? Is business to be less active, the wants of the people less than heretofore? With the increasing population and extension of settlement, the opening of new regions of country for the use of civilized men, the demand for money must increase. Fifty million people need more than five million, and one hundred million more than fifty million.

The increased demand for money will not be met by the production of gold alone. The annual production of gold has decreased from $192,000,000 to $100,000,000, with every prospect of its falling very much below that amount. The amount consumed in arts and manufactures will in a short time equal the annual production. When we consider the amount that will be required in the arts and manufactures it is quite apparent that we can not hope to increase the world's stock of gold for use as money. But if it is still said we may dispense with silver and use gold only and not disturb the commerce of the world, what advantage shall we gain by so doing? Why shall we deny to silver the money function which the whole world has until recently conceded to it?

That it is a money metal by the almost universal consent of mankind will not be denied, and it is no answer to the demand for its continued use to say that it is not the best money in the world. Silver has been money since the dawn of civilization. It is money to-day in the hands of 90 per cent. of the human family, and by three-fourths of them, either by law or by preference, it is placed above gold. It is the money metal of commerce, and it is better adapted to trade than gold at a majority of the ports of the world. It will be received where gold will, either as a legal-tender metal or as a valuable commodity that can be converted into money to be used elsewhere, and in many countries it is preferred to gold at a ratio less than that existing in this country. England, Germany, and a few other countries will not take it at its mint value, yet will take it by weight as a money metal.

If silver is adapted by nature to supply the wants of the human race as money, why is it that such an effort is being made to destroy its monetary value? It is to destroy one-half of the money of the world to enhance the value of the other half. The advocates of the single standard declare that gold is immovable in its price; that the destruction of silver as a money metal can not increase the price of gold. John Locke declared "that if you increase or lessen the quantity of money current in traffic the alteration in values is in the money," a proposition that only need be stated to compel a recognition of its truth. When you have destroyed the money faculty of silver and left the business of the world to be carried on with gold alone you have increased the purchasing power of gold, and it is immaterial whether you say the thing purchased has fallen or gold has risen. Property values become less, and those who have money on deposit, the holders of bonds and mortgages and Government securities, are directly benefited, for the principal and interest of such and all other debts remain to be paid with but one-half of the money that was in existence at the time such debts were contracted.

One reason given by the friends of the single standard in the monetary conference of 1881 against the remonetization of silver by the entire commercial world was that it would enhance the price of all commodities. If its complete remonetization will raise prices, is it not certain that the demonetization will lower the prices?

But it is said that silver is not a stable metal like gold, and therefore it disturbs prices and values when received as money; and to make good this charge, the price of silver is gauged by the price of gold. In other words, when in London 15½ ounces of silver will buy 1 ounce of gold, we say silver is at par with gold.

But if the demand is so great for gold, and the supply so small that the holders declare that they want 18 ounces of silver for 1 of gold, we say that silver has fallen, when it is notorious that 15½ ounces of silver will buy as much of everything else in the world except gold as when 15½ ounces of silver bought 1 ounce of gold. Is it not then apparent that it is gold that has risen? If we measure silver by the standard value of all other things silver has stood still and gold has gone up, and its purchasing power, not only of silver but all other things, has increased. It was declared at the monetary conference of 1881 that in India silver would buy more of all things except gold than when it was worth 59 pence per ounce. Still an ounce would not buy over 52 pence in gold. Suppose we gauge gold by silver, and we find that silver stands still and gold moves—to-day it is worth fifteen and a half silver dollars per ounce, to-morrow eighteen, and the next day sixteen. What is that but a fluctuation in the price of gold? If you measure the price of gold by all other values, you will see it has risen in price or its purchasing power has increased in a greater degree than silver.

But if we submit to gauge silver by gold alone as its standard, and admit that it has fallen and gold stood still, can we find the cause of such fall outside of and not inherent in silver? Silver was worth 61⅞ pence per ounce in London in December, 1865, at the time of the organization of the Latin Union. This was a premium on silver or a disdiscount on gold. No one then talked about the fluctuation of silver. It was the stable metal; gold was the unstable metal; silver was the valuable metal. A silver dollar of 412½ grains was worth 105 cents. A gold dollar of 25.8 grains was worth only 95 cents in silver.

In 1873 the average value of silver was 59½ pence, and the silver dollar was then worth more than a gold dollar, and had been for forty years; that is, from 1833 to 1873. Thus, during the forty years preceding 1873 the gold dollar had been at a discount, the silver dollar at a premium. The gold dollar had been worth nearly all that time from 3 to 6 per cent. less than the silver dollar. But in 1867 an effort was made by several of the leading nations of the world to adopt a gold standard, not because silver was the cheap metal, for it was not.

The monetary conference of Paris, held in June, 1867, reported in favor of the gold standard. Using this report as the basis of action, the Finance Committee of the United States Senate in June, 1868, reported a bill making silver a legal tender for $10 only, thus proposing the demonetization of silver. It was urged that as the United States was a great gold-producing country, it ought therefore to adopt the gold standard. As we now produce more silver than gold, what will the former advocates of the gold standard say to that argument now? The effort culminated in the legislation of 1873 demonetizing silver.

In 1871 Germany demonetized silver when the market price was about 60 pence and the American silver dollar was worth about 103 cents. The commercial ratio between silver and gold was very nearly 15.50, the legal ratio; or, to be exact, 15.58. The demonetization of silver by Germany was not on account of the low price of silver, and not because of any objection to the ratio of 15.50 to 1, because that ratio had been too high for the market from 1853 to 1861, when the market and legal ratio were exactly together, the ratio again dropping below fifteen and a half until 1867, when it went to 15.57.

The demonetization of silver in Germany by law in 1871, and in fact in 1873, did not materially lessen the price of silver, and the silver market was not seriously disturbed until 1874, when silver was quoted at $58\frac{5}{16}$ pence per ounce, and the American dollar of 412½ grains, if in existence, would have been worth a little less than 99 cents, measured by a gold dollar. The Latin Union, alarmed at the warfare made on silver by Germany and other countries, also took steps to degrade silver from its money function by refusing it free mintage at the mints of the Union, and providing for only a limited amount of coinage. Just how it was supposed this denial of the money function of silver would sustain it in the market must ever remain a mystery to thinking men.

Germany was offering to the world from $350,000,000 to $400,000,000 of silver no longer desired for home use as money. Every nation that used silver saw herself the depository of Germany's silver, and feared that their gold would flow to Germany in exchange for such silver; and, strange as it may seem, the wise financiers at the head of our Government, notwithstanding we had neither gold nor silver in any considerable quantities, feared the loss of what little gold we had and that we should be overwhelmed with German silver, and the Government hastened to declare that silver was not money in the United States except in small sums. Thus Germany, the United States, the Scandinavian countries, and the Netherlands were engaged in destroying the money function of silver and endeavoring to make it a mere commodity. With the loss of the money faculty of silver its real value was gone, and had all the nations of the earth followed the example of the nations before named silver would have been about as valuable as copper, for, shorn of its money faculty, it is of less value to mankind than either copper or brass.

The commercial ratio of silver to gold had been quoted steadily at from 15½ to 1 for many years, but now silver was degraded and denied its proper function and gold was increasing in demand, for with the loss of silver came a demand for gold to perform the money functions heretofore performed by silver and gold, and thereafter to be performed by gold alone. Thus the price of gold went up as the demand for it increased.

In addition to the assault that had been made on silver the demand for silver for India fell off, not because India intended to discontinue the use of silver, but for other causes. For fifteen years previous to 1870 India had taken net imports on an average each year of almost $50,000,000, and this demand fell off, so that from 1870 to 1877, a period of six years, the net import was only about $12,000,000 each year. Is it strange, with the hostile legislation against silver by the great commercial nations of the world, and the threat of others to do the same, that silver depreciated or gold appreciated?

It was pretended that the world's production would largely increase, and to such an extent that the traffic of the world could not make use of the amount produced as a money metal. The world had passed through a period of business activity, large credits had been given, until the bankers, brokers, and money-loaners held mortgages on all the great public works, whether contracted by corporations or municipalities. States, counties, cities, and towns had loaned their credit to corporations, or had been the borrowers of money on their own account. Houses and lands had been mortgaged at large rates of interest, and it is no fiction when it is said that the debtor class were fast becoming the slaves of the creditor class.

The creditor class, always powerful in affairs of state, controlled the legislation as well as the financial affairs of the world. The destruction of one-half of the money of the world would enhance the value of all of these securities. Is it very strange that the common people of all nations, deeply absorbed in their efforts to pay their interest and escape from their debts, did not interfere in the attempt to lessen all values except that of gold? Thus the demonetization in Germany did not call from that class a protest any more than the act of 1873 did from the people of the United States, who were busy in trying to save something from the wreck produced by overspeculation and overcredits, and were suffering from stagnation in business produced by a want of real money to carry on the legitimate business of the country, and did not discover that silver was demonetized until months after it was done.

But it is said that it is not just and honest that the silver dollar of 412½ grains shall be received as of the same value as a gold dollar of $25\frac{8}{10}$ grains when silver bullion of the weight of the silver dollar will not buy gold bullion of the weight of the gold dollar, and the silver dollar of 412½ grains is called a clipped dollar, dishonest dollar, and a cheat. If gold was denied access to the principal mints of the world and threatened with destruction as a money metal $25\frac{8}{10}$ grains would not buy 412½ of silver, and for forty years a gold dollar would not buy a silver dollar, and that, too, immediately preceding the demonetizing of silver in the United States.

We are told that we can not circulate both the gold and silver dollar unless we make them of equal value, treating them as so much bullion. The ratio between gold and silver has ever been a varying one. This ratio is determined by human consent based on the cost of production and the demand for its use. In France, in 1785, the market ratio, or the ratio established by the consent of the merchants, was $15\frac{22}{100}$ to 1. By the action of the French Government the ratio was made $15\frac{50}{100}$ to 1, and the mercantile consent was given to it, and thus all the gold in France appreciated the difference between the mercantile ratio and the government ratio; but the mercantile ratio disappeared, and the government ratio took its place and held it one hundred years without any material variation. Had the French Government declared the ratio 15 to 1, the mercantile assent would have been given, and all the silver would have been appreciated. In this country it takes 16 ounces of coined silver to pay the debt that can be paid with 1 ounce of coined gold. In France and many other countries 15½ ounces of coined silver will pay a debt that can be paid with 1 ounce of gold.

Does any one doubt that if the monetary conference of 1881 had secured the assent of all the nations represented at that conference to declare the ratio 15½ to 1 that there would have been anything more said about the dishonest dollar or the low price of silver? Thus the ratio between gold and silver is dependent on human consent, either in shape of legislative declaration or by the universal consent of mankind or some considerable portion of it. The stability of such ratio must depend on the universality of such consent. If the entire world consents that it be 15½ to 1 it will be fixed at that ratio, and so remain, until at least some portion withdraw that consent. To attempt to put in the silver dollar an amount of silver that treated as bullion will buy a gold dollar and thus keep the gold and silver dollar of equal market value, is to ignore the fact that silver is a money metal as well as gold, and deny it the value conferred on money metal by its mintage. Both metals possessing money functions, they must be treated according to their respective value, measured by the cost of their production and their adaptability as a circulating medium.

A dollar, whether 412½ grains of silver or $25\frac{8}{10}$ grains of gold, represents a certain amount of human labor. When it takes fifteen and a half times as much labor to secure 1 ounce of gold as it does an ounce of silver, the consent of mankind can be readily obtained that the rate be 15½ to 1, but if the time shall come when 20 ounces of silver can be secured with the same labor that it requires to secure 1 ounce of gold, human consent will soon fix its ratio as 20 to 1. In the nature of things the ratio can never be fixed according to the exact proportion of labor required to secure the metal. Gold and silver may be mined in some places and at some times much more cheaply than at others, and some nations may prefer one metal and other nations the other; so the human consent is after all the recognition of the difference in the cost of production, considered in connection with its fitness for use as money and the demand therefor.

Notwithstanding that I have declared that the ratio between gold and silver is one of human consent based on the cost of production, demand for its use, and its fitness for use as money, I will not overlook the fact that the ratio may be impaired by a greater demand for one metal than for the other or by the denial of its money function. Thus, when large shipments are to be made of silver to India, when gold is not desired, 1 ounce of gold may not buy 15½ ounces of silver. From 1833 to 1873 the demand for silver was so great that the ratio fixed by law was impaired, and silver was at a premium, or gold at a discount, when measured by the ratio of 15½ to 1. Owing to the assaults made on silver since 1871, and the demand made for gold, the ratio has been somewhat impaired, but it is evident such impairment is not the result of an overproduction of silver, or because silver has been produced with less labor than was formerly required to secure it, nor on account of its unfitness for use as money.

It has been discredited as a money metal, denied access to the mints, and in a variety of ways its enemies have made repeated assaults on it, and its friends, overwhelmed by the clamor against it, have made but a feeble defense. Its enemies, under the guise of friendly aid, urge the partial demonetization, restrict its coinage, falsify its history, prophesy an overproduction, and contend for an increased ratio. Put the ratio, say they, at 18 to 1 or 20 to 1, and we then are in favor of the double standard. The hundred years of its history with a ratio of 15½ to 1 proves that it is a stable money metal, and in addition thereto proves that the ratio is as high as it ought to be. With the ratio at 16 to 1 for forty years, we failed to keep an American dollar in circulation. Suppose the commercial and financial world had assaulted gold as silver has been assaulted when gold was from 3 to 6 per cent. below silver, does any one suppose gold would not have fallen still lower?

The gold production sprung within a few years from about $15,000,000 a year to nearly $200,000,000. That might have looked like an overproduction. Silver from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 is not alarming. For a hundred years the average annual production of silver has been about $50,000,000. When we consider the production of gold for a few years after the discovery of gold in California and Australia, and that it has now fallen to half the annual production of some years, is it to be supposed that a business world that could absorb that amount without a material disturbance in its financial condition will be disturbed by an increase of silver from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000 a year? The demand for gold and silver both as money and in arts and manufactures will increase with the increase of population and civilization.

In 1878, when the proposition was before Congress to remonetize silver, all the evils that could befall a nation were predicted if the dollar of 412½ grains was made a legal tender. We were told that we should become the depositary of all the silver in the world, and that we should lose all our gold and be reduced to a silver standard; we were threatened with a loss of national credit, with an inability to sell our bonds. Shame and disgrace were to be our portion if we dared pay individual and national debts with the silver dollar. It was declared to be robbery to pay our bonds in the coin in which we had stipulated we might pay when the bonds were issued. Not only did this Chamber echo with the denunciations of those who believed the silver dollar was a legal tender for such bonds, but the pulpits thundered forth their denunciation of the friends of the double standard, who were declared to be as destitute of integrity as they were ignorant of finance. If the just vengeance of the gods was not invoked, it was threatened. What was our condition then as compared with our condition now? During the year 1877 the national notes were worth 94 cents on a dollar.

The total amount of gold and silver in the land could not have exceeded $200,000,000. Government bonds bore 4, 5, and 6 per cent. interest; business of all kinds at a standstill, or nearly so; the laborer in all parts of the land crying for an opportunity to earn his bread; the store-houses full of goods, but no purchaser, because the great mass of people were without means with which to buy. We were told that we had produced too much, and that we were suffering from overproduction. It was said that the halcyon days of the American laborer had passed, and that with the increasing population we must expect lower wages and less luxurious living for the poor than they had been accustomed to have. With an abundant harvest and surplus for exports, the people complained of want and distress. Distrust and uncertainty in business was the rule, confidence the exception.

It was declared in a public speech by a former member of President Lincoln's Cabinet that there were 1,200,000 laborers seeking employment and unable to find it. The country was full of tramps.

The total imports of gold and silver for the fiscal year 1877 was $43,732,595, and the total exports $56,054,737. That is, the total exports of gold and silver exceeded the imports by $12,332,142. The total imports of gold and silver from the 30th of June, 1877, to the 1st of March, 1878, were $17,625,556, and the total exports during the same time $30,587,874. That is, the exports of gold and silver exceeded the imports $12,962,318.

In July, 1877, silver was worth only 46¾ pence per ounce, and the bullion in the silver dollar was worth only 80 cents when measured by a gold dollar. We were without metallic money. The gold in the country was held either by the Government or the banks. It was not handled by the people. For sixteen years gold had not been money in the popular sense. The people were strangers to it. During the preceding seven years we had produced about three hundred millions of gold and nearly as much silver, yet thousands of men actively engaged in business had never handled a dollar of either silver or gold unless it was subsidiary silver coin.

With the remonetization of silver came prosperity. Confidence was restored, business revived, the laborer no longer vainly sought for the opportunity to earn his bread. The Government credit was not impaired, but advanced, and no one pointed the finger of shame at us as a nation proposing to escape the payment of its just obligations according to the letter and the spirit. The bondholder was satisfied with his interest and the laborer with his wages. Yet the enemies of silver have not ceased to prophesy as to the evil results of the use of silver as money.

Since February, 1878, the imports of gold in excess of exports have been very large, and silver imports less than exports. Still we are told that it is not safe to continue to coin silver dollars nor to treat silver as a money metal; that the people will not receive it as money when we have more than $140,000,000 of it in circulation, either in "hard dollars" or in silver certificates, when we can not ignore the fact that the people have exchanged gold for silver that they might secure the silver certificates. Eighty million dollars gold was exchanged for the despised silver certificates, as shown by the Government reports. The silver certificate circulates as freely as the national note or the bank note. Should we coin the entire production of the silver mines of the United States for ten years we would have less than France has had in circulation without detriment to her financial condition. If we coin our silver and put it in the vaults of the Government and issue certificates therefor we shall have a safe currency.

We need not be afraid to inflate with silver, whether it circulates as a dollar or whether it goes into Government vaults and is represented by the silver certificates. Nor need we be alarmed at the cry of a short dollar, a clipped dollar, or dishonest dollar. Of the $2,754,000,000 silver now in circulation in the various countries of the world, $2,500,000,000 of it circulates at the ratio of 15½ to 1. Our dollar is worth at least 3 per cent. more than any silver coined at the ratio of 15½ to 1.

If the commercial world ever consents to the fixing of a ratio between gold and silver that shall be general in its character, it must be on the basis of 15½ to 1. To put the ratio higher is to depreciate silver and appreciate gold.

Shall the United States, producing one-half of the silver produced in the world, take any step which looks to its depreciation? To increase the ratio between gold and silver is to depreciate silver to the extent of the increase of the ratio. To this the countries owning large amounts of silver will never consent. For one hundred and thirty years the ratio of 15½ to 1 was too high, as may be seen by the following table.

I submit herewith a table of the price of silver in Hamburg from 1744 to 1844, one hundred years:

Periods.	Average price of silver.	Standard dollar.
	Pence.	Cents.
1744–1750	63½	106.95
1751–1760	64½	109.75
1761–1770	63 1/16	107.95
1771–1780	64⅛	109.10
1781–1790	63 7/16	108.25
1791–1800	61½	103.60
1801–1810	60 7/16	102.40
1811–1820	60 15/16	103.15
1821–1831	59 11/16	101.15
1831–1840	60¼	101.85
1841–1843	59⅜	100.90

Also a table of prices in London during that time:

Periods.	Average price of silver.	Standard dollar.

India with its $1,000,000,000, France with her nearly $1,000,000,000, will hardly consent to the destruction of that amount of metallic money nor to its debasement 15 or 20 per cent. by increasing its ratio. If the nearly $3,000,000,000 of silver now doing duty as a money metal is deprived of its money function what are we to have in the place of it to use as money? After the destruction of its money value or its depreciation by adverse legislation what are the holders thereof to receive to make them whole? It is said that silver is the money of poor nations as it is of poor people. Granting that for the sake of the argument, is that any reason why it should be destroyed, and nations like some of the South American republics, Chili, Bolivia, Peru, having but little or no gold, should be deprived of silver money and compelled to use paper money alone? If it is the money of poor people we ought to restore it, for even in our own proud country the poor outnumber the rich many times.

From 1873 to 1878 inclusive, a period of six years, the exports of gold exceeded the imports by $123,754,210, or an average of $20,625,000 a year. Since the passage of the much despised and abused silver bill of 1878, partially restoring to silver in this country its money function, the imports of gold have exceeded the exports by $200,856,031.

In 1877 we had in the United States about $193,000,000 of gold. For six years previous we had been accumulating gold at the rate of $22,500,000 each year. We have now not less than $650,000,000 of gold. Thus we have added to our stock of gold since the passage of the silver bill at the rate of about $60,000,000 each year, and yet we are told that the coining of silver will drive gold out of the country, and is in fact doing so now. If it does not drive it out of the country, we are told by high authority that it will be hoarded, and in fact it is being hoarded now, to come out some day and buy up the unfortunate silver dollar. Well, when it is used for that purpose it will go into the channels of trade and commerce, and I can not see any cause for alarm from that source.

What evidence is there that gold is being hoarded? Not a particle. It is the pretense of the enemies of silver to frighten the people into submitting to their demands to suspend the coinage of the silver dollar. What evidence is there that the coinage of silver has exerted an evil influence on the finances of the country? None whatever; nor is there reason to suppose that its continued coinage will. Compare the condition of the national banks in 1877 with 1885, and we find no indications in that direction of financial disaster in the near future.

	October 30, 1877.	October 30, 1885.
Undivided profits and surplus funds	167,300,000	206,500,000
Capital stock$	$479,500,000	$527,500,000
Specie	22,700,000	174,900,000
Deposits	630,400,000	1,120,100,000

Deposits in national banks have increased during the last year $127,000,000, and they have also added to their stock of specie $46,000,000 during the last year.

The deposits in savings-banks were $200,000,000 greater in 1885 than in 1881. No accurate data can be given of the amounts of deposits in savings-banks in 1877 or 1878. I therefore compare the deposits of 1885 with those of 1881 as given by the Comptroller of the Currency:

The New York city national banks had, December 28, 1877, gold	$21,074,826 20
They had in October, 1885, gold	91,454,167 74
Other national banks had, December 28, 1877, gold	1,625,974 00
And in October, 1885	83,418,409 00
The United States Treasury had, September 30, 1877, gold	107,039,529 00
On September 30, 1878, gold	136,036,302 00
September 30, 1877, silver	7,425,454 00
September 30, 1878, silver	27,933,142 00
December 31, 1885, the Treasury had, gold	253,351,409 00
And of silver, exclusive of fractional coin	76,179,465 00

Since July 1, 1878, we have paid of our bonded debt about $600,000,000. The opponents of silver coinage in the country have been ably supported by monometallists of Europe, and especially in Great Britain. Nearly, if not quite, all financial authorities in that country have prophesied our financial ruin unless we follow the example of England and adopt the gold standard.

Let us, then, compare British finances with ours. The exports of specie and bullion from Great Britain since 1878 have exceeded their imports by something over $9,000,000.

Under date of April 1, 1885, Minister Lowell transmitted to the Treasury Department a statement from the mint of Great Britain, showing that during the last year the exports of gold exceeded the imports by $4,160,857, and the exports of silver exceeded the imports by $900,000. So it appears that the total loss for the year was over $5,000,000 of metallic money.

From the 24th of June to the 30th of December, 1885, the Bank of England lost, of coin and bullion, $37,976,675, and its deposits had decreased in that time nearly $48,000,000. During that time the bank lost one-third of its reserve, or over $33,000,000. Within three months prior to December 1, 1885, there was sent to Germany from England, gold, $10,780,000.

I clip the following from the Economist of January 2, 1886, concerning the present condition of the Bank of England:

> The bank is evidently not in a position to reduce its rate at present. Nor will it be warranted in making a reduction until it has not only checked the foreign demand for gold, but has also succeeded in attracting gold hither to replenish its depleted reserve. As yet there is nothing to indicate that it will soon succeed in accomplishing this.

I have shown that our national banks have increased their stock of gold since 1877 from $22,700,000 to $174,900,000, or nearly eight times the amount they held.

The Bank of England had, in 1877, gold, $126,850,000, and December 16, 1885, $98,041,975, a decrease of $28,808,025. The bank rates of discount were 2 per cent. in June and 4 per cent. in December.

The Bank of England holds less coin and bullion than at any other time within the last fifteen years—that is, at the close of the year.

The Bank of France had, December 31, 1877, gold	$235,400,000
October 16, 1885, gold	211,005,000
A decrease of	24,385,000
The Bank of France had, December 31, 1877, silver	173,080,000
December 31, 1885, silver	211,500,000
An increase of silver of	38,420,000

France adopted the policy now contended for by those who favor suspension of silver coinage, and yet the Bank of France has not accumulated gold, but on the contrary has lost gold, and that loss has been supplied by silver. It is not at all probable that the stock of gold in France has increased while the bank has been losing that metal.

The Imperial Bank of Germany had, December, 1877, gold	$130,776,000
December 30, 1884, gold	124,457,000
A decrease of	6,319,000
October 25, 1877, the Irish banks had, gold	17,837,355
July 25, 1885, these banks had, gold	12,692,750
A decrease of	5,144,605
In 1877, the banks of Scotland had, gold	24,431,030
In 1885, these banks had	19,520,920
A decrease of	4,910,110

It is not only the great banks that I have mentioned that have lost gold, but it is a fact that nearly all the great banks of the world have lost gold as compared with the stock of 1877. Such is notably the case with Australian banks. Is it not strange that, if our policy concerning silver is so unwise, we have been able to accumulate such a stock of gold, while England, Ireland, Scotland, and Germany, where the gold is the only legal tender, save for small amounts, the stock of gold appears to have decreased?

Not a single disaster predicted at the time of the passage of the silver bill has happened. Gold has not been driven out of the country, but on the contrary has accumulated at a rate never before accumulated by any other country. Bankruptcy and national dishonor have not been the result of that legislation. The credit of the Government has not been impaired, and the rate of interest on Government securities has gone from 5 and 6 per cent. interest to 3 per cent., and those at 3 per cent. are at a premium.

Such is the credit of the Government that a New York syndicate within the last two years desired to take $50,000,000 of Government bonds at 2 per cent. interest, and they did not stipulate that either interest or principal should be paid in gold.

The Comptroller of the Currency puts our stock of gold October 1, 1885, at	$622,829,106
Silver	292,769,417
Total metallic money	915,598,523

To this we must add excess of gold imports over exports during the months of October, November, and December, about $10,000,000.

It is true that about one-third of this amount is silver, but I suppose no one will deny that the accumulation of silver in this country adds to its wealth. We coined during the last year more gold than any other nation.

Only one nation has more gold than the United States. France has $848,000,000 gold, England has $583,000,000 gold.

No one can deny that prosperity has followed the passage of the silver bill. No one can deny the statement we are still increasing our supply both of silver and gold, and our gold twice as fast as our silver. That more gold has been imported than exported, and more silver exported than imported. What, then, is the evil to be avoided by the demonetization of silver? The advocates of demonetization declare that the danger is ahead, that it is imminent, and that gold will leave the country if we continue to coin silver. So they said in 1878; so they have said every month since. From this Chamber, from the other, from the Executive Mansion and the Treasury Department we have heard the same cry for the last seven years. An ounce of fact is said to be worth more than a pound of theory. We have the facts and they the theory.

The financial condition of the country is a flat denial of the theory of the monometallists and opponents of silver coinage. Does any one believe we would have accumulated more gold in the last seven years if the silver bill had not passed? No other nation in the world, in the course of legitimate business, has ever for a period of seven years accumulated as much gold as we have accumulated during the last seven years.

Mr. President, what will be the result of the repeal of the silver bill, or, what is the same thing, the suspension of coinage under it for an indefinite period of years, or at all? It will be to discourage the friends of the double standard all over the world. It will be to put on the market two millions more of silver, with the declaration that the great silver-producing country has denied to it its money function. It will depreciate silver, and that is what the advocates of suspension declare they want to do. Its immediate effect on the price of silver may be seen from the following, clipped from the London Economist of January 2, 1881:

> In referring to the introduction of a bill by Senator MCPHERSON for the suspension of the coinage of the standard silver dollar, in a strict line with the recommendation contained in the President's message, Bradstreet's says: "The presentation of this act, following closely upon the recommendations of the President's message, has undoubtedly had great effect upon the London silver market. The view taken there is that Congressional action will be arrived at on the question much more rapidly than is actually likely to be the case, and the price of silver bars fell from 47⅛*d.* to 47*d.* quickly upon the receipt of this intelligence, the price making a further fall on Wednesday to 46⅞*d.* at which figure the value of the standard dollar is 79.47 cents." It only remains to be added that it is very unlikely that the action contemplated in Senator MCPHERSON's bill can be passed in both Houses of Congress at this session. The so-called silver men are accounted too strong to permit the unconditional suspension of silver coinage. It is not, of course, improbable that some compromise measure may succeed in becoming law.

It will increase the value of gold, Government bonds, and mortgages, and all securities of that class; and will decrease the value of all other things, whether they be lands and houses, the product of labor in its thousand forms, or labor itself. It will destroy commerce and trade, and stupefy and destroy the energies of the people, curtailing their productive capacity. It will practically add to the national debt from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000, and from 20 to 30 per cent. to every dollar of indebtedness in the land, which is too great for computation.

The suspension of coinage and the repeal of the silver bill is in the interest only of the creditor class, a class insignificant in numbers as compared with the debtor class.

It is that class that demands the suspension of silver coinage and the degradation of silver. It is that they may add to the already great burden of the debtor class and enhance the value of their own holdings, whether that is represented by cash in their coffers or bonds and other securities held by them. They will abate nothing of the principal or interest, but with the destruction of one of the money metals they will still demand the payment of their obligations in the other metal, enhanced in value by the destruction of the other. It will not do to declare the real purpose and object of the proposed legislation nor the effect thereof, for the debtor class is much more numerous than the creditor class; for the men living on accumulated labor bear a small proportion to the men who labor day by day for their living.

And so we find to-day the men who as a class have ever been oblivious of the interests of the laboring man, those who have got as they could and held as they might of "this world's goods" without much regard for right, justice, or law, have all at once become deeply interested in the welfare of the laboring man, and declare with great emotion he is in great danger; that his wages will be paid in a depreciated dollar. This pretense of interest in the wages of the laboring man is not only weak, deceiving no one, but it is false. When did the banker, the note-shaver, the bill-discounter, or money-loaner ever before exhibit such zeal for the laborer? When has that class of moneyed men ever before exhibited any great interest in securing to the laborer steady employment or remunerative wages? How is it that even a convention of national bankers forget for the time their usual and annual raid on the Government for the reduction of taxes, or no taxes at all, in their anxiety to serve the laboring man by recommending the suspension of silver coinage? What interest have they heretofore exhibited? What methods have they devised to benefit the men who day by day consume their earnings?

No, Mr. President, the banker, the money-loaner, and bondholder, as a class, have not been noted for their zeal in the interests of the poor and oppressed, save as through them they may increase their holdings and the more rapidly fill their coffers. If they have taken deep interest in the welfare of the laboring class, the fame of their doings has not yet reached the supposed object of their beneficence. These men have no right to speak for the poor, for the farmer, mechanic, or artisan, nor to use their names to cover up their nefarious purposes, by which they hope to enrich themselves at the expense of the very class they profess to serve.

The honorable Secretary of the Treasury tells us that it is the laboring man who will first suffer if silver coinage is continued. Let the honorable Secretary speak for the great moneyed corporations, the bondholders, and the capitalists, but not for the laboring men, be they either those who live day by day by their labor, or the well-to-do mechanic, artisan, and farmer, for these men are not deceived by expressions of good-will, of anxiety for their welfare in a state paper. They know too well, and it has long been too apparent, that this great Department of the Government has passed into the control of the banks, bankers, and moneyed powers. They know that statutes made to curtail the powers of such moneyed corporations and capitalists, and to protect in some measure the interests of the great masses of the people who are not capitalists save in a small way, are violated every day in that Department. Not in the interest of the many, but in the interest of the few.

The intelligent laborers of the country are not to be deceived by such specious pretenses. They know that the destruction of one-half of the money of the world will make it more difficult for them to pay their debts and provide for their every-day necessities. They know that it will decrease their wages, if they are laborers who sell their wages day by day. They know, if mechanics or artisans engaged in manufacturing, or farmers in tilling the soil, that it will reduce the value of their products. They may be ignorant of finance, unlearned in the lore of political economy, but they do know that bankers and money-loaners will increase their rates of interest with the scarcity of money; that it will require more days' labor, more manufactured goods, more farm produce to pay a given number of dollars if the volume of the world's money is reduced one-half.

The great mass of the people are honest, and any attempt to scale the national debt, or in any way to repudiate the obligations of the Government concerning the same, will meet with determined opposition from the people. They are proud of our national credit. To the bondholder and all other creditors of the Government they will give the uttermost farthing due. If their sense of justice and right rebels at the idea of scaling the public debt, the same sentiment restrains them from assenting to any proposition that will in effect increase not only the public debt but all other debts from 20 to 30 per cent. If to scale the public or private debts of the country without the consent of the creditor is an injustice, they believe it is an equal injustice to compel the debtor to pay more than he contracted or in a coin different from that in which he contracted to pay.

We are told that we do not need as much metallic money as heretofore; that bank notes, greenbacks, checks, and drafts will take the place of coin. A good bank note or greenback is but the representative of coin and a promise on the part of the maker to pay the holder coin. And what is a check or draft but an order by one man to another to deliver actual money to a third? The money may not be actually delivered, but it must exist, or the check or draft is of no value whatever. Greenbacks and bank notes will soon be at a discount if it is once understood that they do not represent actual existing coin either in the vaults of the banks or that of the national Treasury. All the wealth of the Government was back of the greenback, and no one doubted the ability of the Government to ultimately pay; but lacking the present ability so to pay, the greenback depreciated to 40 cents on the dollar.

For convenience we may use checks, drafts, bills, notes, and certificates of deposit, but the full measure of money called for in these instruments must be in existence, pledged to the payment of such paper instruments. If less than the full measure of it is forthcoming the paper is at a discount, and if wholly wanting the paper is worthless. The creditor class demand—

First. The suspension of silver coinage.

Secondly. That the greenback or national notes, amounting to $346,600,000, be paid in gold and withdrawn from circulation. The suspension of silver coinage will be to all practical purposes the destruction of the silver dollar, for the next move that the creditor class will make will be to destroy its legal-tender qualities, as was done with the trade-dollar. Thus, with the suspension of the silver coinage and the discrediting of the dollar coined and the greenbacks retired, there will be a reduction of circulation of about $561,600,000, which is over one-third of the circulation in the United States, including gold, silver, and paper; yet we are gravely told that this proposed currency reform is in the interest of the laboring men and producers. If the laborer and producer have found difficulty in finding labor and markets for products with the past circulation, what will be their condition with two-thirds of the present amount?

With $400,000,000 of the balance locked up in the Treasury, as it now is, the business of the country will be left to be done with about one-third of our present stock of money. December 31 there was in the Treasury $511,277,120. The outstanding certificates of gold and silver amounted to about two hundred millions—that is, there was that amount not held by the Treasury. But how valuable a portion of these certificates are as a circulating medium can be seen by an extract from the speech of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], made in this Chamber a few days since. He says:

> The Treasurer's report, (page 23,) shows that on the 30th of June, 1885, the outstanding gold certificates amounted to $137,760,860, of which all but $33,360,000 were in denominations of $500 and upward, more than $55,000,000 of them being for $10,000 each. It is obvious that the people get no benefit in the form of currency when bills or certificates exceed $100.

Mr. President, we complain of stagnation in business. The holder of money is anxious to lend but not to buy. Why is this? Millions of money can be had on Government loans at 2 and 3 per cent. when legitimate business enterprises, promising much larger returns, as dividends, cannot find takers. It is because the holders of money believe that the legislation of the country, proposed by the Treasury Department and the national banks, will appreciate money and depreciate property. No one having money desires to exchange it for property with an almost certainty that the property will depreciate and the money appreciate. When we inquire of the bankers why, with an abundance of money in the country, business is not better, he tells us it is a lack of confidence among the people. A lack of confidence in whom? And why should there be a lack of confidence? What evil is threatened save that of the destruction of the silver money of the world? It can not be that it is the continued coinage of silver or the prospect that it will be continued, for I have shown that gold has accumulated and bank deposits have increased, and it is a fact I need only to mention to have admitted that the business of the country is better to-day than it was twelve months ago; was better then than it was twelve months before that, and during all that time we have been coining silver dollars at the rate of two millions per month.

With business improving in all departments of trade and commerce, better with two hundred millions of silver dollars than it was with one, it will not do to say that the business is suffering because of the coinage of silver. Neither will it do to say that the people fear continued coinage of silver, and that silver money will become cheap, for cheap money is always exchanged for property. Banks and moneyed men do not hold dollars that are depreciating in value, but hasten to exchange them for property. Other reasons may be found for the depression in business than the coinage of silver dollars.

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual report for 1885, on page 13, gives the net balance of cash in the Treasury as $8,764,590; this, with the $100,000,000 reserve charged to liabilities, makes net cash at that date of $108,764,590. Again on page 14 he gives the net balance on the 1st day of November, 1885, as $66,818,292. Add to this the $100,000,000 reserve, and we have net cash, November 1, $166,818,292. The Secretary says:

> The balance in the Treasury has therefore been increased within the above period (from March 4 to November 1, 1885) by the sum of $58,053,702.

I notice that in the last statement made by the Treasurer of the United States, dated December 31, 1885, the net balance is put at $99,342,147. Add this to the $100,000,000 reserve, and we have net cash in the Treasury, $199,342,147—a vast sum to withdraw from its proper use and lock up in Government vaults. Even after the $10,000,000 is paid out on the recent call for bonds there will remain at the disposal of the Government $80,578,576 more than was reported in the Treasury March 4, 1885.

The same report shows that since the 1st of November last the Government has increased its stock of available gold $5,632,219, and has now $147,991,808 of gold not represented by the gold certificates. While the Government has been accumulating money in the Treasury, the national banks have been reducing their circulation. The reduction in national-bank circulation during the year was $17,712,645. The decrease of national-bank circulation, the accumulation of vast sums in the national Treasury, together with the threat to practically destroy $215,000,000 of silver and retire $346,000,000 greenbacks, justifies the money-holder in the belief that his money is to be appreciated in value by the reduction of the volume of money heretofore in use; and while so believing he will not invest his money, believing he will make a greater profit by its appreciation or rise than by investment. If he loans it, it will come back to him with increased purchasing power. If he invests it by an exchange for property, the property will depreciate by the appreciation of money.

We need have no difficulty in determining why the money-holder will loan, but not invest, and we need not resort to the hackneyed phrase "a want of confidence" to explain why, with an abundance of money, the industrial and commercial interests of the country lack proper financial support. When the people have demonstrated that they are stronger than Treasury officials, bankers, bank conventions, and clearing-houses, then will the money of the country return to its natural channels and be applied to its normal use, as the servant of commerce and trade. Commonly we speak of the divergence between gold and silver as a fall in the price of silver; when it is notorious that when we compare silver with other things except gold, silver has not fallen, and will buy more of all the necessaries and luxuries of life than it would in 1870, when sixteen ounces of silver would buy more than one ounce of gold.

The depreciation of silver has materially affected our exports of wheat and cotton, as it will all other exports of a character that must compete with exports from India and other countries using silver alone. The importation of wheat into Great Britain has been stimulated by the low price of silver, which is bought up at its bullion value, coined into rupees, and paid out at their full nominal value, received and accepted by the India wheat-raiser as full legal-tender money for the same quantity of wheat that he would have given when silver was worth 60 pence per ounce.

A few years since the imports of wheat into Great Britain from India was so small that it did not in any wise interfere with our exports of wheat to that country, yet within the last year such imports have amounted to nearly 40,000,000 bushels, and on account of such imports the American wheat-grower has lost a market for that amount. I clip the following from the Economist of September 12, 1885.

> It is consequently too early yet to assume that if the supplies of silver which the Treasury of the United States has been buying are diverted here the price of the metal must fall. Supposing, however, that a fall does take place, it is obvious that it will at once bring counteracting influences into play. On the one hand, it will tend to check the production of the metal, and on the other it will stimulate the export trade of India and other silver-using countries, and so increase their power to take silver. Every one who has given the subject the least attention knows how greatly the recent development of the Indian wheat trade has been due to the fall in silver, which has acted as a bounty upon exports, and to this and other industries a further depreciation of the metal would give a great stimulus.

Not only have the wheat-growers lost a market for their wheat, but the cotton market has also been affected in the same way, for the same reason given in the Economist for the increased export of wheat from India may be given for the marked increase of the imports of cotton and cotton yarn into Great Britain from that country. So long as English merchants and traders can buy silver at 47*d.* and pay it out at 59*d.* we may expect to see the imports into Great Britain from India increase and come into direct competition with our exports to that country. The loss of a market for 40,000,000 bushels of wheat has depreciated the price of all the wheat raised in this country. The same is true of the cotton crop.

If we include India and China in the list of silver-standard countries, fully one-half of the people of the world, in their commercial affairs, recognize silver as the valuable and stable money metal, and all payments must be made in it. Nearly 200,000,000 people besides use gold and silver interchangeably, both being legal-tender money metals. Less than one-half that number use gold exclusively as a legal-tender money. If we trade with China, Russia, Austria, British India, Egypt, Central America, Mexico, Ecuador, Peru, we must trade on a silver basis. On the double standard we may trade with all other nations save and except Great Britain, Canada, Cape of Good Hope, the Australian countries, the Netherlands, Germany, and the Scandinavian countries, and perhaps a few others, insignificant in a commercial sense.

The opponents of the unlimited coinage of silver declare that if adopted in the United States all the silver of the world will find its way to our mints to be coined into dollars; that these dollars will drive out all the gold; that we will be left with silver only. If the foreign holder of silver brings it to our mints and coins it into dollars the dollars so coined will be his property and not that of the United States or the people thereof. How can it be valuable to him over and above its bullion value except by its use here as money? If he wants to buy gold with it he must offer the American holder of gold so much silver that the holder of gold will consider the exchange a profitable transaction. Such exchange is wholly dependent on the consent of the holder of gold. His consent can not be obtained unless he sees it is to his interest to do so, and if it is to his interest, it can hardly be to the detriment of the rest of the people.

If the holder of the silver dollar can not buy gold on profitable terms he will not buy. Gold ought to be as valuable to the American holder as to the holder of silver coin, whether he be an American holder or a foreign holder. Why should the foreign holder of silver be willing to pay more for gold than our own people? The foreign holder of silver after having it coined at our mints must make use of it either by taking it out of the country, by hoarding it, or by its use here as money. If he takes it out of the country, no harm is done; if he hoards it, no one is injured here; if he uses it as money, he must either buy gold, American products, or invest it permanently in the country. In either case we shall get the full equivalent for his silver or he will decline to take it.

The only compulsory use that can be made of money is to pay debts, and if the holder of foreign silver is indebted here he may with his silver coin pay his debt, but he can not make us take it in exchange for gold or property unless he makes it to our interest to do so.

It is said that the debtor class will with our gold buy silver in the cheap silver markets, coin it into dollars, and pay their debt therewith.

Mr. President, more than 99 per cent. of all the debts contracted in the United States (not especially contracted to be paid in gold) were contracted with a provision that the debtor might use a silver dollar of 412½ grains to liquidate such debt; not a provision in the contract, but a provision of law, and still more binding than if inserted in the contract; so if the debtor class shall buy silver and pay their debts therewith, there can be no just cause of complaint. Since these debts were contracted the great fall in prices renders it exceedingly difficult for many debtors to pay, yet the creditor abates nothing of principal or interest; and why should he complain if the debtor, in strict compliance with the terms of his contract, pays the debt in silver? Such payment is not only honest and just in a commercial sense, but is consistent with the highest moral law. The senior Senator from Texas said a few days since "the honest dollar is the dollar of the contract, any other dollar is a dishonest dollar—if lighter, dishonest to the creditor; if heavier, dishonest to the debtor."

Is the creditor class the only class whose interests we are to consider in this legislation? Let us legislate also for the debtor, for the man without capital or with but little, and the man with capital who uses it in producing, who manufactures, who employs labor, and who enriches the country by the variety of his productions. The few debts contracted between 1873 and 1878 were not contracted to be paid in silver, but the legislation of 1878 provided that the last-mentioned debts might be paid in silver. I suppose no one will deny the right of the Government to so provide; for the opponents of legislation have been eversince demanding that the Government should declare all debts payable in gold alone, and if the authority exists to make gold the sole legal tender it will hardly be denied that the Government may make both gold and silver legal tender, for they are both money metals under the Constitution, and in that instrument gold is not placed above silver.

What will be the result of the passage of an act providing for the free and unlimited coinage of silver? It will encourage all the nations now using silver in a restricted way to give it its full money function by opening their mints to it as fully as they do to gold. It will provide for the consumption in a natural and legitimate way of all the silver produced in the United States and will bring silver back to its price before it was discredited and degraded as a money metal. It will stimulate commerce, trade, and industries of all kinds; it will open the closed manufactories and give employment to millions in shops, fields, and mines at remunerative wages, enabling them to buy the products of manufactories and farms. Good wages, steady employment, will follow for all classes who have labor to sell, and that class may be able to hoard silver and gold for time of need, instead of leaving all the hoarding to be done by bankers and moneyed kings.

There ought to be, and with prosperity there will be, millions of dollars, both gold and silver, hoarded by the laboring people of this country. Such hoarding is not to be feared; it ought to be encouraged. There ought to be at least three hundred millions hoarded in cellar and garret, in homes and shops, of the laboring men, who in times of business activity are neither rich nor poor.

When France was called on by Germany to pay the war indemnity, it was the laboring people, the small shop-owners, the men who cultivate a few acres of land, who came to the relief of the government. It was because France was rich in hoarded treasures held by her peasantry and laborers that she was able to meet so promptly the demand on her for more than $1,000,000,000. France, humiliated by her defeat, had the proud satisfaction of promptly paying that regal sum from the savings of her own people.

It is said silver will not circulate, therefore we must stop coinage. The $31,000,000 of silver certificates now in the Treasury are there because the Treasury Department does not intend to circulate silver either in fact or by the aid of certificates. Why not put out the certificates in payment of the daily expenses of the Government? Why not pay with silver certificates the many thousand employés of the Government here and elsewhere? Not one would object to a silver certificate. If they are not good enough for the bondholder, the laborer does not despise them. The mail contractor, the army contractor, the soldier, and Government employés at the various offices in the country will gladly take a silver certificate. It will buy for them as much of the necessaries and luxuries of life as a gold dollar.

Discredited as the silver dollar is by the Government and the national banks, it is in high favor with the great mass of the people. The farmer, the trader, the merchant, manufacturer, and laborer all take it and find it capable of discharging the full function of a dollar.

It is said if we can further debase and degrade silver as a money metal England, in the interests of her India possessions, will come to our relief and join us in fixing a ratio for it, and thus in the end help silver countries.

It is useless for the advocates of the suspension of coinage to tell us that such suspension will in the end compel all nations now using a gold standard, or a restricted silver standard, to adopt an unlimited silver standard, making silver interchangeable for gold. If this is their object, and this will be accomplished by the suspension of the coinage, why do all the monometallists in this country and England cry out for the suspension of the coinage? Do they hope and expect that the suspension of silver coinage will compel all nations ultimately to come to the double standard?

No, Mr. President; it is because they believe that suspension will degrade silver to such an extent that it will cease to be a money metal.

The present disturbed and excited state of the public mind at home and abroad concerning the continued use of silver as money in this country may be traced directly to the attacks made on the coinage act by Government officials. Every device and scheme that could disgrace and destroy silver, impair the confidence of the people in its continued use as a money metal, has had the sanction of the Treasury Department, if such devices and schemes did not originate with the Treasury officials themselves. From that Department has come the cry that silver and gold could not be made to circulate together, that the people would not take silver or silver certificates, when the records of that Department were full of proof of the willingness, nay, more, the desire of the people to use silver and silver certificates, and that they preferred it to gold.

If silver has shown a disposition to advance in price, the Treasury Department has refrained from buying until it began to recede and until its lowest price was reached. The savings by this course, amounting in fact to but a few thousand dollars, has been paraded before the country as one of the great achievements of the Administration. The people will hardly believe that aiding to depreciate silver and increase the divergence between it and gold is a virtue to boast of, even if the sum so saved did amount to the magnificent sum, as is alleged, of $7,000.

In July last the people of the United States were surprised, if not alarmed, at a statement made from the Treasury Department that the stock of gold in that Department was practically exhausted, and that unless such stock could be speedily replenished the Government would be compelled to pay interest on its bonded debt in silver dollars, and that by such a course the credit of the Government would be destroyed. The remedy for this anticipated evil was at hand and the danger could be averted—the honor of the Government saved by the suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar, and by that alone. It was at first thought in such an extreme case the Department would be justified in declaring that the appropriation to purchase silver in 1878 was not a continuing one, and that the Department might, for want of funds to buy bullion, discontinue the further coinage of the silver dollar. The public pulse was felt of on that point. Delicate and carefully phrased notices appeared in the public press suggesting that in the great emergency it might do to hold the appropriation was not a continuing one, and coinage might be suspended for want of funds.

But it was quite too apparent that the people would not submit to that, and so that scheme was abandoned. As the Treasury Department did not possess legislative powers, nothing could be done toward discontinuing the coinage of silver until Congress authorized it. But would Congress authorize such discontinuance? That was the question that disturbed the Treasury Department and the bankers. It was doubtful. It had been demonstrated that the House of Representatives was not so inclined even under executive pressure. If public sentiment could be created against a further coinage, Congress, recognizing the voice of the people as "the voice of God," might yield to the demand of constituents that denied to executive influence.

On the 13th day of July last there assembled in New York city the representatives of fifty-four national banks to consult and devise some scheme by which the Government could increase its stock of gold and avert the threatened disgrace of paying its debt in the coin it had stipulated to pay. The Treasurer of the United States was there as the representative of the Government. The fact of this assemblage, his presence there, and the purpose and objects of the meeting were telegraphed to all corners of the earth. All the nations of the world were informed of our dire distress and of the steps taken for our relief. The result of that conference is well known. The banks consented to deliver to the Government from ten to twenty million dollars in gold for like amount in subsidiary silver, and about six millions were so exchanged, for which ultimately, I believe, the banks received legal-tender notes and not subsidiary silver. It was declared that this was but a temporary expedient to save Government credit and honor until the coinage of silver could be discontinued by law.

What was the danger to be averted? Simply that the Government might not be compelled to pay in the very money it had stipulated to pay and the bondholder had agreed to receive. What was the effect of this unauthorized and unjustifiable procedure? It did not destroy our credit either at home or abroad; but it did weaken it and create distrust in the minds of the uninformed people, and doubtless did impair the confidence of the people in silver as a useful money metal. It was, in my judgment, a scheme concocted to frighten the people into the belief that the further coinage of silver was dangerous to the financial interests of the country. It has been the stock in trade of the opponents of the silver dollar ever since that if the banks had not advanced the gold the Government credit would have suffered, and that such threatened loss of credit was the result of the coinage of silver.

I consider it the most indefensible attack that has been made on Government credit since the war; and what makes it the more aggravating is that it came from Government officials and Government agencies. There was at no time necessity for such exchange. There was at the time of such exchange in the Treasury subject to the use of the Government to pay interest on the public debt or the debt itself $118,400,000 in gold; legal-tender notes, $14,800,000; national bank notes that could be readily turned into greenbacks and into gold, $2,500,000. Besides this there was $68,200,000 silver, or a total of $203,900,000. Or if we discard the silver as not to be paid out on interest on bonds, $135,700,000. I know it will be said that the $100,000,000, usually called the reserve to redeem greenbacks, could not be used except to redeem greenbacks. There is no law that requires the Treasury to hold $100,000,000 for that purpose. If it was thought necessary in 1879 and 1880 to do so, experience has demonstrated it is not now required.

The total redemption of greenbacks since January 1, 1879, has been only $15,676,286, of which amount more than $12,000,000 was redeemed within the first two years; for since December, 1881, the total amount of greenbacks redeemed has been only $3,608,000. Why keep on hand $100,000,000 when it is morally certain it will not be used to redeem greenbacks? No one now wants gold, and if the call should be made and the Treasury not prepared to pay, the authority exists to sell bonds for gold for the purpose of redeeming greenbacks. But if the holder of greenbacks calls on the Treasury to redeem the greenback, pay him in silver coin, in which the paper dollar is payable by law.

Mr. President, I am not ignorant of the fact that in the new system adopted by the Treasury Department in keeping its accounts the $100,000,000 of which I have spoken is put as a liability and not as one of the assets of the Government. It is said that we owe the greenbacks and that this is to pay them; therefore it is a liability, and according to that system of book-keeping the greater the amount of money the Government has on hand to redeem its paper money or pay its debts the greater its liability. If it had $346,000,000 in the Treasury with which to pay off the greenbacks the account would stand on the books a liability of $346,000,000. This kind of book-keeping is evidently the result of long experience in Wall street. This change in methods in keeping the books was for the purpose of deceiving the people as to the amount of available funds in the Treasury, as it will always show $100,000,000 less than is actually there. This desire to deceive the people as to the amount of money in the Treasury arises first out of a desire to accommodate the holders of the $194,000,000 of bonds now due and largely held by the banks, by not calling bonds for payment; and the other reason is that the people may be made to believe that there is danger in the continued coinage of silver.

I do not doubt but the Treasury officials believe that the continued accumulation and retention of vast sums in the Treasury is beneficial to the Government, and I doubt not they also believe that it is to the interest of the Government to discontinue the coinage of silver; but the error of these officials arises from the fact that they consult the national bankers and money-loaners and not the real business men of the country. They do not go beyond Wall street and other money-centers.

It has not occurred to them that the manufacturers, the farmers, men engaged in trade and commerce, might be as competent to instruct in matters of finance as the bankers or brokers.

Had the Government officials, with the coinage of the first dollar under the act of 1878, determined to make gold and silver interchangeable here, as it has been in France, we should have heard nothing about the danger of silver coinage, and the European countries would not be anticipating the suspension of coinage and the yearly addition of $25,000,000 of silver to the stock now being received. The dollars would have found their way into the hands of the people; would have gone into bank vaults, to be held for the time of need.

But we can not expect that the shoemaker, baker, and small shop-owner will accumulate or hoard a coin that not only the bankers but the Government officials declare is not honest money and must soon cease to possess the purchasing power of a dollar. Willing as they may be to handle it in daily use, they are not confident of its stability as money, and do not care to hoard it.

Mr. President, I do not demand a forced circulation for silver. I know it can not be forced against the wishes of commerce and trade. I recognize it as but the handmaid and servant of commerce, and that commerce will select its own agents wherewith to transact its business. What I do demand is that it shall have an equal chance with gold as a money metal. When this is given I shall abide by the decision of the commercial world. If silver is not capable of discharging the functions of a money metal to the satisfaction of the commercial world its friends must cease to defend it as a money metal. But we cry out against the outrage of closing the mints against its coinage, and the denial to it of the function of money, and then because it falls behind gold in popular estimate declare it is not fit for money. Let the advocates of gold give it a fair trial; coin it without limit on the same terms that gold is coined; give it the rights of money in all commercial transactions the same as is given to gold, and let the judgment of mankind be taken on its value as a money metal and not that of the few who are interested in its destruction or those who from prejudice may cry out against it.

Do not allow Government officials to discredit it. Do not allow Government agents, the national banks, to refuse to receive it on deposit. Let the debtor class understand that payment in it is a just and fair transaction within the letter and spirit of the law. Convince the people that its enemies are not strong enough to strike it down as a money metal; that it will continue, as it has done heretofore, to be used by seven-eighths of the race as a legal-tender money metal, and by all as valuable for either large or small transactions. When that is done it will resume its old place as the favorite money metal of commerce, and will be as eagerly sought for, cherished, and hoarded by the rich as by the poor.

Mr. President, it will be said that I am not an unprejudiced advocate of silver, that the interests of the State I in part represent have warped my judgment or aroused my cupidity in her behalf. It is true that Colorado produces about one-fourth of the world's production of silver, but the question whether silver shall be used or not used as money is of but little more importance to Colorado than other States. It is not a question as to how much the silver producer shall receive per ounce for his silver, but a question of how much or how little money the business of the country and the whole world must be transacted with. Shall it be with both money metals or shall it be with one? Shall it be with all the money of the world or only with one-half? It comprehends more than the interests of the silver miners of Colorado or all the silver miners of the world. It is a question that comes home to nine-tenths of the human race and affects their daily existence. It is a bigger question than that of party or administration, and in the presence of its overwhelming importance party pride, prejudice, passion, and hate ought to disappear. It goes beyond territorial boundaries; it takes in the whole world and all peoples.

I do not, therefore, speak in the interest of any special class of laborers or producers, but in the interest of all who toil, labor, and produce; who create by their labor all the wealth of the world; the people who do not stand in high places, whose voices may not be heard in bankers' conventions, but who are factors in all the great commercial and industrial pursuits of the world; who, with fertile brains, skillful hands, and cunning fingers, fashion the many articles of necessity and luxury in daily use; who rend from the reluctant earth the hidden treasures thereof and compel the unwilling fields to yield a bounteous harvest, or toil amid the clanging of machinery in mill and shop, and with patience, frugality, and courage combat and overcome adverse circumstances and fortunes; and while not possessing all the culture of the age, exemplify the many sterling virtues of the race and do much toward keeping alive sentiments of honesty, justice, and truth—as mighty in numbers as modest in aspirations; not ignorant of their strength; conservative in their methods; loyal to order and good government; forbearing and enduring, yet when aroused in defense of their rights of justice and truth, know how to compel respect for and obedience to their will.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. MORRILL addressed the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Understanding that our friends on the other side desire to adjourn at this time, I was about to move an adjournment, but I yield to my colleague, who wishes to give a notice.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desire to take the floor to say that rather reluctantly I shall feel it my duty to ask the attention of the Senate to-morrow for an hour on this subject, which seems to attract such an enthusiastic crowd of Senators here—I mean the resolution of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I renew my motion that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Pending the motion the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President and the decision of questions arising thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 19, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. S. K. COX, of Washington, D. C.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent that the reading of so much of the Journal as relates to the introduction and reference of bills and joint resolutions be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk then resumed and concluded the reading of the remainder of the Journal, which was approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HIESTAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask by unanimous consent at this time to have the reference of a bill changed.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the Chair must first lay before the House executive communications upon the Speaker's table for reference.

LIST OF CLAIMS ALLOWED SINCE JANUARY 1, 1885.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a list of claims, with the papers in each allowance, since January 1, 1885, arising under the act of July 4, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

UNITED STATES POST-OFFICE, POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Supervising Architect of an appropriation of $10,000 for approaches to the United States post-office at Poughkeepsie, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

WATER SUPPLY, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the Chief of Engineers asking an appropriation for the work of increasing the water supply in Washington, D. C.; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF SACO RIVER, MAINE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report from the acting Chief of Engineers of a survey of Saco River, Maine; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

LIGHT-HOUSE DEPOT, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report from the Light-House Board asking an appropriation of $5,000 for a depot for the fourteenth light-house district, and an appropriation for the light-house tender Lilie; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MISSOURI RIVER COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the acting Chief of Engineers, with a report of the Missouri River Commission, recommending an immediate appropriation; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

UNSETTLED ACCOUNTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the First Comptroller of the Treasury, transmitting a list of officers who have failed to make settlement of their accounts for the last fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

SURVEYS OF MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the acting Chief of Engineers and a supplementary report from the Mississippi River Commission recommending an immediate appropriation of $50,000 for the general work of surveys; which was referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER. There are on the table a number of executive communications, which were presented to the House before the committees were appointed or authorized to be appointed, and if there be no objection the Chair will at this time cause them to be properly referred.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The communications were severally referred as follows:

A communication from the clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting statement of the judgments rendered during the year ended November 30, 1885—to the Committee on Appropriations.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of the damage by storm to Governor's Island, New York Harbor, and asking an appropriation for continuing sea-wall around the island—to the Committee on Appropriations.

A letter from the chairman of the Joint Commission for the Completion of the Washington Monument, transmitting his annual report—to the Committee on Appropriations.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relating to the trial and punishment of Indians committing certain specified crimes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a report of the board of managers of the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition held at New Orleans from December 16, 1884, to May 31, 1885—to the Committee on Commerce.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior upon the subject of a draught of a bill to amend section 5388 of the Revised Statutes relating to timber depredations upon lands reserved or purchased for Indian, military, or other purposes—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of expenditures at the Springfield armory for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, and of arms manufactured and repaired during that fiscal year—to the Committee on Appropriations.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior in relation to the draught of a bill for the relief of the Mission Indians in California—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting detailed estimates of the cost of protecting roads and public buildings at Fort Canby, Washington Territory, against the waters of Baker's Bay—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of inspection of money accounts of disbursing officers for the year ended June 30, 1885—to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department.

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting letters of Joseph Rawicz, United States consul at Warsaw, and recommending the passage of a bill granting him permission to accept certain decorations conferred by the Russian Government—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting petition of cadets of the United States Military Academy, praying for legislation that will secure them appointments in the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior in relation to the draught of a bill to provide for the settlement of estates of deceased Kickapoos in Kansas, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relating to Indians on the Yakima reservation, in Washington Territory—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the right of way for the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railway through the Lake Traverse reservation, in Dakota—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relative to the failure of the Utah and Northern Railroad Company to compensate the Indians on the Fort Hall reservation for lands taken—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relative to a right of way to the Jamestown and Northern Railway Company through the Devil's Lake Indian reservation, in Dakota—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relative to a right of way to the Canyon and Colorado Railroad Company through the Walker River reservation, in Nevada—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A message from the President of the United States, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of the Interior relating to trespasses on Indian lands—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a memorial from Col. T. G. Baylor, of the Ordnance Department, and recommending he be relieved of the item of $431.69 charged against him on the books of the Treasury—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On the motion of Mr. DOWDNEY, by unanimous consent leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of George H. Mitchell, M. D., without leaving copies on file.

On the motion of Mr. MAYBURY, by unanimous consent leave was given to withdraw from the file-room papers therein in the matter of the claim of the heirs of William Burt, inventor of the solar compass.

On motion of Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the Thirty-sixth Congress in the case of John Tubbs without leaving copies on file.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DIBBLE for five days.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 1576) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Allcock, introduced on the 5th instant, was improperly referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. If there be no objection the reference will be made to the Committee on Pensions.

There was no objection.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BUCHANAN. On the 5th instant I introduced a bill (H. R. 1498) extending the provisions and benefits of the act approved August 7, 1882, entitled "An act to relieve certain soldiers of the late war from the charge of desertion" to certain named recruits serving in the said war. The bill was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. The proper reference is to the Committee on Naval Affairs. I ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HIESTAND. On the 6th instant the bill (H. R. 1980) for the relief of Richard C. Ridgway and others was introduced by my colleague, Mr. KELLEY, and was referred to the Committee on Claims. I ask that the Committee on Claims be discharged from further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, which is the proper committee under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. COX. I object, Mr. Speaker, unless some sufficient reason can be given for the proposed change of reference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] objects, unless reason can be given. The gentleman who desires the change of reference can make a brief statement, if he desires.

Mr. HIESTAND. The reason is, Mr. Speaker, that in former Congresses this matter has been considered by the Committee on Ways and Means, and that committee thoroughly understands it; whereas if it be now referred to the Committee on Claims they will have to go over the whole subject again. I wish the bill referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, because that committee has already examined it and because the documents relating to the subject are also in possession of that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that under the amended rules, adopted at the present session, bills of this character must go to the Committee on Claims, unless by unanimous consent of the House, which was not the rule of the House when the bill was heretofore referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HIESTAND. Well, Mr. Speaker, I now ask unanimous consent that the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. COX. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. BEACH. I object, Mr. Speaker; and I desire to give notice now that I shall object to the introduction of all bills and resolutions except on the day set apart for that order of business.

CORRECTION.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the RECORD corrected. On page 692 it is stated that the minority report, or the amendment suggested by the minority report to the Presidential succession bill, was agreed to. It was not agreed to. It was voted down.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, as a parliamentary inquiry, I desire to ask whether these corrections of the RECORD can not be made without a motion in open House. In other words, where there is a variance between the Journal and the RECORD can not the correction be made without occupying the time of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is the custom of the Official Reporters of the debates to keep at their desk a copy of the RECORD of the preceding day and to make such corrections as members may desire upon that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then it is unnecessary to make a motion or to ask permission of the House to correct the RECORD if it can be done by calling upon the Reporters.

The SPEAKER. Where the Reporter is satisfied that a mistake has been made the Chair thinks he has the right to correct it; but if there should be a difference of opinion about it, the Chair supposes that then the House would have to order the correction.

CLERK COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the following resolution of Mr. EUSTACE GIBSON:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be allowed a clerk during the session, and that he be paid $6 a day as compensation for his services," have considered the same, and respectfully report adversely to the same.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, after due consideration of the subject, the Committee on Accounts assigned clerks to the several committees of the House wherever they believed them to be necessary. In that action the committee did what they supposed would best subserve the business of the House, and they can not now change their conclusion by granting a clerk to this committee. They have therefore instructed me to report the resolution adversely for such action as the House may think proper.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will offer as a substitute for the report of the committee the original resolution, namely: "Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be allowed a clerk during the session, and that he be paid $6 a day as compensation for his services." On that resolution I ask the forbearance of the House for a few minutes while I explain the situation of this committee.

The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice is composed of members every one of whom has been assigned to other important duties, so that there is not a single member on that committee who, without neglecting other duties imposed upon him by the House, can give the time and attention required to make the investigation of the records of the Department that are necessary to be made in order to give the House such information as it desires. In addition to that, this committee is charged under the rules of the House with the examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several Departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same; the economy, justness, and correctness of such expenditures; their conformity with appropriation laws; the proper application of public moneys; the security of the Government against unjust and extravagant demands; retrenchment; the enforcement of the payments of moneys due to the United States; the economy and accountability of public officers; the abolishment of useless offices; the reduction or increase of pay of officers. The rule provides that these shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the eight standing committees on the public expenditures in the several Departments.

One of those eight is the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of State; to that committee a clerk has been allowed by the Committee on Accounts. Another is the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department; to that committee a clerk has been allowed by the Committee on Accounts. Another is the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department; to that committee a clerk has been allowed by the Committee on Accounts. Another is the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department; to that committee a clerk has been allowed by the Committee on Accounts. Another is the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department; that committee also has been allowed a clerk. Another is the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department; to that committee also a clerk has been allowed. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice is the only one of these eight standing committees, all of equal dignity, to which a clerk is refused, although the services of a clerk are absolutely necessary for the proper performance of the duties of the committee.

Now I desire to say to the House that I have already some little insight into the examination of these records and some idea of the labor it involves. At the last session of this House, for my own information, I undertook to examine the workings of the department of justice of my own State, and I know that it required nearly the whole of the session for me to trace the operations of that department in that one State. Such an inquiry as this committee is required to make involves an investigation of the expenditures of every circuit and district court in the United States; it involves an examination of expenditures by subordinate officers as well as by the Department in Washington, and to get at this information it is necessary to examine and collate the reports of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue as well as the reports of the Department of Justice itself upon the suits instituted under the internal-revenue laws. So that it is utterly impossible that there can be any intelligent investigation or any trustworthy information given to this House upon the subjects under the jurisdiction of this committee without the services not only of a clerk, but of a very intelligent, competent, and experienced clerk. Many difficult questions come up in such an investigation, questions as to what suits should be brought, as to what sort of suits should be brought, as to the fees of officers, and so on, and I want to say to this House that if they expect this committee to be able to make any intelligent investigation or report they must give us a clerk who shall be under the control of the committee and competent to aid it in the discharge of its duties.

I make no reflection upon other committees, nor do I undertake to raise the dignity of the committee of which I am a member above any other; but I appeal to every member's sense of duty to the country and his sense of justice to this committee to give it a clerk.

Mr. SPRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, the whole matter referred to by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] has been under consideration by our committee, and I can only say that we did what in our judgment seemed best in regard to assigning clerks to these committees.

If any other gentleman desires to speak I will yield the floor; otherwise, I move the previous question.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice having been worked so hard in the last Congress, it was determined, as I understand, to let it lie fallow in this. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The same rule might apply to every other committee that had a clerk in the last Congress; and therefore we should have no clerks to any of these committees, but simply take the reports of the last Congress for our action.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I should think that might probably be so.

Mr. HERBERT. I would like to say a word on this question.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that some of the most important legislation proposed in this Congress has been referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice—legislation relating to marshals and commissioners, to district attorneys and their fees; and for my part I can not see why a distinction has been made between the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice and the committees on expenditures in other Departments. I hope this House will grant this committee a clerk just as it has granted a clerk to all similar committees, unless some good reason should be shown why a clerk should not be allowed in this particular case. I do not belong to this committee, but I am very much interested, and I think the whole country is interested, in some of the legislation that it has before it.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I now call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; the first question being upon the amendment proposed by Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, as a substitute.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 106, noes 51.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 128, nays 119, not voting 77; as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, was agreed to.

The following pairs were announced:

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. WEST, until further notice.

Mr. HILL with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. AIKEN with Mr. KELLEY, until further notice.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. WARD, of Indiana, on this vote.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. GOFF, for to-day.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The question being taken on agreeing to the report of the committee as amended, it was agreed to.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON LEVEES AND IMPROVEMENT OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. SPRIGGS. I have another privileged report, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred the resolution of Mr. KING, as follows—

"Resolved, That the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River be allowed a clerk, and that he be paid the usual compensation for his services"— have considered the same, and respectfully report adversely to the same.

Mr. KING. I offer the following as a substitute for the resolution reported by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River be allowed a clerk, and that he be paid the usual compensation for his services.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I do not hesitate to state to the House that the usual apprehension indulged by members that clerks for committees are used for personal purposes need not lodge in this case. I make no reflections, but I wish to say that it has never been my practice when chairman of a committee of this body to use a committee clerk in any way in my personal service. Now I am convinced this committee was created by this House for a purpose, and that purpose can only be served by having the services of a competent clerk. To call the committee together alone requires the writing of twelve letters or notices. That committee has been intrusted with a part of the work—the levees—which is considered by the engineers indispensable to improve the navigation of the Mississippi, the greatest river on the continent.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Do I understand the gentleman from Louisiana to say his committee needed a clerk to call it together?

Mr. KING. I did so state, and I thought the gentleman from Indiana would so understand. I said that to call the committee together alone necessitates the writing of twelve letters or notices. To impose this upon the chairman of the committee and the other work that devolves upon a clerk is more than is just, and I do not believe this House intends it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. The inquiry I desired to make, Mr. Speaker, was whether it would not be the principal duty of the clerk of the committee to call the committee together?

Mr. KING. If the gentleman was ignorant of the duties of that committee, I would say no. I will invite him, however, to attend a meeting of the committee, that he may be enlightened as to its duties and labors. He is a resident of a Western State, deeply concerned in the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi. To carry out the work of the committee, it is proposed that a series of investigations shall be conducted and measures introduced which will require daily meetings and an amount of clerical work which no chairman can be expected to perform.

The committee was created for a purpose—a great purpose—the purpose of helping in the improvement of the Mississippi River. I hope the House will aid the committee in the performance of that duty by granting it a clerk who can at all times be at the command of the committee.

Mr. SPRIGGS. In reference to this clerk, Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what was said before, that the Committee on Accounts did not deem it essential this committee should have a separate clerk. We gave the Committee on Mines and Mining a clerk and directed that the clerk should also act as clerk for this Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River when required. This committee, I understand, has not been called together yet, and they have no reason to suppose the clerk we gave them will not act and do what is required. Still, we did the same thing for the other committee, and it is now a question for the House. The committee could not take the responsibility of giving to each one of these committees a clerk, which we did not think had anything particular to do to require a clerk. As I said, however, it is now a question for the House to settle.

The question recurred on Mr. KING'S substitute; and on a division there were—ayes 44, noes 62.

Mr. KING demanded tellers.

The SPEAKER. Nineteen have voted in the affirmative—not a sufficient number.

So the substitute was rejected.

The report of the committee was then adopted.

Mr. SPRIGGS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution of the committee was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CALL OF COMMITTEES FOR REPORTS.

The SPEAKER next, under the rule, proceeded to call standing and select committees for reports.

GEORGE S. HUNT & CO.

Mr. REED, of Maine, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 1005) for the relief of George S. Hunt & Co.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PHINNEY & JACKSON.

Mr. REED, of Maine, from the Committee on Ways and Means, also reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 1006) for the relief of Phinney & Jackson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the bill and report ordered to be printed (Mr. REED, of Maine, being granted, by unanimous consent, leave to file the report hereafter).

DUDLEY HALL & CO.

Mr. REED, of Maine, from the Committee on Ways and Means, also reported back favorably a bill (H. R. 1007) for the relief of Dudley Hall & Co.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD G. W. BUTLER.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 987, a bill (H. R. 4409) to remove the disabilities of Edward G. W. Butler, of Missouri; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. House bill 987, for which the bill just reported is a substitute, will be laid upon the table, if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ADDITIONAL COPIES REVISED STATUTES FOR LIBRARY.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back with favorable recommendation a resolution requesting the Secretary of State to transmit to the House 100 copies of the second edition of the Revised Statutes and Supplement thereto, to be placed in the Library; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS FOR WAR TAXES.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back the bill (H. R. 3) to prevent the claim of the war taxes under the act of August 5, 1861, and acts amendatory thereof, by the United States as set-off against States having claims against the General Government; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire at some later date to present the views of the minority of the committee on this bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. I would ask the gentleman how long this will delay the consideration of the bill? I shall object to "some future" time, but if some reasonable time is suggested I shall not object.

Mr. HEPBURN. In a reasonable time.

Mr. HAMMOND. Well, how much?

Mr. HEPBURN. Probably during the next week.

Mr. HAMMOND. Very well; I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, leave will be granted to the minority to file its views, to be printed with the report of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

NATIONAL BANK, WINONA, MINN.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (S. 126) to change the name of the National Bank of Winona; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILKINS. I am also directed by the committee to report back House bill 1253, to change the name of the National Bank of Winona, Minn., with the recommendation that it lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. That order will be made.

MERCHANTS' NATIONAL BANK, LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

Mr. DINGLEY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 382) to authorize the Merchants' National Bank of Little Rock, Ark., to change its name to the First National Bank of Little Rock; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Mr. SNYDER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1260) to authorize an increase of the capital stock of the First National Bank of Minneapolis, Minn., not to exceed $2,000,000; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANK OF LINCOLN, PA.

Mr. BRADY, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 2139) authorizing the National Bank of Lincoln, Pa., to change its location and name; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HIESTAND. Mr. Speaker, I move that that bill be referred back to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as I filed this morning a petition against the removal, signed by a majority of the company.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order during this call to move to recommit a bill. When it comes before the House, a motion will then be in order for its recommitment with or without instructions. The committee can withdraw the bill if it is desired.

Mr. BRADY. I desire to state in behalf of the committee that the matter suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been attended to in one of the amendments the committee recommend to this bill.

PURCHASE OF OLD PRODUCE EXCHANGE BUILDING, NEW YORK.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 671) making an appropriation for the purchase of the old Produce Exchange building and the site bounded by Whitehall, Pearl, Moore, and Water streets, New York city, for Army purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 67) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask consent on behalf of the minority to present its views and file them in connection with the report of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

JOHN HOLLINS M'BLAIR.

Mr. CUTCHEON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (S. 193) for the relief of John Hollins McBlair; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

Mr. WOLFORD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FORFEITURE OF LAND GRANTS.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 392) declaring forfeited certain grants of land made to certain States in aid of the construction of railroads; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PLANTS AND SHRUBS FOR NEW PENSION BUILDING.

Mr. REESE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the joint resolution (H. Res. 71), authorizing the Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds in the District of Columbia to supply plants and shrubs to fill certain vases in the Pension building; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Joint resolution (H. Res. 54) to credit Lieuts. Giles B. Harber and William H. Schuetze with sea-duty and sea pay while engaged in the search for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also for the time employed in bringing home the remains of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and party.

WRECK OF EXPLORING STEAMER JEANNETTE.

On motion of Mr. HERBERT, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Naval Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of a bill of the following title; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (H. R. 1620) to fix and determine the date of the decease of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of the exploring steamer Jeannette in the arctic seas.

The call of standing and select committees and of the commissions and committee authorized by the statute to report to the House was continued and concluded, no further reports being presented.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the rule, the Chair will now call the committees for the consideration of bills or resolutions heretofore reported. The hour begins at seven minutes before 2 o'clock.

Mr. WILKINS (when the Committee on Banking and Currency was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up Senate bill No. 126, reported this morning from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order, as the bill was only reported to-day. Under the rule a committee during this hour has the right to call up any bill reported by it on a previous day.

RELIEF OF CHEYENNES IN MONTANA.

Mr. NELSON (when the Committee on Indian Affairs was called). I call up for present consideration the joint resolution reported yesterday by the Committee on Indian Affairs—joint resolution (H. Res. 91) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to use certain unexpended balances for the relief of the Northern Cheyennes in Montana.

The SPEAKER. This resolution is in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. EDEN in the chair), and proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use out of the unexpended balance of the $50,000 appropriated in the act making appropriations for the Indian service for the fiscal year 1886, approved March 3, 1885, to supply food and other necessities of life in cases of distress among Indians not having treaty funds, the sum of $12,000; and so much thereof as may be necessary to relieve the distress now existing among the Northern Cheyennes, on the Rosebud and Tongue Rivers, in Montana, and to furnish them with such food and other necessary articles as may be required. And in expending such amount he is authorized, if necessary, to purchase supplies in open market to an extent not exceeding $5,000.

Mr. NELSON. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to make a brief explanation of the matter involved, or of this joint resolution. On the 14th of December the President of the United States sent a special message, in writing, to Congress, calling attention to the fact that there were great suffering and distress among the Cheyenne Indians in the Territory of Montana, on the Rosebud and Tongue Rivers. There are about seven hundred of these Indians, and they are in distress and in a destitute condition, with the annuities granted to them last year entirely exhausted.

The last Indian appropriation bill contained a general contingency appropriation in this language:

To supply food and other necessaries of life in cases of distress among the Indians not having treaty funds, arising from emergencies not foreseen or otherwise provided for, to be used at the discretion of the President, $50,000; and a report of the expenditures under this provision shall be made to Congress at its next session thereafter.

This is a sort of contingent appropriation of $50,000, but it is not available for this particular case of distress of the seven hundred Indians, for the reason they are annuity Indians. They have annuities, but these annuities are entirely exhausted, and the object of the joint resolution is to authorize $12,000 of this $50,000 to be used for their relief. It involves no new appropriation, but simply gives the right to use a portion of this contingent $50,000 appropriation for this case of emergency and distress.

That it is a case of great emergency appears further from the fact that on the 9th of the present month the Secretary of the Interior again called the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs to this subject. And this resolution has been prepared under the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

If no one objects to the passage of the joint resolution, or wishes to make remarks on the subject, I will move the committee rise and report it back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall not offer any objection to the joint resolution, but I wish to remark that I hope the time is not far distant when the Government will adopt a sensible policy toward these Indians and all other Indians under our jurisdiction. The uncivilized Indians are not self-supporting, nor will they ever be. They are chiefly found lying around agencies, dependent on the Government for their support. They are allowed to occupy 134,000,000 acres of land, very little of which they cultivate, and there are but 260,000 Indians, all told, under the jurisdiction of the United States.

I do hope the present policy may speedily be abandoned, and that some sensible policy may be adopted by the Government in treating with these wards of the nation. Gratuity appropriations can only be justified on the ground that the Indians are wards of the Government. Let a policy be adopted that will make them citizens under such safeguards as will insure their proper protection and bring them in proper relations to the Government and their white neighbors.

I will vote for the joint resolution, but I do hope for the inauguration of a wiser policy.

Mr. WELLBORN. The clear statement made of the necessities of this case by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was not heard by some gentlemen on this side of the House, and they have requested me simply to state the exigencies which require the passage of this resolution. As stated by the gentleman from Minnesota, the President of the United States on the 16th of last month sent in a special message to Congress urging immediate action in this matter. On the 7th of the present month, the day the committees in this House were announced, the Secretary of the Interior addressed to the chairman of the Indian Committee an urgent communication setting forth the necessity for immediate action.

Now the facts are just these: In the last Indian appropriation bill $50,000 were set apart as a fund to be used in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to relieve the distress of those Indians to whom no annuities were due from the Government. A portion of that $50,000 is yet unexpended. These Montana Indians, numbering about seven hundred, have small annuities, but they are totally exhausted, and they are now in a distressed, perilous, and probably starving condition; so that the Indians in question, while they come within the spirit of the appropriation of last year, are excluded from any participation in its benefits by a strict construction of the terms in which the appropriation was couched. All that this resolution does is to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to use the sum of $12,000 of that money for the immediate relief of the distress now prevailing among the Indians. It is eminently a proper resolution, and humanity demands its immediate passage.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I now renew my motion that the committee rise and report the joint resolution favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. EDEN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the joint resolution (H. Res. 91) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to use certain unexpended balances for the relief of the North Cheyennes in Montana had directed him to report the same to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the joint resolution to be engrossed and read a third time.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested, namely:

A bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (S. 31) appointing John F. Hartranft manager of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

FOURTH OF JULY CLAIMS.

The Committee on War Claims was called.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on War Claims, I desire to call up for immediate action the bill containing the claims reported by the accounting officers of the Treasury, known as the 4th of July claims.

The SPEAKER. That bill is on the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GEDDES. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that this bill has not yet reached the House from the Government Printing Office.

Mr. GEDDES. That will of course postpone the consideration of the bill until to-morrow. I therefore withdraw it for the present.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Will that bill come up hereafter as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. It will not. The gentleman simply withdraws the proposition to take it up for consideration to-day. It can be called up again as soon as the committee is reached in the call of committees.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The call of committees was resumed and concluded.

MEMORIAL STATUE OF JAMES A. GARFIELD.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the Senate concurrent resolutions relating to the statue of the late President James A. Garfield for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions referred to by the gentleman from Ohio were laid before the House on the 6th of the present month by the Chair, and by unanimous consent were laid on the table for the present, with the understanding that they would be called up at a future day for consideration. If there be no objection they will be now taken up.

There was no objection.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolutions be read, as also the letter from the governor of the State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
January 5, 1886.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the thanks of Congress be presented to the governor, and through him to the people, of Ohio for the statue of James A. Garfield whose name is so honorably identified with the history of that State and of the United States.

Resolved, That this work of art is accepted in the name of the nation, and assigned a place in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, already set aside by act of Congress for statues of eminent citizens, and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, be transmitted to the governor of the State of Ohio.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I ask that the letter of the governor be also read.

The Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF OHIO, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF GOVERNOR,
Columbus, December 10, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that, in acceptance of the invitation contained in section 1814 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, the State of Ohio, in pursuance of an act of its General Assembly, has caused to be made by the sculptor, Carl H. Nichaus, and placed in the old Hall of the House of Representatives, in the Capitol of the United States, in the custody of the Architect of the Capitol, a marble statue of that illustrious and lamented citizen of Ohio James A. Garfield, late President of the United States.

This work is now presented to the Congress of the United States as one of the statues contributed by the State of Ohio in pursuance of this invitation. It is hoped that it may be found worthy of acceptance and approval as a fit contribution from this State to the United States, in whose service President Garfield passed so much of his life, and whose chief executive officer he was at the time of his death.

Very respectfully,

GEO. HOADLY, Governor of Ohio.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, as others will speak upon this resolution my words will be few.

James A. Garfield was born of a sturdy, self-reliant parentage. With "a sound mind in a sound body," he commenced life under favorable auspices; so poor as to be mainly self-dependent, but untouched by distressing poverty—a condition favorable to development and success under the influence of free institutions; one not waited upon by indolence or pleasure, but where hope abides. From the time he first attracted attention Garfield's course was onward and upward, his motto and his life "Excelsior." Labor and genius placed him in and fitted him for every position he ever occupied. Indeed, work was his ladder, and by it he reached the highest eminence. As student, soldier, statesman, it was the sign by which he conquered, and by it he achieved all his successes, various and great as they were. He was never a laggard, but ever striving to learn, he was always learning. His eyes were always open, and he saw the wayside flower as well as the distant mountain.

In his public life he was devoted to principle, resolute in the discharge of duty, diligent, informed, able, and eloquent to the point where he had few equals. Conciliating to opponents, refined in speech, courteous in manner, with a bounteous fund of loving kindness, he had the respect of friend and foe.

He loved his State as a son his mother, and the country with undying devotion.

This occasion does not permit me to dwell upon the purity or greatness of his character, or to speak in detail of his services, known of all men; but those who knew him well, and their name is legion (for none was so easily known, few so difficult to forget), turn to his private life with joy and pride. There he was seen at his best. The domestic side of that life I do not here touch. It was simply so perfect that concerning it language fails to convey ideas.

That life is the enduring pride of his people; in it he raised up such friends as few can boast; they came in troops and battalions, and never in his life or since have they broken their allegiance. Even now they mourn him with a grief that finds no comfort.

The people of Ohio appreciated him from the first, and they stood about him like a wall of defense; and now, prompted by gratitude, admiration, and love, they have, through their Legislature and authorities, caused to be made a marble statue, representing as well as marble may the well-loved son of that State, the citizen, soldier, statesman, president, Garfield; have placed it in the Hall of the old House of Representatives, and ask Congress in behalf of the American people to accept it as theirs, and to allow it to remain till it also turns to dust.

The statue now stands so near the way through which Mr. Garfield, as member of this House for almost eighteen years, daily passed to reach this Hall that one standing there may almost touch it with his hand as it seems to gaze toward the Senate, which he had a commission to enter, but did not, because the nation said to him, "Go up higher."

He stands among the fathers of the Republic, by the side of their great successors, and in the presence of some of his contemporary patriots. The martyr President is not far away.

In this exalted company President Garfield is not out of place. He came last into it, but he there greets only his peers. His compatriots who are "standing in that silent senate of the dead," if in life, would recognize the fitness of the association—none more readily than his old friend the matchless orator of Gettysburg, the liberator President, the immortal Lincoln.

Accept, then, Ohio's gift, "the image in enduring marble" of one she loved so well, tendered as it is with her patriotic aspirations for the prosperity, the happiness, and the continuance of the great American Union, "one and inseparable, now and forever."

I now yield so much time as he may desire to my colleague, Mr. McKINLEY.

Mr. McKINLEY, Mr. Speaker, complying with an act of Congress passed July, 1864, inviting each of the States of the Union to present to National Statuary Hall the statues of two of its deceased citizens "illustrious for their heroic renown, or distinguished by civic or military services" worthy of national commemoration, Ohio brings her first contribution in the marble statue of James Abram Garfield. There were other citizens of Ohio earlier associated with the history and progress of the State and illustrious in the nation's annals who might have been fitly chosen for this exalted honor. Governors, United States Senators, members of the supreme judiciary of the nation, closely identified with the growth and greatness of the State, who fill a large space in their country's history; soldiers of high achievement in the earlier and later wars of the Republic; cabinet ministers, trusted associates of the martyred Lincoln, who had developed matchless qualities and accomplished masterly results in the nation's supreme crisis; but from the roll of illustrious names the unanimous voice of Ohio called the youngest and latest of her historic dead, the scholar, the soldier, the national Representative, the United States Senator-elect, the President of the people, the upright citizen, and the designation is everywhere received with approval and acclaim.

By the action of the authorities of the State he loved so well and served so long, and now by the action of the National Congress in which he was so long a conspicuous figure, he keeps company to-day with "the immortal circle" in the old Hall of Representatives, which he was wont to call the "Third House," where his strong features and majestic form, represented in marble, will attract the homage of the present and succeeding generations, as in life his great character and commanding qualities earned the admiration of the citizens of his own State and the nation at large, while the lessons of his life and the teachings of his broad mind will be cherished and remembered when marble and statues have crumbled to decay.

General Garfield was born on the 19th day of November, 1831, in the village of Orange, in Northern Ohio, and died at Elberon, in the State of New Jersey, on the 19th day of September, 1881. His boyhood and youth differed little from others of his own time. His parents were not opulent. He worked from an early age, like most Western boys of that period. He was neither ashamed nor afraid of manual labor, and engaged in it resolutely for the means to maintain and educate himself. He entered Williams College, in the State of Massachusetts, in 1854, and graduated with honor two years later, when he assumed charge of Hiram College, in his own State.

In 1859 he was elected to the senate of Ohio, being its youngest member. Strong men were his associates in that body, and have since held high stations in the public service. Some of them were his colleagues here. In this, his first political office, he displayed a high order of ability, and developed some of the great qualities which afterward distinguished his illustrious career.

In August, 1861, he entered the Union Army, and in September following was commissioned colonel of the Forty-second Ohio Infantry Volunteers. He was promoted successively brigadier and major general of the United States Volunteers, and while yet in the Army was elected to Congress, remaining in the field more than a year after his election, and resigning only in time to take his seat in the House December 7, 1863. His military service secured him his first national prominence. He showed himself competent to command in the field, although without previous training. He could plan battles and fight them successfully. As an officer he was exceptionally popular, beloved by his men, many of whom were his former students, respected and honored by his superiors in rank, and his martial qualities and gallant behavior were more than once commended in general orders and rewarded by the Government with well-merited promotion.

He was brave and sagacious. He filled every post with intelligence and fidelity, and directed the movement of troops with judgment and skill. Distinguished as was his military career, which in itself would have given him a proud place in history, his most enduring fame, his highest renown was earned in this House as a representative of the people. Here his marvelous qualities were brought into full activity, here he grew with gradual but ever-increasing strength, here he won his richest laurels, here was the scene and center of his greatest glory. Here he was leader and master, not by combination or scheming, not by chicane or caucus, but by the force of his cultivated mind, his keen and far-seeing judgment, his unanswerable logic, his strength and power of speech, his thorough comprehension of the subjects of legislation. Always strong, he was strongest on his feet, addressing the House, or from the rostrum, the assembled people. Who of us having heard him here or elsewhere, speaking upon a question of great national concern, can forget the might and majesty, the force and directness, the grace and beauty of his utterances. He was always just to his adversary, an open and manly opponent, and free from invective. He convinced the judgment with his searching logic, while he swayed his listeners with brilliant periods and glowing eloquence. He was always an educator of the people. His thoughts were fresh, vigorous, and instructive.

In running over his public service here, covering a period of nearly eighteen years, crowding page after page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I have sought to settle in my own mind the question or questions in which he was greatest, and with which his name will be best remembered. I confess it is no easy task. He was not a specialist in statesmanship. The subjects which he debated covered all the leading issues of the parties and the political policies of his time. He limited himself to no one topic and was confined to no single range of national legislation. His thoroughness upon every question he touched was marked and habitual. The Congressional debates show him prominent in discussion of the military affairs of the Government in time of war, when mighty armies were to be mustered and the means provided for their maintenance; the emancipation of the slave, and the problem of his future; reconstruction of the seceding States; the amendments to the Constitution giving suffrage to the newly enfranchised race; the tariff; refunding of the national debt; general education; the resumption of specie payment; silver coinage; the civil service; the independence of the several branches of the Federal Government.

He brought to this wide range of subjects vast learning and comprehensive judgment. He enlightened and strengthened every cause he advocated. Great in dealing with them all, dull and common-place in none, but to me he was the strongest, broadest, and bravest when he spoke for honest money, the fulfillment of the nation's promises, the resumption of specie payments, and the maintenance of the public faith. He contributed his share, in full measure, to secure national honesty and preserve inviolate our national honor. None did more, few, if any, so much to bring the Government back to a sound, stable, and constitutional money. He was a very giant in those memorable struggles, and it required upon his part the exercise of the highest courage. A considerable element of his party was against him, notably in his own State and some parts of his Congressional district. The mad passion of inflation and irredeemable currency was sweeping through the West, with the greatest fury in his own State. He was assailed for his convictions, and was threatened with defeat. He was the special target for the hate and prejudice of those who stood against the honest fulfillment of national obligations. In a letter to a friend on New Year's eve, 1867–'68, he wrote:

I have just returned from a tedious trip to Ashtabula, where I made a two-hour speech upon finance, and when I came home, came through a storm of paper-money denunciation in Cleveland, only to find on my arrival here a sixteen-page letter, full of alarm and prophecy of my political ruin for my opinions on the currency.

To the same friend he wrote in 1878:

On the whole it is probable I will stand again for the House. I am not sure, however, but the nineteenth district will go back upon me upon the silver question. If they do, I shall count it an honorable discharge.

These and more of the same tenor, which I might produce from his correspondence, show the extreme peril attending his position upon the currency and silver questions, but he never flinched, he never wavered; he faced all the dangers, assumed all the risks, voting and speaking for what he believed would secure the highest good. He stood at the forefront, with the waves of an adverse popular sentiment beating against him, threatening his political ruin, fearlessly contending for sound principles of finance against public clamor and a time-serving policy. To me his greatest effort was made on this floor in the Forty-fifth Congress, from his old seat yonder near the center aisle. He was at his best. He rose to the highest requirements of the subject and the occasion. His mind and soul were absorbed with his topic. He felt the full responsibility of his position and the necessity of averting a policy (the abandonment of specie resumption) which he believed would be disastrous to the highest interests of the country. Unfriendly criticism seemed only to give him breadth of contemplation and boldness and force of utterance.

Those of us who were so fortunate as to hear him can not efface the recollection of his matchless effort. Both sides of this Chamber were eager listeners, and crowded galleries bent to catch every word, and all were sensibly moved by his forceful logic and impassioned eloquence. He at once stepped to the front without rival or contestant, secure in the place he had fairly earned. The press and the people received the address with warm approval, and his rank before the country was fixed as a strong, faithful, and fearless leader. No one thing he had ever done contributed so much to his subsequent elevation; no act of his life required higher courage; none displayed greater power; none realized to him larger honors; none brought him higher praise.

Something of his real character and high aims as a legislator and public servant is disclosed in his private correspondence, from which I quote a single sentence:

> You know that I have always said that my whole public life was an experiment to determine whether an intelligent people would sustain a man in acting sensibly on each proposition that arose, and in doing nothing for mere show or demigogical effect. I do not now remember that I ever cast a vote of that latter sort.

His experiment, although a perilous one and fraught with extreme danger, was yet successful, and is a high tribute not to him alone but to the justice and intelligence of the old Western Reserve district and the whole American people. He was sustained, triumphantly sustained, over and over again by his immediate constituency. His State sustained him and at last a nation of fifty millions of people rewarded his courage and consistency with the highest honors it could bestow.

Although elected, General Garfield never took his seat in the Senate of the United States. His legislative career ended here, where it had practically begun eighteen years before. His nomination for the Presidency occurred soon after the Legislature of Ohio had chosen him Senator, and came to him as did all of his honors, because deserved. Although unsought, no mere chance brought him this rare distinction. His solid reputation rendered it not improbable at any time. He had the qualities which attached his great party to him and the equipment which filled the highest measure of public and party requirement. From the stirring scenes at Chicago to the succeeding election he bore himself like a statesman and patriot fit for the highest trust. He advanced in public confidence and whenever he met with or addressed the people he enlarged the circle of his admiring followers and friends. His brief term in the Presidency so tragically ended gave promise of large usefulness to the country in the realization of the true American policy at home and abroad. His death filled the nation with profound and universal sorrow, and all lands and all peoples sympathized in our overshadowing bereavement.

In General Garfield, as in Lincoln and Grant, we find the best representation of the possibilities of American life. Boy and man, he typifies American youth and manhood, and illustrates the beneficence and glory of our free institutions. His early struggles for an education, his self-support, his "lack of means," his youthful yearnings, find a prototype in every village, city, and hamlet of the land. They did not retard his progress, but spurred him on to higher and nobler endeavor. His push and perseverence, his direct and undeviating life purpose, his sturdy integrity, his Christian character were rewarded with large results and exceptional honors; honors not attainable anywhere else, and only to be acquired under the generous and helpful influences of a free government.
